Our Young People.

THE CAT'S EXPLANATION.

You ask the reason, little friends,
Why cats don't wash their faces
Before they eat as children do,
In all good Christian places.

Well, years ago, a famous cat,
The pangs of hunger feeling,
Had chanced to catch a fine young mouse,
Who said, as he ceased squealing:

"All genteel folks their faces wash,
Before they think of eating!"
And, wishing to be thought well-bred,
Puss heeded his entreating.

But when she raised her paw to wash,
Chance for escape affording,
The sly young mouse then said good-bye,
Without respect to wording.

A feline council met that day,
And passed in solemn meeting
A law forbidding any cat
To wash till after eating.

Something for Boys.

A few weeks since I saw a touching and beautiful sight. Driving through a rugged part of the country, my attention was directed to an elderly lady trying to pick her way over the hillside. She came very slowly and carefully. The hill was quite steep, and I was pitying her and thinking if it would not be well to offer my services, when I heard a whistling boy coming up behind the carriage. He bounded past and running up the hill put his arms around the lady and steadied her steps, saying pleasant words, I know, for the face encased in the warm hood looked beaming and bright with happiness. As we passed I heard her say these words, "It is so nice to have a boy to come and help a mother down the hill." They passed on, and went into a farm house at the foot of the hill; I knew they were mother and son. There was a sermon in those few words, I thought. I wish every boy could have heard them.

You boys, all of you, are here to help mother down the hill of life. You don't all do it though, more's the pity. Some of you make it harder for her. You do things that trouble her, she is anxious about you, and then has to pick her way over places a thousand times rougher than walking down a steep hill. Perhaps you are getting into bad habits, and will not obey her counsel. Her poor heart is bruised and torn by your conduct. She knows what the result of evil doings are; that if a boy begins habits that he only considers light as cobwebs in his youth, by and by they may become iron chains about him, and when he is a man he will be a slave to them.

Now, boys, if you would help the dear mother down the hill of life, and make the path smooth for her, do the things she wishes you to do. And if you are all right as regards bad habits, perhaps you are not as thoughtful of the "little things" that make up life as you might be. Be as polite in waiting upon your mother as you are in waiting upon other boys' mothers. Don't speak in rough tones to her. Be always gentle when you speak to her, and careful to remember what she wishes you to be particular to at different times and in different places.

"It's so nice to have a boy help a mother down the hill." Yes, when weary and worn with life's hard work, and age begins to come, it is a great satisfaction and source of gratitude to know that a strong, upright boy is coming up to help mother down.

And you boys who have gone from home, although you can not literally put your arm around mother and steady her steps, yet you can write her good, long letters, and tell her you wish you were in the old home again, so you could hug and kiss her as you did when you were a little fellow, and loved to climb up in her lap. One of the greatest blessings in the world is that of having a praying mother. Make yourselves worthy of the good mothers God has given you, and take your mother's God for your God in the days of your youth.—New York Examiner.

Sisters' Duties to Brothers.—Another ruin women alone can rebuild, is the carelessness with which brothers are treated. Some sisters forget that the first, and often most enduring impressions men receive of the sex, come through their sisters' actions. Is the girl a vain, pretty, selfish being, never considering the brother's needs? Is it any wonder if the brother thinks all girls are like his sister? Sisters should seek to be the friends of their brothers. Their gentle virtuous conduct may do much to create a right tone in the brother's mind, and will inevitably refine and help him. You, dear girls, can, and you are doing very much in shaping a young man's habits. If the sister shares his youthful troubles, advises him in difficulties, makes his home attractive, refuses to listen or to mix in any wild conversation, seeks to lead him into a right conception of manhood's privileges, in short, becomes a loving companion, then I am sure that many a youth who now sees in girls only vain, giddy creatures, will have that exalted view of womanhood which will be a safeguard in the days to come. Try to be the angel of the home to the brother. If you have failed here, begin to build this very day. God will give you strength.—Friendly Words to Young Women.

When Do Babies Become Intelligible?—The Listener may mention the case of a fond mother of his acquaintance who has a remarkable baby who, the mother insists, says "Mamma's little girl" so distinctly that anybody in the world could make it out. And this is the way exactly that the baby pronounces it:

"Lubble, lubble, lubble!"

This is not nearly such plain English as a friend of the Listener's, now a man, and an honest and noble one, who, when he was two years old, mystified the members of the family by calling out in the imperative mood:

"Bixit, baxit, cloxit!"

All gathered round and tried hard to make out what the youngster meant. But the most definite statement that they could get out of him was, "Bixit, baxit, cloxit!" At last, by dint of a good deal of pantomine, the child got them into the pantry and indicated a particular place in it, and then his remark translated itself to them. What he meant to say was, "I want a biscuit, in the basket, in the closet!"—Boston Transcript.

Salutations among Savages.—You would scarcely think it etiquette, on meeting a friend, to scratch your ear or to put out your tongue. Yet there are lands where these extraordinary forms of salutation are used.

Prostration is one of the oldest modes of salutation. It survives only among the least progressive people of Asia. Other forms have taken its place, even among the neighboring Tartars and the conservative Thibetans. The Tartars scratch their ears, and the Thibetans put out their tongues. In giving an account of his interview with the chief of the police in Thibet, M. Huc, the adventurous missionary, says; "After politely putting out our tongues, we withdrew." It is to be remarked that scarcely any savage ceremonial of this kind permits personal contact. It may be that mutual distrust is the reason for this. As an exception to the rule, there occurs the rubbing of noses among the Maories of New Zealand; but such exceptions are rare.—Exchange.

A Boy's Enemy.—Once upon a time—to tell when and where would be a breach of confidence—a bright-eyed, well-fed, well-housed boy told me that he "believed it was easier for a fellow to really amount to something if he had a rather tough time of it than for us fellows who have everything so outragcously easy right straight along." My boy is not the first one who has found ease and soft-living hard giants to fight; very sleepy, slow giants they are, but hard fellows to kill. Yet does it require very much more grit and grace to fight them than to fight unthrift, ignorance and hideous unromantic poverty?

Household.

Drudgery.

Many a young married woman finds the romance of life fading out as she is confronted day after day with the ever-recurring tasks of daily life. Said such a one the other day:

"I do hate to do the ordinary routine drudgery of housekeeping. I never was systematic. Things get out of order, and there they stay till I can get round to pick them up. It takes so long, especially the dishes. I seem to be doing dishes a good deal of the time; they seem like climbing up a high mountain, the top of which I never reach."

The friend to whom she was talking made this reply:

"I really have learned to enjoy my dishes. I made it a point to have abundance of clean cup towels. I know that artists and musicians obtain their fine effects by tireless attention to details. I take this principle into my every-day life. While I am doing the dishes, I study the best method of doing them; the quickest, the easiest, the most agreeable. Generally I attack the pots and kettles first, and get them all scraped as clean as cold water will do it. While my hands are busy with the routine I have time to think. I plan my other work, think what needs doing most, and what can wait; think up pretty styles for my dresses, think over my Sunday-school lesson, the last new book or magazine I have read, recall my own actions and think how I could have done better. Thus the time passes quickly. If my mind is profitably occupied, it is not spent only in getting my work done.

"You know we have a great many stockings to be mended, and I used to hate to darn stockings, but now while doing that I make a practice of sewing with my open Bible near me. Proverbs is a good book to study when sewing, for there is so little connection between many of the verses. I have learned, while thus quietly repairing stockings and mending, to talk to God as I can talk to no one else. I take all my doubts and fears straight to him. I have found the most disagreeable tasks made really pleasant by trying to see how much I can please him by doing them well."—Rocky Mountain Christian Advocate.

Conversation.—Benjamin Franklin, in his autobiography, lays down a canon of good-breeding in conversation which is worth keeping in mind. He says that he formed the habit of expressing himself "in terms of modest diffidence," never using the words "certainly, undoubtedly, or any others that give an air of positiveness to an opinion," on subjects that may possibly be disputed; saying, rather, "It appears to me," or, "I should think it so," or; "If I am not mistaken." This habit, he said, was of great advantage to him in persuading people to adopt his views, and also helped him to gather much valuable knowledge which otherwise would have been withheld. For, as a rule, people do not care to impart information to one who is firmly intrenched in his own opinions. Young people are very apt to have a positive, dogmatic way of expressing themselves, and should be trained to a moderate, as well as graceful, use of language. The use of slang has a tendency toward the error which Franklin tried to avoid.—Selected.

Wise Unheeding.—It is not only a wise and happy thing to make the best of life, and always look on the bright side, for one's own sake, but it is a blessing to others. Fancy a man forever telling his family how much they cost him! A little sermon on this subject was unconsciously preached by a child one day.

A man met a little fellow on the road carrying a basket of blackberries, and said to him: "Sammy, where did you get such nice berries?"

"Over there, sir, in the briers."

"Won't your mother be glad to see you come home with a basketful of such nice ripe fruit?"

"Yes, sir," said Sammy; "she always seems glad when I hold up the berries, and I don't tell her anything about the briers in my feet."

The man rode on. Sammy's remarks had given him a lesson, and he resolved that henceforth he would try to hold up the berries and say nothing about the briers.—Exchange.

Scientific.

The Birth of an Iceberg.

The dynamical law by which the glaciers abutting on the sea generate their bergs is still somewhat vague. In earlier days it was held that the glacial tongue broke off by its own weight. To this has succeeded the following explanation, perhaps more popularly than scientifically accented: Moving down the fiords to the ocean, the glacier's front enters the waves, at first ploughing up the sea-bottom into a deep furrow. But as the ice prow pushes out over the sloping ocean floor, the weight resting upon the bottom steadily diminishes. The floating power of the water tends constantly to lift the ice, which is held down by the rigidity of the glacial sheet below its normal sea line. Moving on still, the glacier's front reaches the point in deeper waters where it is lifted from the bottom altogether. Still it remains unbroken, the strength of the sheet, hundreds of feet in thickness, holding it. But as it proceeds, the awful leverage on the unsupported tongue waxes. It is like the van of an army drawn farther and farther away from its main body, and encountered increasing attacks of the foe. Each surge of the tide, every onset of storm, racks its structure. At last comes the point where the hardly sustained equilibrium of forces ends, and the glacial tip breaks away into floating berg. Finally we have a third and more recent hypothesis based on the differential movement of the upper and lower parts of the glacier. The latest theory asserts that the glacial front thrust over from above by the swifter descent of its upper portion—a movement which may be roughly likened to the breaking comb of a sea wave sweeping to the shore.

But whatever the specific direction of the force which expels the berg from the glacier, the grandeur of the phenomena which often attend it is without question. Constantly the brow of the glacier over the sea is shaking off with sharp explosions smaller masses of ice, which drop to the water in cloudlets of spray. Suddenly there comes a set of louder and deeper blasts that blend into a subterranean roar. A great section of the fissured front of the glacier bends, with water-falls pouring from its sides, and obscured in clouds of vapor from the cold surfaces newly exposed to the air. As these clear away, the broken-off glacial tongue surges down, forcing up a wave of water dangerous to near vessels, to boats or men at the water's edge. Up and down the new-born berg sways, moving, meanwhile, slowly away from the glacier, and out to sea. It has been born amid the travail of the icy elements to begin its life journey, that is to be long or short, according to its own size and the places to which the currents of air and water are to bear it.—Harper's Weekly.

The scientific significance of hunger is thus touched upon by Mr. Charles Ricket, a French scientist, who says: "What takes place in an animal deprived of food may be explained by recurrence to the comparison between the animal and the machine, which, though very old and commonplace, is still exact and almost inevitable. In the machine, the burning of carbon gives rise to heat and force; animals also, burning carbon, develop heat and force. The same is true of plants, for they likewise disengage heat and force; only the plant disengages very little, and the animal much of them. While the plant is stationary, fixed to the ground, the animal is forced to move to find food. We might, indeed, say that all its wonderfully complicated organism is in substance only an apparatus attached to the stomach. The lower animals are hardly anything else than a stomach adapted to motion; and the animal is improved as its means of seeking food everywhere and at a distance are perfected. The animal goes out in search of food because it feels a want—hunger. Nature, in fact, distrusts the intelligence of her children, and for that reason has given to all living beings instincts and wants, and has armed them all, without exception, with the sensation of hunger, to provoke them to seek nourishment. Without the irresistible feeling no being could live."

Marriages.

STOETZNER—SCOTT.—At the residence of the bride's brother, in Amite City, La., July 11, 1890, by Rev. Frank M. Keen, Mr. G. J. Stoetzner, of Springfield, La., to Miss Rebecca Scott.

PAIN—JACKSON.—At the residence of the bride's father, in East Baton Rouge parish, on July 13, 1890, by Rev. Wiley Brown, Mr. John T. Pain and Miss Hester A. Jackson.

Obituaries.

Obituaries of less than thirty-five lines of six words each, will be published free of charge. For all over thirty-five lines, five cents for each additional line will be charged, and the money must invariably accompany the manuscript. When parties desire extra copies of the ADVOCATE containing the obituaries of their friends, they must send with the order the sum of five cents for each extra copy ordered.

WITTY—Capt. PINKNEY D. WITTY was born in old Choctaw county, now Montgomery county, Miss., June 28, 1837. He grew up to manhood through the ordinary struggles of life. By the exercise of his own muscle, and being possessed with a keen foresight and an economical spirit, he began to make money rapidly.

In 1858 he was married to Miss Mary C. Morrow, and three children came to bless this marriage. When the Civil War came, Capt. Witty enlisted in behalf of his country, and was soon promoted to a position of honor and trust. It was either in 1863 or '65 he joined the Methodist Church at Salem, or what is now the Winona circuit. He was not as prominent a church member as he ought to have been; as I have often told him that a man with his push and energy could do a great deal more than he was doing for the cause of the Master. He was a loyal Methodist; he was proud of her history; he rejoiced in her prosperity. His first wife died some years ago, and in May, 1884, he was married to Miss Julia Yongue, who, with three small children, is left to mourn his death.

On Sunday morning, July 6, 1890, just as the Sunday-school bells were calling the children to the house of God, the spirit of Capt. Witty took its everlasting flight to the spirit-world. May God sustain the afflicted ones! A very large number of people were present at his funeral.

T. W. LEWIS.

PASSONS—ANDREW J. PASSONS was born in White county, Tenn., January 5, 1816, and died in Choctaw county, Miss., May 17, 1890. He was married to Miss Sallie Woodward, October, 1837. She died August 22, 1873. He married his second wife, Miss M. A. Love, December 30, 1878. He filled civil offices in Choctaw county and Winston for thirty-five years, and did it very acceptably. He was a Mason, and ever adorned the order and cherished its principles.

Bro. Passons was for many years a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and at the time of his death held the offices of steward and trustee for Salem Society. He attended upon the ordinances of the church, and was liberal in his support of its institutions, for one of his means. That his whole Christian life was one of unselfish sacrifice, is the just verdict of a people who recognize that in his death they suffered great loss.

Bro. Passons was true to his convictions. He was not "loud in his profession," but kept himself unspotted from the world. Having "fought a good fight, and kept the faith," he met death without fear. Peacefully he went down the dark valley, and then fell asleep with his face resting on his hand, like a tired child when the day is done. W. A. DOLLAR.

MARSHALL—CAROLINE C. MARSHALL, wife of Benj. T. Marshall, was born in North Carolina, March 15, 1814. She was converted in 1839, and was with her husband baptized and received into the Methodist Episcopal Church. She was the mother of eleven children. Ten of these she raised to be grown; three have gone to the better land, we trust; and eight are still this side of the river of death. May they seek a home with their mother!

Sister Marshall was a model wife and mother, a true Christian. She died as she lived. "God's will be done," she said. She said to her husband: "Don't weep for me. God has been good to us. He has let us live together a long time. We must part now."

She fell on sleep, June 15, 1890, at the residence of John Flowers, Enoree, Miss., while on a visit to see her daughter. May God bless Uncle Ben (as we called him), and may he have a happy evening, a bright setting and an abundant entrance into the city of God! One by one God gathers his children home. D. L. COGDELL.

ATKINSON—"Whom God loves die young." Death has reached forth its broad wings to the happy home of Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Atkinson, and taken away the sweet and innocent infant, JESSE LEA. He was the only child, born June 3, 1887, and retired from this life May 2, 1888, to seek the companionship of the beautiful angels in that lovely home which God has prepared for those who do his will. The little bud of promise has been snatched from its bower and borne away to the beautiful mansion of eternal glory, where it will grow in a more beautiful clime. None, surely, but those who knew him could realize the affection and love he extended to his little companions and the attachments for his father and mother. Grieve not, dear ones, for Christ has said: "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for such is the kingdom of Heaven." A. B. MAYBIN.

BARR—Died at Anding, Yazoo county, Miss., on Saturday evening, June 7, of typhoid fever, Mrs. MINNIE A. BARR, the precious wife of Bro. Samuel Barr, a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and loved by all who knew her. Thus the Father calls his children home. Sister Barr was only nineteen years old. Her friends mourn that her young and beautiful life is over here; her young husband is heart-broken, but he, too, is a Christian, and knows the Christian's hope. J. R. CROOM.

GANNON—At Covington, La., Tuesday, July 15, 1890, at two o'clock A. M., WILLIAM WALLACE, only son of William and Kate Gannon, aged twenty years seven months and twenty-one days; a native of Union Settlement, Plaquemine parish, La.

Bro. Gannon came to Covington in the early part of June, seeking health; but, alas! in vain. For twelve years the dread disease had been preying upon him, and he knew his sufferings would soon end. But death had no terrors for him, for he knew in whom he believed. He told his father where he wished to be buried, and said his trust was in the Lord. After being baptized in the faith of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, he kissed his grief-stricken parents good-by; said, "I am happy," and, with eyes raised to God, the death-struggle came and his pure spirit was borne on angels' wings to the home of eternal rest, where he waits for the coming of father and mother. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord!"

L. W. WOOD.

LIGHTSEY—Mrs. D. C. LIGHTSEY, daughter of Mr. R. R. Abney and Mrs. M. A. Abney, was born in Hinds county, Miss., July 24, 1832, and departed this life, June 5, 1890, aged fifty-seven years, ten months and twelve days.

Sister Lightsey joined the Methodist Church when young, and was an obedient member. She loved the Methodist Church, and was always ready to do anything she could to advance the cause of Christ. She contributed liberally to the cause of missions. She was capable of giving good advice, and could always speak a word of comfort to the bereaved. She has left a husband and one daughter to mourn their loss. She has also left many friends who will miss her. May God bless the bereaved ones that are left behind, and grant them the Spirit to comfort them! I doubt not but that while I write she is in heaven. B. H. RAWLS, P. C.

HELVESTION—RUBY EDNA, infant daughter of William and Ardell Helvestion, was born December 4, 1889, and died April 30, 1890. Her life was short—so short, and filled with suffering. But now her sufferings are past, and she is in heaven with Jesus. Loved ones, be patient and faithful and meet her on the "other shore."

PASTOR.

People Who Are Not Soul-Winners.

The husband who blows up his wife before the children because she happens to get too much saleratus in the biscuit.

The mother who can talk by the hour about the dresses and bonnets of her neighbors, but can't say a word to her little ones about the love of Christ.

The Sunday-school teacher who don't know enough about the lesson to ask questions without reading them from the lesson paper.

The woman who talks about heaven in church, and about her neighbors on the street.

The young lady who hands wine to callers.

The sectarian who never has a good word for any other denomination.

The man who rings a bell every time he puts a dime in the contribution box.

The man who never goes near the church on lodge night.

The man who blows a tin horn and shouts himself hoarse during a campaign, but is down on anything like excitement in religion.

The woman who knows in her heart that she is wrong, but is too proud to own up to it.—Ram's Horn.

THE NEWSPAPER OF THE FUTURE.—The newspaper of the future will rid itself of the smartness and flippancy with which the newspaper of the present is too often disfigured. Its writers will be selected for their learning, careful literary training, and fairness of judgment. Verbosity is one of the most dreaded terrors of the average newspaper reader. He is likely to think that an erudite, thoroughly informed writer must needs be dull and prosy. Let us admit that we can not possibly endure long, dull editorial articles, and that we will not have a colorless, dry statement of facts in the news columns of the journal of our choice. But is it asking too much of human nature—newspaper human nature—that the paper shall be crisp and bright without malice, learned and intelligent without dullness? No sensible person expects that political parties are to be disbanded or hooted out of existence. The parties and the newspapers will remain for many a century to come. But men will learn that it pays to be fair and honest in politics as in diplomacy, and in many another field of human activity in which lying was once thought to be part of the best equipment. Then readers, tired of the fruitless hunt for truth and fairness in the columns of the political newspaper, will be gratified with an answer to their demand for a change to something better. Who will be the pioneer in the new field?—Noah Brooks, in Forum.

Recollection is the life of religion. The Christian wants to know no new thing, but to have his heart elevated more above the world, by secluding himself from it as much as his duties will allow, that religion may effect its great end, by bringing its sublime hopes and prospects into more steady action on the mind.—Cecil.

A man who has practiced medicine for 40 years ought to know salt from sugar; read what he says:

TOLEDO, O. Jan. 10, 1887.

Messrs. F. J. Cheney & Co.—

Gentlemen: I have been in the general practice of medicine for most 40 years, and would say that in all my practice and experience have never seen a preparation that I could prescribe with as much confidence of success as I can Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by you. Have prescribed it a great many times and its effect is wonderful, and would say in conclusion that I have yet to find a case of Catarrh that it would not cure, if they would take it according to directions. Yours truly,

L. L. GORSUCH, M. D.,
Office, 215 Summit St.

We will give $100 for any case of Catarrh that can not be cured with Hall's Catarrh Cure. Taken internally.

GRANT'S FURNITURE STORE

NEW STORE, AT 114 Camp St. NEW ORLEANS. NEXT DOOR TO ADVOCATE OFFICE.

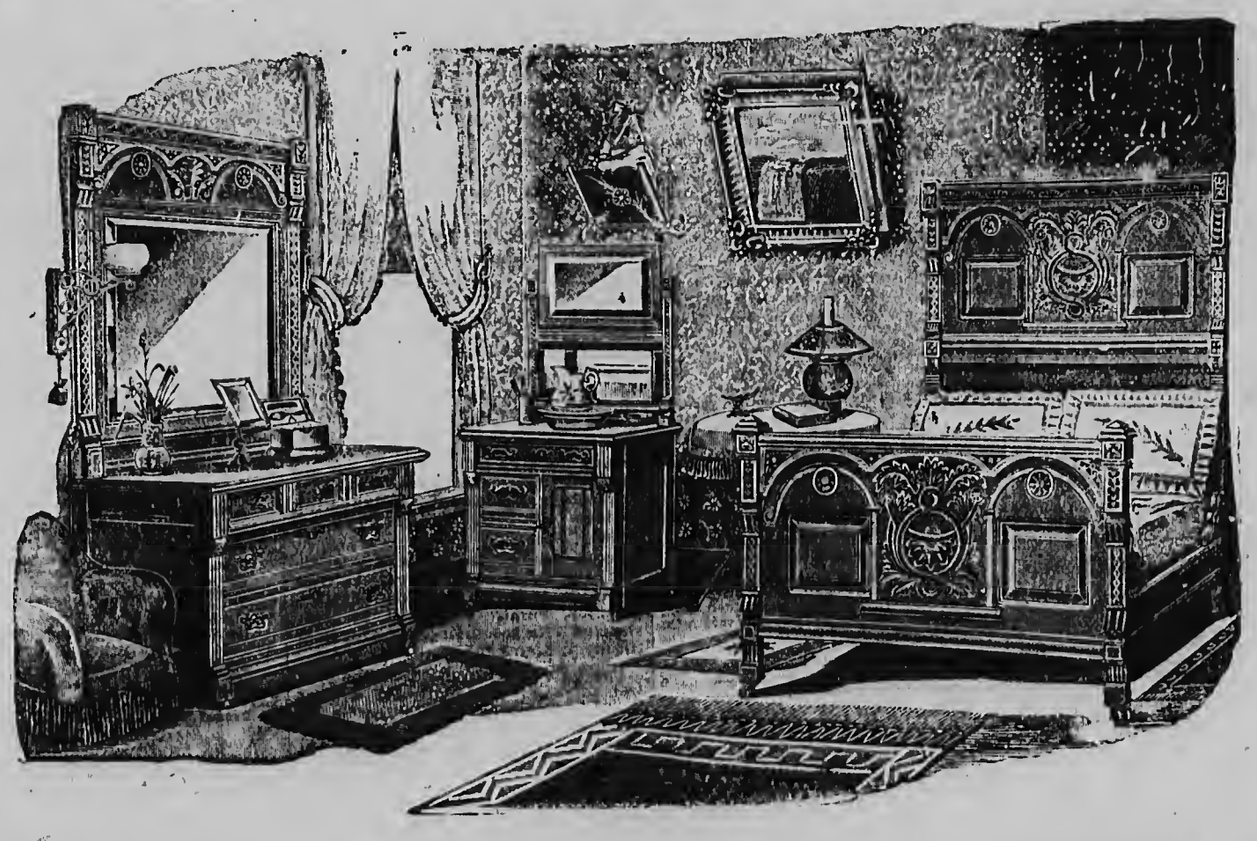
BEAUTIFUL PARLOR GOODS.

I have one entire floor devoted to the display of these goods alone, and have over sixty different varieties to select from. Complete Suits anywhere from $35 to $650, and odd pieces—such as Sofas, Divans, Easy Chairs, Patent Rockers, Window and Reception Chairs—at as low prices in proportion as the Complete Suits. I have these goods in Cherry, Mahogany and Walnut, and can give you your choice of any of the following coverings: Crushed, Embossed, Plain and Silk Plushes, Hair Cloth, Mohair, Raw and Spun Silks, Satins, English Tapestries, French Valours, Petit Point, Brocatelle or Damasks. I make a specialty of these goods, have many of the patterns made specially for my own trade, and can offer a greater variety at lower prices than any other house in the South.

NEW STOCK

In all departments, and every grade of goods, from the cheapest to the most expensive, in endless variety. I have all the latest and most fashionable designs, and, as I have only purchased from factories whose goods I have been selling for the past six years, can and do guarantee every piece of Furniture that leaves my establishment.



LOW PRICES

are the order of the day, and I propose to sell strictly reliable goods at a lower price than has ever before been quoted in the South. My store has long been known as "The Cheapest Furniture House in New Orleans," and this season I intend to add to the reputation it has gained in this respect. I only ask a chance to save you money.

HANDSOME BEDROOM SUITS.

A very extensive assortment of these goods in every style; and whether you wish to pay $40 for a Complete Suit of twelve pieces, or from that price anywhere up to $1,000, I can sell you what you require. I have these goods in Black Walnut, Natural and Dark Cherry, and Natural and Dark Mahogany, or in imitation of any of these woods, and can furnish the very latest, neatest and most artistic designs.

I have also a large and carefully selected stock of Hall, Library, Dining-room and Kitchen Furniture; Reed, Rattan and Wicker Chairs, Rockers, Lounges and Cribs; Brackets, What-nots, Easels, Music Stands and Fancy Top Tables; Carpets, Carpet Strips, Matting, Shades, Curtains, Curtain Poles, and everything necessary to furnish a house completely throughout.

LARGE SALES.

I have a large city trade, and am shipping goods extensively to every Southern State. My country trade has increased very rapidly during the past year, and the facilities which my new store affords me for carrying a larger and better stock will enable me to still further extend it, and to give complete satisfaction to my customers.

ROBERT RANDLE, P. E.

Warm weather often causes extreme tired feeling and debility, and in the weakened condition of the system, diseases arising from impure blood are liable to appear. To gain strength, to overcome disease, and to purify, vitalize, and enrich the blood, take Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Sam Jones Camp Meeting.

The Sam Jones Camp Meeting, two miles north of Olester, on the L., N. O. and T. R. R., will begin August 22, and continue eight days. All ministers invited. Trains stop at the camp ground during the meeting.

W. W. SIMMONS, P. C.

Topisaw Camp Meeting.

The camp meeting at Topisaw Camp Ground, nine miles northeast of McComb City, Miss., will begin on Friday before the second Sunday in August, and will continue eight or ten days.

All ministers of the gospel are cordially invited to attend, and will be provided for. Bro. Adcock will meet ministers at the depot in McComb City, and convey them in nice, comfortable hacks to and from the camp grounds.

M. R. MCEWEN, Sec.

China Grove Camp Meeting.

The camp meeting at China Grove, Pike county, Miss, will commence the Friday before the fourth Sunday in August (22nd). Preachers and people are cordially invited to attend.

J. M. PUGH, Pastor.

We will mail free, on receipt of two cents in stamps, a sample box of Dr. Davis' Liver Pills. They will cure costiveness, billiousness, dyspepsia, indigestion, piles, and all disorders that arise from a diseased liver and impure blood.

The Clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policyholders.

The Episcopal Diocese, of New York, has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and the Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

Wesleyan Female Institute, Staunton, Va.

We direct attention to the advertisement of this popular College. It is located in one of the healthiest climates in the world. It presents attractions rarely equaled, especially in music, art and ornamental branches. Its buildings are home-like, grounds attractive, scenery grand. This school enjoys a national reputation and is attended by pupils from nineteen States. To all pupils it is a refined and happy home—teaching sound learning, graceful accomplishments and refined manners. Its graduates are its brightest ornaments, and are sought far and wide as teachers. It is endorsed by pupils and patrons in twenty States. For Catalogue, write to Rev. Dr. Wm. A. Harris, Staunton, Virginia.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

It is said that the strained relations between Secretary Blaine and President Harrison are rapidly reaching a crisis, and that Blaine's resignation of his position in the Cabinet is imminent.

Some wonderful cures are said to have been wrought recently at the beautiful shrine of St. Anne de Beaupre, at Quebec, and the Catholics of Connecticut are arranging a pilgrimage to the ancient city on July 21. Every parish in Connecticut is invited, and it is likely that an imposing body of religious pilgrims will start northward by train on the date noted.

The Republicans are alarmed at the idea that the East and New England will show a falling off under the census and that there will be large gains in certain of the Southern States, as Virginia, Tennessee, Texas, Arkansas, Alabama and Missouri, and their leaders are discussing the question of reapportionment. The main increase in the Northern and Middle States is in the States which are mostly Democratic and the Republican gains in the West will scarcely offset the increase in Democratic States.

The Cotton Exchange, in Shreveport, La., organized fifteen years ago, has been dissolved and a committee appointed to liquidate its affairs. The membership of this commercial organization, which has been a strong factor in forwarding the interests of this city, will be merged in the Board of Trade.

Articles of incorporation of a ten-million-dollar coal and iron company were filed in the office of the secretary of State, at Montgomery, Ala., on July 18. Three large companies have been consolidated into one, and it is the largest of the sort in the State.

An agreement has been arrived at between the Arapahoe and Cherokee commission. The Indians agreed to the terms proposed by the commission, to-wit: They are to hold land in severalty, 160 acres to each man, woman and child, and receive $1,500,000, $500,000 in cash and $1,000,000 to be left with the government, drawing five per cent. interest. The treaty conveys over 4,000,000 acres of land to the government, for which the settlers will have to pay $1 25 per acre when they come to pay up their claim.

Crossed telegraph wires in New York City, on July 18, caused a great fire in the heart of the city. The Western Union Building was gutted by the flames. Instruments and wires were ruined and valuable records were destroyed. It is estimated that the losses to the Western Union Telegraph Company by the fire in their building at 195 Broadway is about $100,000. There was no insurance on any of the property. The greater loss in the sudden interruption of the business can not be estimated. The Associated Press, whose rooms were within the building, lost its instruments, typewriters, furniture and all of its books, papers and records, dating from 1845, and a valuable reference library. This loss is irreparable.

An Anti-Lottery League was organized in Natchitoches, La., on July 20.

A meeting, under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. and the Chicago Christian Union, was held in Chicago on July 20, and resolutions were adopted demanding the closing of the World's Fair on Sunday.

Mayor Shakspeare and councilmen of this city were in Chicago on July 22, studying the belt railroad system. On July 21, they called on the mayor of Chicago and visited the town of Pullman.

FOREIGN.

Hostilities between the republics of Salvador and Guatemala have opened. On July 17 the Guatemalan forces invaded Salvadoran territory, and were routed.

Cholera is prevailing in Kownow, Russia, and is spreading. Many fatal cases of the disease are reported.

Thunderstorms and rains in the southern and midland counties of England have had a destructive effect upon the crops.

Salvador is in a state of anarchy. Official advices to the Guatemalan legation in the City of Mexico from the department of foreign affairs of Guatemala, state that assassinations have occurred at San Miguel within the past few days. These murders are not among the high political class, but are confined to the class known as the intermediate department. Neighboring nations have been besought to restore order.

Spain has decided to build a whole flotilla of submarine war vessels, after the model successfully produced by the inventor, Perat. Each will be constructed with accommodations for from twenty to fifty men.

Prof. Virchow, replying to the protest of a French physician against Frenchmen taking part in the Berlin Medical Congress, criticises it as a morbid condition, of which a cruel experience appears not to have cured France. Medical men, he says, ought to be animated by sentiments of mutual esteem.

Count von Schouvaloff, the Russian ambassador to Berlin, who is now in St. Petersburg, has sent Chancellor von Caprivi a formal intimation that the Czar will receive Emperor William on August 10. The great manœuvers, to which Emperor William has been invited, will begin on August 7, and last for two weeks.

The latest clamorers among those connected with the government service for special concessions are the Wesleyans in the British navy. Of late years, it has happened that a large proportion of the men recruited for the navy were of the Methodist faith, when they professed any religious faith at all, and this element has several times recently murmured against the administrations of the chaplains of the Church of England, to which the rules of the service subject them. This discontent has finally taken definite shape and the managers recognized the readers who are advocates for denominational services, which, no doubt, they will ultimately get.

A fact that all men with gray and many-shaded whiskers should know, that Buckingham's Dye always colors an even brown or black at will.

Monteagle Assembly and Summer Schools.

EIGHTH ANNUAL SESSION, JULY 1 to AUGUST 25, 1890.

MONTEAGLE, TENN., widely known as the "Southern Chautauqua," is on a mountain plateau or spur of the lower Cumberlands, reached by mountain railway, one hour from Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis R. R. at Cowan, Tenn.

Rising 2,000 feet above the sea level, dry, pure air, no malaria, no mosquitos, magnificent scenery and abundance of pure spring water, it is the great natural sanitarium of the Southwest.

With 100 acres of picturesque, wooded heights enclosed; with improved water-works, sewerage, daily mails, telegraph, public buildings, and near 100 cottages; with the annual Assembly Platform and Summer Schools, affording a continual feast, it is a quiet "lodge in the wilderness," having all the world within call.

Parties desiring cottages for the summer should make early application.

For full particulars as to rates, advantages, etc., or any information desired, address,

A SERMON IN RHYME.

BY D. W. HOYT, D. D.

If you have a friend worth loving,
Love him. Yes, and let him know
That you love him, ere life's evening
Tinge his brow with sunset glow.
Why should good words ne'er be said
Of a friend till he is dead?

If you hear a song that thrills you,
Sung by any child of song,
Praise it. Do not let the singer
Wait deserved praises long.
Why should one who thrills your heart
Lack the joy you may impart?

If you hear a prayer that moves you,
By its humble, pleading tone,
Join it. Do not let the seeker
Bow before his God alone.
Why should not your brother share
The strength of "two or three" in prayer?

If you see the hot tears falling
From a brother's weeping eyes,
Share them, and by kindly sharing
Own your kinship with the skies.
Why should any one be glad
When a brother's heart is sad?

If a silvery laugh goes rippling
Through the sunshine on his face,
Share it. 'Tis the wise man's saying—
For both grief and joy a place.
There's health and goodness in the mirth
In which an honest laugh has birth.

If your work is made more easy
By a friendly, helping hand,
Say so. Speak out brave and truly,
Ere the darkness veil the land.
Should a brother-workman dear
Falter for a word of cheer?

Scatter thus your seeds of kindness,
All enriching as you go;
Leave them. Trust the Harvest Giver,
He will make each seed to grow,
So, until its happy end,
Your life shall never lack a friend.

Letter No. 3.

SUNDAY IN NEW YORK—DR. LYMAN ABBOTT—A RISING BAPTIST PREACHER—SALVATION ARMY—MONEY QUESTION—DEATH OF THE INNOCENTS—RIVERSIDE PARK—CENTRAL PARK.

The Sabbath is better observed here in many respects than it is in New Orleans. There are more outward decencies, although it is far from being what it should. On side streets I saw many store doors open, and from my lofty seat on the elevated railway, as I went to church, I looked in through third and fourth-story windows upon scores and hundreds of operatives hard at work in shirt-making and tailoring establishments. My heart bled for them as I watched their stooping forms and pale faces.

I went over to Brooklyn to hear Dr. Talmage, but learned that he was absent on his summer vacation. What a kind congregation he has!—a trip to the Holy Land, and then a vacation granted upon the top of that.

DR. LYMAN ABBOTT.

From the deserted preaching-place of Dr. Talmage we walked down to Plymouth Tabernacle, Dr. Beecher's famous church. I discovered, to my surprise, that the auditorium was very little larger than my own at the Carondelet Street Church in New Orleans. There were cane seats attached to the end of each pew that, let down, would have filled the aisles and increased by several hundred the seating capacity of the building; but they were not in use. The chair wings were all folded neatly against the sides of the pews awaiting the step and voice of another pulpit giant before spreading themselves once more upon the air. The pulpit is made of olive wood brought from Palestine. The organ nearly touches the ceiling. The choir was composed of forty voices. Dr. Abbott and the assistant, at half-past ten, stepped upon the platform and confronted a four-fifths audience. The assistant pastor prayed the opening prayer in the never-to-be-forgotten theological seminary accent. He asked the Divine Being to awaken the purity and holiness that lay dormant within us all!

Dr. Abbott is a man of about sixty years, slender, medium height, grizzled beard, narrow face and high forehead, made higher by a prairie of baldness that comes down to meet the open field of forehead. His text was from the Revised Version—"In his temple doth everyone say glory." He said that Nature was the temple referred to here. The discourse treated of Nature, and was a preparation of the congregation for the summer vacation. Dr. Abbott impresses you agreeably, but not overwhelmingly; he was scholarly, but not eloquent, while his pulpit movements are angular—not to say, stiff. He labors also under this disadvantage; that the very memory of his illustrious predecessor fills the building, and his constantly, by swift mental comparisons, dwarfs the present incumbent. He made a number of capital points. Said there were two ways of approaching Nature; one with the critical, analytical eye, and the other in which the form and life of the great Father was sought after. When, in summing up this thought, he said that when a man pressed his wife to his heart, that at such a time he never thought of the bivalvular action of the heart or circulation of the blood, I saw that he had his audience.

A RISING BAPTIST PREACHER.

In the evening I waited on the ministrations of a young Baptist minister. Learning that he had been only a short time in the City of New York, and that in that time he had so increased the attendance upon his rather small church that they were compelled to move to a large Y. M. C. A. Hall, in order to accommodate the rapidly growing congregation, I went to hear him that I might discover the secret of his power. Sure enough, he had an audience that many much more prominent ministers in the great metropolis utterly fail to gather. Fifteen hundred people formed the assembly that evening. The preacher, who, by the by, is the brother-in-law of Dr. Bussey, of New Orleans, is young, tall, dark, thin, and will, I fear, be in his grave in the next two years. The sermon was mainly an apology for taking a summer vacation; said topic not being without its interest to one Jonah fleeing from pastoral duty, who sat unknown before him. When he defined to the audience the multifarious labors of a preacher, he opened certainly some of their eyes. He mentioned, humorously, a special department of labor described by the term Special Requests, well known to every minister. A few days before he had been written to from the West to ship a gentleman a hound by express; and a few days before that came from a distant State a request to please hunt up a stray lunatic on the streets of New York. The writer listened with a wondrous fellow-feeling, and know that he could tell things of a certain nature on that line that would in no wise lower the interest, but rather deepen the surprise of the hour. The young preacher's power I soon discovered to be his deep love and sympathy for man, his burning earnestness, and the fact that he held up before the people a living Christ.

SALVATION ARMY.

Monday night I visited one of the two places of worship of the Salvation Army. It was a rough wooden structure, appearing, as they doubtless intended that it should, like a barracks. A detachment of ten occupied the platform, composed of two women, six men, a boy and a negro mulatto. The orchestra, so to speak, was made up of a piano, bass-drum, two tambourines, and clapping of hands together with the singing of the detachment. The meeting was presided over and led by a sweet-faced, black-eyed young woman who wore a black dress and a dark straw Quaker bonnet, over the top of which and coming down the sides was a broad red ribbon. She was a woman of manifest piety, showed marks of a fair education, and in the conduct of the meeting evinced herself full of resources. The audience was made up of different classes—some being there evidently from curiosity; but under the earnest words of the leader and the martial-like melody of the hymns all were measurably affected. I had little conception until that night of how pleasantly such dissimilar instruments, as a piano, bass-drum and tambourine, could be made to agree.

MONEY QUESTION.

The church money question I find to be universal. Let no heart-sick pastor at home, wrestling with the problem of church finance, feel that his difficulty is peculiar to himself and his people. In the walls of the wealthy Plymouth Tabernacle I heard Dr. Abbott request his deacons to post themselves at the doors, and, basket in hand, to receive the collection that had been overlooked in the regular order of service. Then I heard one of these same deacons say to another, "That is right; let no one escape." As they spoke thus, it seemed to me that I was listening, as in a dream, to the utterances of Methodist stewards. At the Salvation Army Barracks the leader announced a collection, and urged all present to give. Again my foot seemed to press my native heath. Sabbath night the Baptist preacher pressed upon his large audience the necessity of putting certain moneys in certain envelopes, and so doing through the entire summer; that a great strain and pressure of the financial kind was now being experienced by the church. As he said this I immediately felt at home! Nothing that he could have said, even to the calling of my name, could have made me feel so perfectly at ease, and invested my surroundings with such a delightfully familiar air.

DEATH OF THE INNOCENTS.

Just now, in this heated spell, disease, like Herod of old, is hewing down the children of the poorer classes from three years old and downward. Three hundred often in a week. One week saw five hundred white ribbons streaming from as many doors. As I sped along the elevated road one evening I saw a mother with her sick baby on the flat roof of a tenement-house in the crowded quarter. There she was, evidently, to give the poor little dying one a breath of fresh, pure air. My heart melted at the sight.

RIVERSIDE PARK.

This park is situated in the northwestern part of the city, upon a high bluff overlooking the Hudson river, and commanding a view, up and down, of that animated stream for many miles. The park is treeless, save where the brow of the hill overlooks the river, but is beautifully swarded, and from its center arises the tomb of Gen. Grant. There the dead warrior lies in state, guarded day and night by two policemen. The whole scene—the tomb remote from habitation of the living and the dead, the solitary coffin visible through the iron grating, the distant ships on the river, and the still more distant line of mountains—formed a picture of loneliness striking to the mind, and ineradicable. Certainly it seems that one of the prices of greatness, or even prominence, in this world is loneliness. The higher men rise the lonelier they become, and the solitariness follows even in death. The question arose in my mind, Was this a great man lying before me? Was this life an accomplishment or an accident?

CENTRAL PARK.

Here, unquestionably, is a rare stretch of physical loveliness. Two miles and a half long, and a half mile wide, with serpentine roads unfolding like silver ribbons through the trees, and with charming paths leading anywhere, everywhere, and suddenly bringing you into unexpected places of beauty, of cavern, glade, or lake side, you are constantly interested and charmed at every step. They have in the center of the park the obelisk brought thither some years ago from Egypt; but to my eye it was as much out of place as the helmet of Richard Cœur de Lion would be on the head of a dry goods clerk.

That which most impressed me was that part of the park which has been trained to look like the forests of nature. Fully two hundred acres is like a sylvan glade or deep tangled wildwood. The eye and heart fairly luxuriates on the scene. I thought, as I looked, that when men desire to give us things worth the seeing and worth the having, they have to go to God's works for a model. They obtained Gothic architecture by studying the splintered summits of the mountains. If they wanted an enduring arch, they fashioned one after the human skull. If they wanted a lighthouse that would withstand all the storms, they took the trunk of a tree for a model. And if they desired to delight the eye with a perfection of physical beauty in our parks, they did it not with avenue and colonnade, but by giving us in confused and yet delightful assemblage of rock, crag, leaping waterfall, glen and dark woods, a perfect representation of the Almighty's works in nature.

B. CARRADINE.

Shanghai, the Jerusalem of China.

Our church papers have told us somewhat of the great Missionary Conference that met in Shanghai, China, May 7–20. Fuller reports will reach us in due time. Our secretaries, it is confidently hoped, will promptly reprint the official report of the proceedings of this great Conference. Print and send at once to every pastor in our church. We want no meagre outline, but a full account.

The evangelization of China is the most stupendous task to which the church ever consecrated itself—if for no other reason because so large a part of the human race is Chinese. This whole nation has been belittled in the minds of unthinking people by the flippant jests of the American press and the unchristian treatment of them by our country. Idle-minded people dismiss the strongest appeals to conscience by a laughing reference to the "heathen Chinee." Christian people can not do this.

These hundreds of millions are our brothers; Christ died for them; on us he lays the responsibility of giving them the gospel. His people—those who believe, love and obey him—are his only representatives in this world. Not yet have we comprehended the wide meaning of the wonderful words in that prayer he offered to his Father as his disciples stood around him in that upper room when the night before he died, they had finished the first communion in the Lord's Supper: "As my Father sent me into the world even so have I also sent you into the world." How do we live out these words? How expound them in deeds? Other exposition is vain.

That Shanghai Conference that met May 7, the day our Conference organized in St. Louis, is, by every token, one of the memorable meetings of this century. No church meeting of our times, as I see it, has meant as much. History will give it rank with apostolic councils. How far-reaching the influence of this meeting will be no human mind can foresee. But this we see—although too close by to see it in true perspective—it was a gathering of God's best men and women for counsel and inspiration—for the laying aside of small differences and the rallying of all upon the great essentials—for the better handling of God's militant church in the broadest, bravest, wisest movement upon heathenism projected in our times. As the men who turned back the Persians at Thermopylæ did not know that only history could tell how much was saved that day, so the five hundred who took counsel and prayer together in Shanghai may not, with even the broad vision that high spiritual life gives to them, comprehend the vastness of the results that must follow that ever-historical meeting in May. This writer does not profess to comprehend it; in a true sense, he is "apprehended of it." Only as "through a glass darkly" does he see what is to be. And that little he "sees by faith"—knowing that he who gave the great commission just before he ascended to heaven was there with them as surely and as really as he was with the hundred and twenty on the day of Pentecost. What followed that day for Europe and America and other lands history tells. Indeed, all the best history of nearly nineteen hundred years had its sources in that large "upper room" in Jerusalem. For the China that is to be Shanghai is Jerusalem.

It was a union meeting; all the aggressive churches—those really doing the Lord's work—were represented in that meeting. Europe and America were there in the persons of their best men and women. They did not meet in the interests of ecclesiasticism, which is of men, but of Christianity, which is of God. They did not meet to strengthen sectarianism, but to develop, increase and cement such oneness of love, purpose and methods as will give solidarity to the Christian movement in this vast and populous empire. They did not chop logic about organic union; they sought spiritual oneness. If the home churches will "sit at their feet" in "meekness"—and meekness means teachableness—from our brothers and sisters in heathen lands we also may learn how to forget incidental differences in essential agreements. Organic unions are of small consequence if we have the "unity of the spirit;" organic unions may breed pride and damning ambitions where they do not originate in these vices.

In this great Shanghai meeting, last May, Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Baptists and Methodists met together, not to debate how they might surrender their differences, but how they might co-operate in pushing to its consummation the triumph of a common cause.

It was in the interests of un-organic unions (wise people leave other sorts of union to God and the coming years) that churches most nearly alike sought to get close enough together that they might not hinder, but help one another. In this spirit "the Methodists" sought means to bring about "co-operation" among Methodists. Their simple "plan" is before me as I write. I do not copy it here; it is not for us, the other side of the world, to split hairs with these veterans bearing "the marks of the Lord Jesus." The plan seems wise to me; if it did not, I should doubt my insight. These men and these women are there on the ground; they know more of "the facts" than outside Christendom put together, and they love the cause better than we can. If the "plan" suits them, it is, in my reasoning, the best that can be devised.

That they have the plan for Methodist as well as for general missionary co-operation is the essential thing.

Two private letters are also before me. Some words I quote from each for the sweet odor they give forth—for the bright visions they bring. Here is one from my old college-mate, Young J. Allen, who was chairman of the Conference Committee that agreed on the plan for Methodist co-operation. A few words his people in America will be glad to read. He says:

I add a few words to call your attention to the session of our General Missionary Conference held here May 7–20, both days inclusive. It comprised nearly one-half of all the missionary workers, male and female, in China, i. e., nearly 500, and was every way one of the most notable Conferences ever held in a mission field, as regards attendance, representation and work done. Besides, it was characterized throughout by a spirit of harmony and union perfectly unique and wonderful. Never did grace more abound. Grace presided over us, and the result was a most delightful and profitable session, and everybody separated at its close rejoicing and happy. China will feel the impulse of this Conference from center to circumference, and, if I mistake not, its peaceful lines will go out through all the earth.

My sister, Miss Laura, says:

It was a time of great refreshing to us—all from the presence of God with us. I have never seen any deliberative body upon which the power of the Holy Ghost so manifestly rested from day to day. Only his controlling presence could have given to us such marvelous oneness of heart, amidst much diversity of thought, as made us realize that we were, indeed, children of one Father—"one in him of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named." We feel that the coming of Christ's kingdom in China has been hastened by many years by the coming together before him of his servants.

That Conference cries for help. These workers there—who see the opportunity of the hour—who have done their best and know they can do no more, they beg for reinforcements. They call for a thousand recruits.

Southern Methodism—twelve hundred thousand strong—should not dream of sending less than fifty. Towards every foreign mission field in which our representatives are toiling my heart warms. They all need help; but our oldest mission, our mission in China, where nearly one-fourth of the human race lives and dies in heathen darkness, is relatively the weakest mission we have anywhere in the world. We should send fifty new missionaries within a year to China. We can if we really try.

ATTICUS G. HAYGOOD.

SHEFFIELD, Ala., July 15, 1890.

Why be spiritually poor, when the untold wealth of God lies at our feet, waiting our largest appropriations? O Christian! with eager quest, help yourself to the riches of your Father's fathomless treasures of wisdom, grace, power and love!

Notes from the Canvass.

BY REV. A. F. WATKINS.

Within the last two weeks over $3,000 have been added to our Millsaps College endowment fund. How much of this amount came from your district, brother presiding elder? How much from your charge, brother pastor? How much from your pocket, brother layman?

The widow of a late member of the Mississippi Conference, while sending to the agent two endowment notes for $100, made this touching reference to her sainted husband: "I know he would approve it; and I try as near as I can to do those things that he would think right."

Waynesboro salutes Edwards with $548, and Edwards responds with $544. Enterprise says to Potts' Camp: "How does $620 45 strike you?"—and the latter replies: "It does nearly as well as $631 50."

Why does some wealthy Mississippi Methodist not subscribe $20,000 or $25,000 to endow a chair in Millsaps College? How would this sound: "——— Chair of English," or "——— Chair of Mental and Moral Science"? Let the reader supply the proper name.

Twenty-five hundred dollars to endow a scholarship, or twenty-five thousand dollars to endow a professorship, would be a more appropriate memorial of a departed loved one than the erection of a marble or granite shaft. "More enduring than brass, and higher than the royal summit of the pyramids."

The "Appeal to Methodists," prepared by Drs. Wheat and Black, closes with the following stirring words:

When Lord Nelson was about to engage in battle against the allied fleets, and when the fate of England and, as Lord Macaulay says, the fate of Protestant Christianity hung in suspense, he passed through his ships the thrilling watchword, "England expects every man to do his duty." A crisis equally great is now upon us. Failure now means a golden opportunity gone forever; means incalculable loss to our church for years to come. We must raise the $50,000. We ought to raise three times that sum. Let the cry ring along all the lines of Mississippi Methodism: "The great Head of the church expects every man to do his duty."

A South Mississippi layman, whose endowment subscription was $500, says in a recent letter to the agent: "May the Lord prosper you in this work!" This brother both works and prays. A liberal subscription accentuates a prayer, adds to its fervor, and demonstrates its sincerity. A prayer from one who can not give cheers and blesses; not so a prayer from one who can, but will not.

Mississippi Methodists need:

(1) A revival of educational interest in the pulpit and the pew.

(2) A specific institution that shall be the recipient of the interest thus aroused and the energy thus developed, and,

(3) An institution where tuition will be cheap, and a Christian education offered at a cost that will be within the reach of the poorest boy in the State.

Let Maj. Millsaps' generous offer be the occasion and inspiration of the first, and Millsaps' College will supply the second and third.

The Mississippi Methodist preacher who does not this year preach one or more special sermons on Christian Education will surely be strangely blind to duty and opportunity.

The crop prospect in Mississippi is very fine. The Lord of the harvest is smiling upon his people. The promise of such abundant harvest will surely justify the promise of generous things to the cause of God. Service is a test of loyalty. Let giving be the index of your gratitude, brother.

The best subscription at ——— was from a poor woman. This fact would have made somebody feel ashamed, if it had not been that avarice had put his conscience to sleep.

Every man's own besetting sin is the tempest. You love God; you walk upon the sea; the swellings of this world are under your feet. When your heart fluctuates with the desire of sin, call on the divinity of Christ, that you may conquer that desire.—Anselm.

SUMMER'S EVE

Oh, the joy of well-earned leisure,
When the days seem made for pleasure,
And the peaceful hush of Nature all the weary being fills:
When dear friends go forth together
In the golden August weather,
To the ocean or the moorland, or the everlasting hills.

Some, whose work hath been with rigor,
Gather strength and joy and vigor,
On the breezy mountain summit, free as birds that sing and soar;
Others in the mellow gloaming,
Through the harvest-fields are roaming,
Or rejoicing in the ripple of the salt tide on the shore.

There is merry childish laughter
Where the wavelets flowing after,
Scatter in a thousand sparkles round the feet that dance with glee.
There is silence, deep and tender,
Where, far off, the shadow's splendor
Shines an afterpath of glory on the meadows of the sea.

Sweet to rest, our labor ended,
By such joy and peace attended,
When the summer leans to autumn, and the light is in the West:
All the fever of endeavor
Seems to pass away forever,

Letter from Monteagle.

The Monteagle Assembly increases in interest with each succeeding day. The population now on the grounds numbers over five hundred, with daily accessions. Three-fourths of the cottages are occupied; dining-halls and caterers are doing a good business; family life has begun; the schools have settled down to work, while spectacled professors and ambitious young teachers (students for the nonce) with text and note-book under arm, meet you at every turn, giving a really academic effect to these upper world shades.

There is undoubtedly a tonic quality in the pure water, fresh breezes and cool, restful nights on these mountains which invigorates both body and mind, making intellectual pursuits, under such instructors and in such company, a recreation instead of a labor. Nor is this all. Tired mothers regain their elasticity of frame and lose their careworn looks; pining infants grow dimpled and rosy again; young folks vie with each other in pedestrian excursions up and down among the sylvan wonders of the neighborhood—a sort of broad-gauge physical culture—while white-haired grand dames and squires sit in their arm-chairs on the wide porches in a smiling content that seems a benediction on all the rest.

What with free lectures and entertainments at the amphitheater every evening—preceded always by a half-hour evening prayer service in Children's Temple close by, which all delight in—with social gatherings, walks and drives to the mountain views, botanizing and sketching expeditions, etc., and the large amount of time required for eating and sleeping, ennui is here impossible.

In company with Mrs. J. H. Cobb and Miss E. F. Andrews (two accomplished educators of the Wesleyan College faculty, Macon, Ga.) I, two days ago, made a partial round of the various schools, finding much to admire and nothing to criticise. We were especially interested in the School of English Literature and the fine work done there by Prof. A. P. Bourland, of Southwestern Baptist University; also in the methods and thoroughness of M'lle Vivisand, teacher of modern languages, and in the School of Physical Culture under Prof. W. R. McDaniel, of Westminster College, Md.

The platform and lecture season has opened fairly with two good lectures by Miss Andrews and one by Rev. Dr. Johnson, of Mary Sharp College, during past week; also a most enjoyable humorous and dramatic recital by Prof. Merrill, teacher of elocution in Vanderbilt University. We expect great things. Notable among these will be a two weeks' series of "Bible Talks" (on Luke's gospel) by Dr. Carlisle, president of Wofford College, S. C., whose name and fame is so well known. In anticipation of these lectures, and the general desire for better acquaintance with this prince among lay expositors and teachers, I applied to a life-long and intimate friend of Dr. Carlisle for an authentic outline of his personal history, etc., which I here subjoin entire, as of intrinsic interest to justify the space required:

"James H. Carlisle, LL.D., was born in Winnaboro, S. C., in 1825, of staunch and sturdy Irish stock. His father, a Methodist preacher and a physician, was a man of small means, struggling to sustain his young family. But, urged by the love of letters born with the Scotch Irish Puritan, and laudably ambitious for his boys to get an education and to make their way in the world, he managed to graduate three of his sons from the S. C. College, at Columbia. These boys were endowed, all three, with good bodily frames and robust mental furniture. They worked their way into and through college, and, upon leaving its walls, faced the world with modest self-reliance and commendable pluck.

"James felt called to teach, and immediately upon graduation, in 1844, he entered upon his life-work. The male academy in Columbia was the arena of his early struggles and triumphs. The young pedagogue set to work with a hearty good-will; with such zeal and energy and deep, consecrated earnestness as could not fail of success.

"Mr. Carlisle was no commonplace, routine schoolmaster. While still at college he conceived a great admiration for Thomas Arnold, of Rugby, and, doubtless, took him for his model as the prince and pattern of teachers. And as Arnold was at once loved, revered and feared by his pupils, so with the boys who were privileged with the tuition of Mr. Carlisle. He was in earnest, and found no difficulty in impressing upon his pupils that he loved them sincerely, but that, in return, he expected each and everyone of them to conduct themselves as gentlemen and to try their very best to do the work of the school.

"And the boys of the Academy did good work; and soon it became noised abroad that here was a genuine teacher, a true man: and when in 1853 the trustees of Wofford College were on the lookout for a suitable man to organize their faculty, they offered Mr. Carlisle the professorship of mathematics—an experiment on their part, but an experiment that time has converted into a brilliant success.

"Dr. Carlisle went to Spartanburg in the summer of 1854, and assisted in organizing the institution, and has been teaching mathematics in its different branches, pure and applied, in Wofford College for six and thirty years.

"In 1876 Dr. Carlisle was elected to the presidency of the college. Since then the history of this school of the prophets has been closely identified with the subject of this sketch. The college, under his administration, has been prosperous, and its alumni—now a considerable number—may be found adorning every walk of life.

"Dr. C., it will thus be seen, has now become the father of a large and somewhat distinguished family.

"He has been a successful teacher, because he is earnest, conscientious, and withal kind and tender. He is affable and easy of access, inviting, at all times, the unreserved confidence of his young charges; yet such is his innate dignity of character that it inspires awe, and it would never enter the head of the most reckless youth to take a liberty with the Doctor. We certainly have never heard of such a case.

"Dr. Carlisle has achieved a great reputation as a public speaker. His tall form, six feet six in his stockings, his broad chest and sound lungs, his massive head—filled chuck-full with brains—furnish a superb outfit for a popular orator. His voice is clear, loud, strong and sonorous; his manner earnest, his tones pathetic, gentle, persuasive. He has been in great demand as a platform speaker in his State for forty years.

"While by no means devoid of humor, he disdains to win applause by pandering to the vulgar desire to be amused. His temperance addresses have no 'jokes,' but are popular nevertheless, and of the most effective character. He has spoken frequently and very admirably in baccalaureate addresses; he has labored in the interest of the Bible Cause, of missions, of the Sunday-school, and, indeed, has spoken on every subject calculated prominently or remotely to promote the cause of morals or religion. He has lectured on 'The Starry Heavens and the Moral Law,' on literary, scientific, historical, economic and many other subjects, and he never fails to 'draw' fair audiences. He has been a member of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, time and again. He was one of the fraternal messengers from his church, some years ago, to the Northern Methodist Episcopal Conference, held in Cincinnati. He was also a member of the Ecumenical Conference, held in Baltimore. He was appointed by the Bishops to go to London, a few years ago; but the state of his health at that time did not warrant his undertaking the voyage.

"He has assisted in several courses at Chautauqua, at Monteagle and at Piedmont, and is everywhere heard gladly. He has lectured with eclat before the National Educational Association at Saratoga, and elsewhere.

"His writings have been chiefly hermeneutical and homiletical; the Sunday-school periodicals of his church have for years had their best material from his pen.

"His contributions to the religious press are now in almost as great demand as his lectures and addresses.

"May so valuable a life be long spared to the church and the country!"

Dr. Carlisle will begin his "Bible Talks" at Monteagle, July 21, continuing two weeks—a daily morning feast which all Bible lovers and learners will enjoy, and which none within reach can afford to miss.

Popular lectures on varied themes, concerts, scientific exhibits, etc., make up the week day attractions at the amphitheatre, with eminent preachers of the different evangelical denominations for the Sabbath services, assisted by a large selected choir of voices led by Prof. Bailey. Rev. Dr. Darby, of Nashville, preached twice yesterday, and most acceptably, to very large audiences.

Meridian District Conference.

Conference convened at Enterprise, Miss., July 10, 1890. In the absence of Bishop Haygood, who wired his inability to be with us, Rev. T. L. Mollen, P. E., opened the session.

This being his initiative year and work as presiding elder, pulpit and pew were, doubtless, ready to measure him up. Candid, earnest, blunt and bold, he has coupled with these virtues the inherent business qualification of a successful lawyer; hence the entire district gave evidence of renewed vigor and much hope. The opening sermon by Rev. R. B. Downer came from an experienced heart and sounded the keynote of the needs of the hour—a religion not simply of profession, but of possession. Spirituality characterized every sermon and service.

The hour of the consecration service witnessed the Spirit's presence in power. Bishop C. B. Galloway arrived upon the second day and presided during the remainder of the Conference. His invariable, gentle firmness and incisive questionings brought out a clear summary of each cause. While the district is, in some respects, the admitted banner one of the Mississippi Conference, and has evidenced growth under each succeeding presiding elder, and is manned by faithful, self-sacrificing preachers; yet some of the statistical approximations are indicative, and bring a tinge of sorrow. For instance: Church membership, 6,000; NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATES taken, only 275 (one church paper to every twenty-one members); Sunday-schools fully supplied with Bibles, two; family altars, where the Bible and prayer is used daily, one in every seventy-five. Truly consecrated, converted or regenerated church members, about three-eighths.

The memoirs of Revs. J. A. Godfroy and T. J. Newsom were touchingly remembered in speech and by resolution. Amount raised by subscription and notes for Millsaps College—the greater part of which was given by the people of Enterprise—$620 45. East Mississippi Female College, with its enlarged boarding and chapel capacity, was represented as entering upon an era of increased usefulness to the church.

Delegates to Annual Conference were elected by ballot as follows: L. P. Brown, D. W. Heidelburg, C. R. Rencher, W. F. Hyer. Alternates: S. S. Copo and J. S. Turner.

Steps were inaugurated for the early erection of a parsonage at Meridian for the presiding elder. The following resolutions were adopted:

OBSERVANCE OF THE SABBATH.

Resolved, That the District Conference unqualifiedly condemn all traveling on the Sabbath by public conveyance, except in cases of mercy.

Resolved, That our preachers frequently preach upon the subject, and cry aloud and spare not all Sunday trains and corporations that require Sunday labor.

Resolved, That we respectfully urge Rev. T. L. Mellen to have published his sermon on the subject preached before this body.

TEMPERANCE.

Resolved, That we enter our solemn and earnest protest against any provision being made for licensing liquor, lottery or any form of sin in our fundamental laws.

PUBLISHING INTERESTS.

Resolved, That we are more than pleased to have Rev. D. L. Mitchell, business manager of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, with us. His sermon, Thursday night, was helpful and good to the use of edifying.

Resolved, That we will continue our patronage to the ADVOCATE, and will do what we can to extend the circulation of our Conference organ.

Resolved, That we believe greater results would be obtained if the place of publication were transferred from New Orleans, La., to Jackson, Miss.

State Line was selected as the place for the holding of the next District Conference. The homes of Enterprise gave to each and all a warm, frank, Christian hospitality. The church in material appearance showed its pastor, Rev. J. W. Chambers, to be apt and business-like, and, from a spiritual standpoint, proved him a man bent upon having each member to know Christ as a personal Savior. Conference adjourned with doxology at 5:30 P. M., July 13, 1890.

L. P. BROWN, Sec.

When thy tongue and heart agree not in confession, that confession is not agreeable to God's pleasure: he that confesses with his tongue, and wants confession in his heart, is either a vain man, or an hypocrite: he that hath confession in his heart, and wants it in his tongue, is either a proud man, or a timorous.—Hall.

Holly Springs District Conference.

The twentieth annual session of the District Conference of the Holly Springs district, of the North Mississippi Conference, convened at Potts Camp, Marshall county, Miss., July 18, 1890.

The Bishop was present, and the attendance was very large. An old member of the Conference remarked to this writer that it was the largest District Conference he ever attended. Sunday-school Conference was held July 17. This meeting was presided over by Rev. J. B. Stone, P. E. The program was good, and all the addresses showed thought on the part of the speakers, and that the Sunday-school interest is growing among people.

During the time the District Conference was in session, from Friday morning to Saturday afternoon, much good work was done.

The Bishop, as you know, is a most excellent presiding officer; and, not only that, but he is one who can sway the audience by knock-down arguments and by flights of oratory. His address on education, delivered on Saturday, was a grand thing, showing up the great possibilities of our beloved Mississippi. We wish that he could speak the paragraph on emigration in every county in the South. It would make Mississippians proud of their State. He made an inestimable appeal for Millsaps College, and the congregation subscribed to that fund $631 50, some of which was paid down.

On Sunday morning he preached to a very large congregation from the text: "And he wist not that the Lord had departed from him." The Bishop's powers for instructing and entertaining are too well known for us to undertake to pass a eulogy on him; suffice it to say, that the people were entertained, instructed and delighted.

The reports from preachers from all parts of the district were very encouraging indeed, showing that our church is on the rising ground, that the people are growing in grace, that the prospect to pay all assessments is good the present year.

The Committee on Books and Periodicals deplored the fact that our Conference organ, the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, is so little taken by our people, and, to increase its circulation and usefulness, introduced the following suggestive resolution, which was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we believe that an arrangement which would bring the editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE in personal contact with our people would greatly conduce to its influence and popularity, and in order thereto we suggest that the paper be published simultaneously in New Orleans and in Jackson, and that an editor reside in Jackson, in our State.

The following persons were elected delegates to Annual Conference, which convenes at Grenada on December 12, next: James T. Fant, M. C. Pegues, W. W. Bott and E. J. McKenney. W. A. Young and Marcus D. Herring, alternates.

Dr. Morton took special collection for church extension, receiving $31 50.

The meeting, taken altogether, was an extremely interesting and useful one. All the interests of the church was looked after earnestly. A large number of distinguished visitors was present. Among the rest we notice: Dr. David P. Morton, secretary church extension; Rev. T. J. Newell, Grenada Collegiate Institute; G. W. Bachman, colporteur; Dr. Sims, University of Mississippi; R. A. Burroughs, Okolona; Rev. William Malthus, Arkansas; Rev. Mr. Jacobs, and others.

From the Work.

TOM STIRLING'S CHARGE.

I had a work last year that almost reached the outskirts of your city. I thought I had a good deal of work to do, and some very unpleasant features about the work. But I have more to do this year than I had last; more than I can properly do. The brethren around are very kind to me; almost every man in the district has said, "Come over and help me," and several out of the district. I wonder if I am not called to be an evangelist? By the way, I had an evangelist with me about ten or twelve days. He preached with pointedness, and his efforts were attended with much power. We received seven or eight applicants for membership during his stay. I have heard that he used to use ugly and vulgar expressions in the pulpit. Some said his language was indecent and ungentlemanly. He used no such language here. His expressions were, in the main, quite chaste. In a few instances, I think, they could have been improved some. But about my work; it is large, and I have some excellent help in the membership. In our little moveable class meetings, and prayer meetings held from house to house, Friday and Monday evenings, we have fallen into the habit of calling on just anyone to lead us in prayer, and they seem to understand that we don't expect anybody to refuse. What do you think of a sister, unaccustomed to praying in public, beginning her prayer thus: "O Lord, you know I am scared half to death; but I am going to try to pray if it kills me." And then what do you think of a scholarly brother, that is a very active worker in the church, one that loves the church, a man that can address a Senate, but can't pray in public? I had such a man in a former charge.

This charge deserves an abler man than I am—one that always has his wits about him. The president of the aid society asks me to announce a meeting of the society. I get up and read from the written slip, that the Woman's Missionary Society will meet at four P. M. With the book open before me at No. 540, I announce Hymn 580. Yesterday morning, in my hurry, I put on my last summer's alpaca coat. It had a great hole about the armpit. We had some strangers present from another city, and some of the leading Presbyterians came over that day. Well, I don't think I ever preached a sermon that brought so much color to my wife's cheeks as that sermon. I was really afraid when I got home that my "about-the-house-coat" would get burnt up. Well, at night I had on my good coat; but, behold! when I returned from church, I found a lone cuff on the bureau. The other was on my left sleeve, and the left cuff should have been on my right sleeve, but was not. Very likely at our next Conference the Bishops will get word that this place would like a change; and if so, I have made up my mind to charge it all up to the presiding elder, and become convinced that he is prejudiced against me.

TOM STERLING.

FRANKLINTON CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Our protracted meeting at Fisher's, which began Sunday, closed Thursday night. It was a gracious revival. The church was so thoroughly aroused that men and women who had never prayed in public triumphed over the devil and prayed for penitents. Many of the brethren stood at the altar and went out in the congregation and pleaded with sinners to come to Christ. We received twenty-nine members, their ages ranging from eight to seventy. Eleven infants and ten adults were baptized, a prayer meeting was begun, and will, no doubt, be a grand success. Plans are now on foot to build a new church, and we expect it to be built at no far distant day.

To Bros. N. Alford, a local preacher from Holmesville, and Hervie Millard, of Poncbatoula, we are deeply indebted for earnest, faithful and effectual preaching. Bro. Mallard did most of the preaching after Tuesday at eleven, and has made for himself a warm place in the hearts of these people.

Thirteen new subscribers to the ADVOCATE to-date, and more to follow, I hope. We praise God for the victory, give him all the glory, and press onward, happy in his love.

W. L. LINFIELD.

BLAIRSTOWN, LA.

July 12 will long be remembered by the people for miles around old Gilead Church, on this circuit. At an early hour the people began to pour in by the hundreds. The weather was beautiful and clear, and it was a grand sight to behold the smiles and contentment depicted on all faces. This was Children's Day. Noble institution! This was the third one that has been held on my charge, and they have all been a source of spiritual strength to me, and I know it has gladdened the hearts of many little girls and boys. The result will not be known this side of eternity. God bless Children's Day, and may our people wake upon this line, and may it be hereafter more largely observed. As a result of the three Children's Days observed on my work, financially, there was $21. And then when we think of the destitute localities and those in heathen countries who are begging for light, who knows what this twenty-one dollars will accomplish for the Master's kingdom? I would like to go into the details of this matter and make special mention of each one of these sweet boys and girls who so nobly participated and rendered their several pieces nobly, and our noble superintendents and teachers who have acquitted themselves grandly, whose scholars show very careful training, but want of space forbids.

This is my first year to have a work all to myself. I have endeavored, by the help of God, to see that none of the departments of the church work should suffer. I have done my best. There is a future just along on this line, and I think if some of our D. D's and old sages would take up, and if they can solve the matter, it would do a sight more good than discussing so much about faith and sanctification; they would be much better off and a large addition to the Master's kingdom in the world. That is, how to induce our boys and young men to participate in our social meetings; in other words, only about ten per cent. of our young men and boys will take any active part in Sunday-school or prayer meetings. Now, there is a cause for this, and it is having a wonderful influence to draw our moral young men from the church.

In addition to the three churches that observed Children's Day, we have three other active Sunday-schools well equipped, and are doing a good work; one of which, at Clear Creek, has had an active life of ten years. No break during this time, and the talk is that they will observe Children's Day and add their mite to the Master's cause.

Now, Bro. Editor, since the Lottery Legislature, at Baton Rouge, has adjourned, we are ready to take up where we left off May 12, and push our work forward. Many wishes to the old ADVOCATE!

Yours in Christ,

J. R. WHITTINGTON.

Oxford Church,

ADDENDA.

I failed in my report of the Greenville District Conference to mention a resolution of sympathy and co-operation adopted by the Conference for our church at Oxford. This resolution was unanimously adopted, showing our deep distress and sympathy for our people at Oxford that pervades nearly every section of this country. Everyone who is able and has the impulse of connectional love should not hesitate to come to the relief of the unfortunate band of heroic Methodists at Oxford.

Bro. Long informs us that they have sent for the plan, and are $1,500 short of the amount necessary, and no light as to where that is to come from. Men and brethren, help!

C. H. OWEN.

Books and Periodicals.

All books received will be acknowledged in this column. A fuller notice will depend upon the interests of our readers.

BOOKS.

THE COLORED MAN IN THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH. By Rev. L. M. Haygood, M. D. Cranston & Stowe, Cincinnati; Hunt & Eaton, New York. Price, $1 25.

This book is a pretty thorough discussion of one side of the subject. The author seems to be familiar with that side. The whole trend of the book is to convince the colored members of the Methodist Episcopal Church that it is their duty to remain in that organization. We do not think the book will accomplish its object.

PERIODICALS.

—DEMOREST'S FAMILY MAGAZINE, for August, is already on our table and well filled with articles to suit all classes of readers. The illustrations are of the best. New York. Price, $2.

—THE CHAUTAUQUAN, for August, is up to its usual grade. This monthly gives a good supply of the best reading of every character, and it is cheap enough at $2 per annum. Dr. T. L. Flood, Meadville, Pa.

—THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL comes full of wisdom and wit and worthy words. We don't know of so much good reading anywhere else for one dollar. Curtis Publishing Company, Philadelphia.

—The SOUTHERN CULTIVATOR, for July, is a good number. The readers of the ADVOCATE who are engaged in farming operations will find this monthly a helpful friend. It is very cheap at $1. Published at Atlanta, Ga.

—THE GOSPEL IN ALL LANDS devotes itself this month to Germany and Switzerland, with a good supply of articles on other places and work. Missionary Society M. E. Church. Hunt & Eaton, New York. Price, $1 50 a year.

—CASSELL'S FAMILY MAGAZINE furnishes much pleasant reading for these hot days. Get in a hammock under the cooling shade of a big live-oak, and you will enjoy this mid-summer number. Cassell Publishing Company, New York. $1 50 a year.

—BIBLIA is a monthly for Bible students and teachers, edited by Dr. Charles H. S. Davis, and published by S. L. Harrell, 198 Broadway, New York. Price, $1 a year. It is a good periodical for a preacher of the gospel and a teacher of the Word.

—WIDE AWAKE, for August, comes laden with good things for our young folks. The topics take a wide range. Prose and poetry make a charming combination, while pictures form a beautiful setting for both. D. Lothrop Company, Boston. $2 40 a year.

—THE MAGAZINE OF ART, for August, opens with a photogravure called "The Last of England." Illustrated Journalism in England, by C. N. Williamson, is a fine article. Then we have, John Kay and His Portraits, by J. M. Gray. Other pieces of interest follow. Cassell Publishing Company, New York. Price, $3 50 a year.

—THE QUIVER, for August, has Music in the Catacombs, by J. F. Rowbottom, and combines interest with instruction; That Troublesome Class will be read by Sunday-school superintendents. Then we have The Last Picture; The Rejected Planks; The Cathedral Lesson; Sick-room Comforts, and other good things. Cassell Publishing Company, New York. Price, $1 50.

—THE PULPIT is a new monthly published by the Lakeside Publishing Company, at Buffalo, New York, for $1 a year. The Pulpit is devoted to the publication of complete sermons from the greatest living ministers. In the first number there are sermons from Canon Farrar, Samuel R. Fuller, D. D., Alexander Mackennal, D. D., Samuel S. Mitchell, D. D., and C. J. Vaughan, D. D. This will be a profitable and interesting monthly to all who love to read sermons.

Sunday-School Lesson.

LESSON VI.—August 10.

THE RICH MAN AND LAZARUS.

Luke xvi, 19-31.

GOLDEN TEXT—How hard it is for them that trust in riches to enter into the kingdom of God.—Mark x, 24.

19. There was a certain rich man—He is left nameless, perhaps to imply that his name was not "written in heaven." (x, 20.) Legend gives him the name Nimeusis. "Dives" is simply the Latin for "a rich man." With unmeasured facilities and opportunities to minister to the suffering and to make others happy, he lived for himself only, and lavished untold wealth upon his self-indulgence. In purple and fine linen—The two words express extreme luxury. Robes dyed in the blood of the murex purpurarius were very costly, and were worn only by the greatest men. Byssus is the fine linen of Egypt, a robe of which was worth twice its own weight in gold. Fared sumptuously every day—Literally, making merry in splendor. A life of banquets is indicated.

20. And there was a certain beggar named Lazarus—The word for "beggar," it may be noted, is the same as the "poor" of chap. vi, 20. The occurrence in this one solitary instance of a personal name in our Lord's parables suggests the question, What was meant by it? Prof. Plumtre, who identifies Lazarus of Bethany with the young ruler that had great possessions, suggests that the selection of this name may have been intended as a warning to him, and gives some ingenious reasons for his conjecture. The name itself comes from Ellezer—that is, "helped of God," like the German Gotthilf. It is a striking evidence of the deep impression which this parable has made on the mind of Christendom, that the term "lazar" should have passed into so many languages as it has, losing altogether its signification as a proper name. Was laid—Literally, was thrown: cast carelessly down by his bearers, and left there. At his gate—At his stately portal. Full of sores—The regular medical term for "to be ulcerated," used only here in the New Testament. John uses the kindred noun, "an ulcer."

21. And desiring to be fed with the crumbs—The habits of the East, the absence of knives and forks, and the like, made the amount of waste of this kind larger than do the habits of modern Europe. Here the picture is heightened by two touches. The dogs are there, and get the crumbs which the man fails to get, and then they come and lick the open sores. Moreover—Literally, but even. The dogs—The only dogs in the East are the wild and neglected pariah dogs, which run about masterless and are the common scavengers. The incident is only added to give in one touch the abjectness of his misery, and, therefore, to enhance the rich man's neglect. The fault of Dives was callous selfishness.

22. This poor beggar died, the first and the last relief that comes to such a sufferer. Was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom—Of the three terms in common use among the Jews to express the future state of blessedness—(1) the Garden of Eden, or Paradise; (2) the Throne of Glory; (3) the Bosom of Abraham—this was the most widely popular. It rested on the idea of a great feast, in which Abraham was the host. To lie in his bosom, as St. John in that of our Lord, was to be there as the most favored guest. And this was the position which was assigned to the beggar, obviously not merely as a compensation for the "evil things" he had endured on earth, but as the crown of the faith and patience with which he had borne them. The being "carried by angels" was literally in accord with the popular Jewish belief. Either good angels in general, or the special guardian angels of the righteous, took on them this office. Died, and was buried—In due time the rich man also died (as all rich men must), and "he was buried," doubtless, with pomp, ceremony, procession, and every token of distinguished honor. It does not appear whether Lazarus had any burial. Any Lazarus at a rich man's gate is as sure a test as if Jesus himself were there under the guise of the beggar in his rags, his hunger, and his sores.

23. In hell—The Greek word is hades, not gehenna; the unseen world of the dead, not the final prison of the souls of the lost, the "hell" of Acts ii, 27, 32; not that of Matt. v, 22-29. It lies almost on the surface of the parable that it describes an earlier stage of the life after death than that in Matthew xxv, 31-46, the intermediate state between death and the resurrection. The entire scenery and phraseology are Jewish, and are borrowed from those which were current among the rabbis of Christ's day. In torments—The nature of the "torments" here is suggested by the "flame" of the next verse, but that word has to be taken with all its symbolic associations, and does not necessarily imply the material element of fire. What is meant is that there shall be for the soul of the evil-doer, when brought face to face with that holiness of God which is as a "consuming fire," an anguish as intolerable as the touch of earthly flame is to the nerves of the mortal body. Retribution commences immediately after death, with no interval of unconsciousness between death and its beginning. No sooner had the rich man died than "he lifted up his eyes in hell, being in torments."

24. Send Lazarus, that he may dip the tip of his finger—The words, in their relation to the effect of the punishment on the rich man's character, offer two tenable explanations. On the one hand, they have been thought to indicate the old selfish arrogance and heartlessness of the man who still looks on Lazarus as one who may be sent hither and thither, at any cost or suffering, to do his bidding and minister to his ease; on the other, we may see in them the traces of pride conquered, and the cry for mercy at last coming from lips that had never uttered it before, and the craving for help and sympathy from one whom in his lifetime he had despised as beneath his notice. There is something terribly significant in the fact that it is the "tongue" that suffers most in that agonizing flame. That was the organ of the sense which the man had pampered by his riotous and sumptuous living; that is now the chief instrument of retribution. I am tormented—Rather, I am suffering pain. The word is used of the sorrow of Joseph and Mary when the child Jesus was missing (chapter xi, 48); and of the grief of the Ephesian elders on parting with Paul. (Acts xx, 38.) Rev. Ver., I am in anguish. The story needs no comment—certainly needs no rhetoric—to make it awfully impressive? It needs no other law of interpretation than this rule of common sense—namely, that Jesus puts the case in perfect honesty of purpose, to make the great facts palpable, plain, unmistakable—showing that the rich man is in misery; that he knows Lazarus to be in blessedness; that he longs for a morsel of relief—the least amount he could express—and seems to have a ray of hope for it through the kindness of his father Abraham and the ministries of the same Lazarus whom he had heard of at his palace gate.

25. But Abraham said, Son—The word used is the same, in its tone of pity and tenderness ("child" rather than "son"), as that which the father used to the elder son in the parable of the Prodigal Son, which our Lord addressed to the man sick of the palsy and to his disciples. Remember—The word has a terrible force in its bearing upon the question of the future life. Memory intensified, reproducing the past visions, pleasures and base joys of the self-indulgent, and subject to the action of a conscience no longer narcotized into slumber—this makes the sharpest pang of the deserved anguish. In Christian eschatology the river of death is no water of Lethe, bringing with it the forgetfulness of past evil. Thou in thy lifetime receivedest thy good things—The verb, "they have their reward," in Matthew vi, 2, implies that this was all he was to have. There is an emphasis, too, in the presence of the pronoun in the one clause, and its absence in the other. The rich man had made the pleasures of sense "his good things." They were all that he cared for—all, therefore, that he was to have. He had identified himself with them. The evil things of Lazarus, on the other hand, had not been chosen by him; they were external to him, a discipline and a probation through which, turning them to their right use, he passed to his true good. But now thou art tormented—"Pained," as before. The parable is practically an expansion of the beatitudes and woes of vi, 22-25.

26. There is a great gulf fixed—Literally, a chasm, the opening or gaping of the earth. His prayer is precluded and shown to be utterly hopeless, for a great chasm lies between his home in Hades and that other state known as "Abraham's bosom," so that never a man can pass over it—never a man can come from you to us, or go from us to you. The hopelessness of this rich man's doom is put in the strongest possible light. That there can never be in it any change for the better; that never the first sense of relief, even to the tiniest particle of water, can reach him; that no reversal of his doom is ever to be thought of; no restoration from his woe to a condition of blessedness or even of non-existence—all these points are made as clearly and as strongly as human language can express them. If we accept Jesus as an authority on these points, and if we do him the justice of assuming that he portrays the sinner's doom honestly, truthfully, with the one intention of making himself understood, then there can be no restoration of the sinner to a better state and no possible mitigation of his fearful doom.

27. I pray thee, therefore, father—The reiterated appeal to Abraham as "father" is suggestive in many ways: (1) as speaking out that in which too many of the rich man's class put an undue trust, resting on the fatherhood of Abraham rather than on that of God (Matt. iii, 9); (2) as showing that the refusal of the previous verse had been accepted, as it were, submissively. There is no rebellious defiance, no blasphemous execration, such as men have pictured to themselves as resounding evermore in the realms of darkness. Abraham is the sufferer's father still, and he yet counts on his sympathy.

28. I have five brethren—Here again we are left to choose between opposite views of the motive which prompted the request. Was it simply a selfish fear of reproaches that might aggravate his sufferings? Was it the stirring in him of an unselfish anxiety for others, content to bear his own anguish if only his brothers might escape? Either view is tenable enough, but the latter harmonizes more with the humility of the tone in which the request is uttered.

29. They have Moses and the prophets—The words are in entire harmony with all the teaching of our Lord. "Moses and the Prophets" were quite enough to teach them that a life of self-indulgent luxury was evil in itself, and, therefore, must bring with it, in the end, shame and condemnation.

30. But if one went unto them from the dead—The words are in accordance with the general Jewish craving for a "sign," as the only proof of a revelation from God. The return of one who had passed into the unseen world and brought back a report of its realities would rouse, the rich man thought, the most apathetic. So far the picture is generic; but if we follow up a suggestion which has thrown light upon the parable before, we shall find here also a more individualizing feature. It is specially recorded of the patriarch that he had hoped to see some miracle done by Jesus. He had given utterance, when he heard of the miracle that had been actually wrought, to the belief that John the Baptist was "risen from the dead" (Matt. xiv, 2), and yet that belief had not brought him one step nearer to repentance.

31. If they hear not Moses and the prophets—We are accustomed, rightly enough, to look on our Lord's own resurrection as leading to the great fulfillment of these words. We should not forget, however, that there was another fulfillment more immediately following on them. In a few weeks, or even days, according to the best harmonists, tidings came that Lazarus of Bethany was sick. In yet a few days more that Lazarus did "rise from the dead;" cured, we may believe, of whatever love of this world's good things had checked his spiritual growth, a witness of the power of Christ to raise, as from the shadow world of hades, so also from the darkness of spiritual death to newness of life. And yet that wonder also brought about no repentance. Herod and Pilate, scribes and Pharisees, and Sadducees and priests, simply took counsel together that they might put Lazarus also to death. We can hardly believe the coincidence of name and fact in this instance to have been undesigned. Be persuaded—Dives had said: "They will repent." Abraham replies: "They will not be even persuaded." This was most remarkably exemplified in the results which allowed the raising of another Lazarus and the resurrection of our Lord himself.

THE METHOD OF GOD.—"In Adam all die." Yes! but the blessed eyes of God, as they moved over the mass of multitudinous distress, as they noted the inevitable working of this mysterious inheritance, still beheld, hidden in this very mystery, the possibility of a redemption. The laws, the conditions of social unity, which spread so far and so widely the poison of a father's sin, carry just as far and as widely the light of a father's honor, the force of a father's purity. A renewal, a reinvigoration of the lost Fatherhood might yet defeat the pressure of the old and sinister disgrace. The blood, once purged, might transmit itself from heart to heart, from life to life; and might reach and penetrate and quicken and absorb and renew. Though by one man sin has entered, and through sin, death, yet by another, who is the Man in whom all are made, grace may re-enter and recover the dying race. The transmission that makes for the corruption of all can be turned to the needs and uses of the regeneration. This is the method of God, to convert the conditions of the curse into the very instruments of the blessing. In Adam, it is true, all would die; but, if that is so, then in Christ all may be made alive. If sin has by these methods abounded, grace shall by the same methods much more abound. So, in the beloved Son, man becomes new-begotten of God.—Canon H. S. Holland.

EMERSON ON NEWSPAPER READING.—The following is from "Emerson's Talks with a College Boy," in the Century: "Newspapers have done much to abbreviate expression, and so to improve style. They are to occupy during your generation a large share of attention." (This was said nearly a quarter of a century ago. It was as if he saw ahead the blanket editions.) "And the most studious and engaged man can neglect them only at his cost. But have little to do with them. Learn how to get their best, too, without their getting yours. Do not read them when the mind is creative. And do not read them thoroughly, column by column. Remember they are made for everybody, and don't try to get what isn't meant for you. The miscellany, for instance, should not receive your attention. There is a great secret in knowing what to keep out of the mind as well as what to put in. And even if you find yourself interested in the selections, you can not use them, because the original source is not of reference. You can't quote from a newspaper. Like some insects, it died the day it was born. The genuine news is what you want, and practice quick searches for it. Give yourself only so many minutes for the paper. Then you will learn to avoid the premature reports and anticipations, and the stuff put in for people who have nothing to think."

WHERE OUR GREATEST WEALTH IS.—In the region beyond the 98th meridian of longitude west of Greenwich, the initial point being St. Paul, and its final one, North Platte, Nebraska, while on the south it extends eastward to Fort Worth, Texas, eighteen States and Territories were visited and traversed. The contrasts offered by it to the solitude of 1865 were almost amazing. West of the meridian named there are now at least 22,000 miles of railroad, and of telegraph wires not less than 150,000 miles. Of telephone and electric-light cables, in proportion to population, there are more miles in use than elsewhere within the United States. There is to-day more property owned, per capita, than elsewhere on the continent. Two-fifths of the national domain is found west of the line given, and certainly three-fifths of the remaining public lands of the United States must be sought for in the same region; and that, too, without considering Alaska. Yet how few persons are cognizant of the fact that, east and west the geographical center of this Union is somewhere in the Bay of San Francisco; for with the Aleutian Islanders flying our flag within 50 miles of the Siberian coast of Asia, our domain extends, on a north-western and south-eastern line, some 3,000 miles beyond the Golden Gate.—Col. Richard J. Hinton, in The Forum.

DON'T GIVE UP

The use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. One bottle may not cure "right off" a complaint of years; persist until a cure is effected. As a general rule, improvement follows shortly after beginning the use of this medicine. With many people, the effect is immediately noticeable; but some constitutions are less susceptible to medicinal influences than others, and the curative process may, therefore, in such cases, be less prompt. Perseverance in using this remedy is sure of its reward at last. Sooner or later, the most stubborn blood diseases yield to

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

"For several years, in the spring months, I used to be troubled with a drowsy, tired feeling, and a dull pain in the small of my back, so bad, at times, as to prevent my being able to walk, the least sudden motion causing me severe distress. Frequently, boils and rashes would break out on various parts of the body. By the advice of friends and my family physician, I began the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla and continued it till the poison in my blood was thoroughly eradicated."—L. W. English, Montgomery City, Mo.

"My system was all run down; my skin rough and of yellowish hue. I tried various remedies, and while some of them gave me temporary relief, none of them did any permanent good. At last I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, continuing it exclusively for a considerable time, and am pleased to say that it completely

Cured Me.

I presume my liver was very much out of order, and the blood impure in consequence. I feel that I cannot too highly recommend Ayer's Sarsaparilla to any one afflicted as I was."—Mrs. N. A. Smith, Glover, Vt.

"For years I suffered from scrofula and blood diseases. The doctors' prescriptions and several so-called blood-purifiers being of no avail, I was at last advised by a friend to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I did so, and now feel like a new man, being fully restored to health."—C. N. Frink, Decorah, Iowa.

ORGAN OF THE LOUISIANA, MISSISSIPPI AND NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCES OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.

Rev. C. W. CARTER, D. D., Editor.

CORRESPONDING EDITORS:
REV. J. D. CAMERON, D. D.
REV. B. CARRADINE, D. D.
REV. W. L. C. HUNNICUTT, D. D.

THURSDAY, JULY 31, 1890.

President Hunnicutt gave us a call, Tuesday, on his way home from an extended tour, and reports that he obtained $1,600 endowment fund for Centenary College at Alexandria District Conference, held at Colfax, La.

Editorial Correspondence.

I arrived in Homer, La., Friday morning. I find this town has grown very much since my last visit. The North and South railroad, which brings Homer in direct contact with all the world, has done much in the way of improving the place. She feels the throb of the great pulse of the world, and that has aroused her dominant energies and quickened the flow of her own life. Her citizens have been awakened by the sound of earth's industries and are bringing their beautiful little city in line with the foremost. There are evidences of progress on every hand. Large brick stores, a beautiful bank, a wagon manufactory and other buildings are among the evidences of thrift. These enterprising people are preparing a "Fair Grounds," where will be held a great fair during the month of October.

I found the Conference well under way, guided by the firm and skillful hand of Presiding Elder Randle. The attendance of preachers and laymen was very good. Indeed, this Homer District Conference has always been a pretty big affair, the people as well as the preachers taking much interest in its sessions. The work of the church in the district is progressing finely in many directions. The reports of the various committees showed that the preachers have done earnest and faithful labor, and the good results are beginning to appear. The finances are a little ahead of last year's report. Protracted meetings have been held in many places, and others will be held. Several hundred additions to the church were reported. Sunday-schools are in a thriving condition; one brother saying he had the best Sunday-school in the State.

There is some mission ground in the district which would pay to be worked. The ADVOCATE has only a tolerably good circulation. The Conference passed strong anti-Lottery resolutions, and I was told that the anti-Lottery sentiment is growing all through North Louisiana. I had the pleasure of meeting in this Conference two of the INCORRUPTIBLES, who stood up so bravely for the right at Baton Rouge: Wren, of Webster, and Nelson, of Claiborne. They were members of the Conference, and stood to their posts in the councils of the Church as firmly as they stood in the councils of the State. This being Bro. Randle's last year on the district, the Conference gave him a good send-off in the way of some commendatory resolutions, and he will go with the prayers and good wishes of the churches for whom he has so faithfully labored during the past quadrennium.

The territory of this district is dotted everywhere with flourishing schools. The people seem to be alive on the subject of education, and are doing much in that direction. Dr. Hunnicutt was present preaching and speaking in the interest of Christian education. He emphasizes the word Christian, and so should we all. It is the great hope of the church. To give my readers an idea of the uppermost and undermost thought pervading the minds of preachers and people, I will state that on three successive days we had three sermons on the subject of Christian education from three different preachers from the same text, and the people enjoyed it and were glad that it so happened.

The love-feast on Sunday morning was a time of refreshing and power. Several war-worn veterans still hold their weapons firmly, but are ready to lay them aside at the order of the Great Captain.

The entertainment of the Conference by the citizens of Homer was bountiful and simple, and made everyone of us feel at home. I had the good fortune to share the hospitality of George G. Gill and family.

Early Monday morning, in company with quite a number of preachers and delegates, I left this classic little city among the hills of Claiborne, and started homeward by way of Vicksburg and Jackson, Miss. All along the route I met old friends and exchanged brief greetings and hearty hand-shakes. At Ruston, Monroe and Delhi I saw familiar faces, and memory, in spite of me, would go back to former days, and then I had a real good spell of homesickness. It always comes over me when I pass through North Louisiana. At Delhi I had the pleasure of shaking hands with another one of our INCORRUPTIBLES—H. P. Wells, of Richland. Between Vicksburg and Jackson I met with Bro. Aleck Watkins, agent for Millsaps College. He represented that institution as growing in favor and in endowment funds. The college is being helped from all parts of the State. At Jackson I had the pleasure of a long conversation with Dr. W. C. Black on various subjects.

Railroads are good things, but the managers do some exasperating things. The fact that a man has to lie over eight hours, when by simply moving one train up or another back one hour close connection would be made, is an imposition on the public. But that is what you must do at Vicksburg and Jackson if you are south-bound. But there is nothing but what has its compensations, and that eight hours is a good time to cultivate the grace of patience!

The Texas Chautauqua.

Having just returned from the Texas Chautauqua, at San Marcos, I pen you a few lines concerning my trip. San Marcos is situated about thirty miles south of Austin and about fifty miles north of San Antonio. It lies in a beautiful valley at the foot of a low range of mountains of considerable extent. Near by are a river and a lake which bear the same name as does the mountain peak on which the assembly has its domicile. The San Marcos valley is a region of remarkable fertility. It belongs to the same category with the valley of the Nile. One thing only prevents it from being one of the finest agricultural spots on the globe, viz.: a liability to protracted drouths. This difficulty, I doubt not, will be obviated in the near future by irrigation. The river affords a copious supply of water, and when the farmers in this valley combine and organize for this purpose, they will be as independent of the rains as are their brethren in parts of California. As it is, farmers here often gather a bale of cotton per acre. This region is noted for its healthfulness. San Marcos and San Antonio and the entire intervening country constitute a magnificent sanitarium for persons suffering from pulmonary complaints. The assembly grounds occupy the summit and slopes of Mt. San Marcos, a spur of the range before alluded to, and comprise fifty acres or more. On the very crest of this mountain stands the assembly tabernacle, a well-arranged pavilion with a seating capacity of eighteen hundred, besides the mammoth rostrum. The tabernacle and the grounds are amply illuminated by electricity. The tabernacle is surmounted by an observatory which affords a magnificent view of the surrounding country. Lovelier landscapes than those which here greet the eye it has never been my lot to behold. I will not attempt a description of them. They must be seen to be appreciated.

Mt. San Marcos has an elevation of probably two hundred and fifty feet above the adjacent plain. The summit and the slopes of the mountain are covered with cedar, oak and other forms of hardy mountain arborescence. To this native vegetation, the assembly has added vines and tropical plants of various kinds. The slopes are terraced; and the terraces form walks and drives whose borders are ornamented with artificial fountains and lakelets; while, from the over-arching boughs, the joyous notes of the mountain bird may be heard mingling with the music of the zephyrs as they rustle through the thick foliage.

A letter about San Marcos which makes no mention of its famous lake would be like the drama of Hamlet with the character Hamlet omitted. Though diminutive in size, this is, perhaps, the most remarkable body of water on the continent. It is formed by a number of huge springs that burst out from underneath the surrounding mountains. To get an idea of the multitude and magnitude of these springs, let it be remembered that the San Marcos River, where it flows out from the lake, is about a hundred feet wide and three and a half or four feet deep. The water of this lake is of nearly uniform temperature the year round, the variation from the coldest day in winter to the hottest in summer being only about a degree and a half. Another singular fact is that this lake reaches its maximum height in midsummer when very little rain has fallen in the adjacent regions for months. The crystalline clearness of its waters is another unique feature of this remarkable lakelet. Viewing the lake from the shore, you might imagine that you have seen as clear water elsewhere; but get into a boat and move out into the middle of the lake near mid-day when the sun is shining, and you can see the bottom with the utmost distinctness, even in places where it is more than thirty feet deep. But the most remarkable characteristic of this lake is the abundance and variety of semi-tropical vegetation that grows beneath its crystal waters. Vines, ferns, mosses and grasses of various kinds line its bottom and grow with such marvelous luxuriance that in many places they reach the surface, and everywhere they are only a short distance below the surface. This aquatic vegetation is not, as one might suppose, uniform in color; on the contrary, it exhibits a vast variety of colors and hues. Owing, doubtless, to the numerous bubbling springs at the bottom of the lake, this vegetation has grouped itself into fantastic forms, to which in some cases names have been given, such as, "Peri's Palace," "The Devil's Cave," etc. Some of these groups look very much like caves, having an arched or Gothic entrance. A boat ride on this lake is an event not soon to be forgotten. Leaning over the side of your boat as it glides smoothly over, you can spend hours in contemplating these strange forms and fantastic groupings. Fishes of various sizes can also be seen darting about here and there in this weird little world of waters. A dam has been thrown across the mouth of the lake, and thus the gravitating power of its waters is utilized for various purposes. The lake is the source of the water supply for the city and for the assembly grounds. It not only furnishes the water, but also the power by which the water is elevated to the summit of the mountain. It is also the motor for an ice-factory and a grist mill!

The assembly this year has had a very prosperous session. The number of persons encamped on the grounds is in excess of any previous year. As my stay was short, I heard only five addresses besides those which I delivered myself. Those which I heard were by Dr. J. A. Luther, president of Belton Female College, and Dr. W. T. Stott, of Indiana, president of Franklin Institute. They were good. Those who have been on the grounds all the while speak in a most complimentary way of the programme of the session. Several distinguished lecturers from abroad, besides those just mentioned, have graced the platform. Among them James Clement Ambrose, of Chicago; Rev. S. S. Burleson, of Wisconsin, and Rev. M. B. Chapman, of Little Rock, Ark. Dr. Chapman covered himself with glory. He had visited San Marcos before, and had delighted his hearers; but this time they say he eclipsed himself. His praise is on all lips round about San Marcos. Col. L. F. Copeland, of Pennsylvania, was on the grounds when I left, but had not spoken. He is engaged for seven lectures. He is a professional lecturer, and is said to stand in the front rank of his profession. Among the speakers yet to appear are Rev. J. A. Harrison, of Washington and Lee University; Rev. E. Harmon, ex-Gov. Lubbock, Senator Reagan, and "the blind man eloquent," Rev. W. H. Milburn, the present chaplain of Congress. I have mentioned only a few of the more widely known lecturers. Many other speakers of ability have been and will be on the platform. The generalissimo of the San Marcos platform is as heretofore the genial, scholarly, eloquent Dubose. Although he resides in California, 2,500 miles away, the assembly will not tolerate the thought of his resigning his superintendency. They do not think his place can be filled, and they are, doubtless, quite right. He possesses qualities of head and heart that give him pre-eminent fitness for such a place.

How this Chautauqua idea is growing! Chautauquas are multiplying in all sections of our land. The educational value of these institutions is great. Through their agency thousands receive an impetus in the direction of intellectual development whose force is incalculable. What a pity that they are not appreciated as they should be! How lamentable that thousands in our midst who can afford a summer vacation choose to spend that vacation amid the inanities and trivialities of some fashionable watering-place, when with far less expense they might spend it at one of these Chautauquas, where they would have intellectual as well as physical recreation. Parents who desire that their children shall be something more than butterflies of fashion and devotees of pleasure, should abandon the fashionable watering-place, and procure a cottage at one of these Chautauquas. To hear a bright, entertaining, instructive lecture often forms an era in the life of a sprightly boy or girl. It awakens intellectual energies and aspirations which otherwise might remain dormant, and thus affects the entire after-life. Then, too, the moral atmosphere of such a place is healthful, stimulating and invigorating.

The Chautauquan goes home from his vacation with keener moral perceptions and loftier moral aspirations than when he left. Somehow his whole moral life has been lifted to a loftier plane. Who can say as much for those crowded fashionable summer resorts, whose chief attractions are billiards, progressive euchre, and "hugging set to music?" W. C. BLACK.

Commendatory of Our Governor.

Through Rev. James J. Billingsley we have received the following account of the action taken by the Buffalo District of the Genesee Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, commending the action of Gov. Nicholls and his recent Lottery veto and other matters. We gladly place it before our readers.

To His Excellency, Gov. F. T. Nicholls, of Louisiana—Greeting:

Dear Governor:

Whereas, We, as a body, the Buffalo (N. Y.) District of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in session at Delaware Avenue, have seen and heard of the manly and courageous attitude of Gov. Nicholls in opening the doors of Louisiana to receive aid for the colored sufferers during the flood from willing sister States, while governors of some other States refused the proffered help; And, whereas, He has so righteously and indignantly refused the money of the Louisiana Lottery Company; And, whereas; He has so resolutely vetoed the Lottery bill; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we do hereby, in the common interests of humanity, and with personal regard, express our appreciation of his acts and commend his heroism.

REV. W. E. SHINN,
REV. L. E. ROCKWELL,
REV. BENJ. COPELAND,
Committee.

BUFFALO, New York, July 14.

Comparative Statistics.

The report at the late Baptist Convention at Columbus, Miss., showed the following statistics as regards the Baptist Church in Mississippi: Churches in the State, 166 (this surely must be a mistake—ED.); ministers, 625; baptized during the year, 4,068; number of members, 80,607. This does not include colored churches and members. According to the Minutes of the two Methodist Conferences, there are in Mississippi, Methodist Churches, 913; ministers, 627; adults baptized during the year, 3,412; number of members, 75,038. What an immense power for good there ought to be in such an army of the Lord! One hundred and fifty thousand earnest Christians ought to drive the devil out of Mississippi and keep him out for all time to come.

A Plan for a Cheaper Paper.

In the report made to our District Conference at Potts' Camp by the Committee on Books and Periodicals, there was a plan suggested for a more general circulation of our connectional and Conference organs. Let Dr. Barbee send the Nashville Christian Advocate for one dollar to everyone who is taking or will take his own Conference organ. This would certainly increase the circulation of both. Please give publicity to this plan. Whether it is accepted or not, it can be fully ventilated by our next General Conference. Something must be done to increase the circulation of our church papers, and I can think of nothing else which would work so harmoniously. Yours fraternally,

J. W. HONNOLL.

HOLLY SPRINGS, July 25.

Notes.

The "Louisiana Larceny Company" is the ugly name some people give to our coddled pet!

"It is the traditional policy of Methodism to show sufficient flexibility to do whatever is at any time deemed best for the interests of the church."

Robertson, the great English preacher, said that the highest duty of the Christian minister is to bring his hearers to Christ, and then himself to disappear.

Interior:

"And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me." To lift up a caricature of Christ, and denounce men as depraved because they are not attracted by it, is only to make religion ridiculous and hateful.

Herbert Spencer has this:

If women comprehended all that is contained in the domestic sphere, they would ask no other. If they could see all that is implied in the right education of children, to a full comprehension of which no man has yet risen, much less any woman, they would seek no higher function.

Our people in Los Angeles are moving in the matter of an episcopal residence in their city for Bishop Fitzgerald. They have had several meetings on the subject, and are in correspondence with the Bishop. We hope they will succeed.

Ram's Horn:

Away down deep in every human heart is something that makes one long at times to trample the cares of earth under foot and pillow the head on the clouds; but an opportunity to make a dollar with apparent ease will bring the average man back to earth with a suddenness that nothing else in life can eclipse.

One individual church somewhere in the West recently dedicated four-fifths of the house to the Lord, the other fifth not having been paid for. It is good to be particular about what you consecrate to God; but we don't believe the Lord ever yet accepted a fractional part of anything, not even of a human heart or life!

Somebody has said that if ten dollars were involved in the solution, many mathematicians would not be able to see that the sum of the three angles of a triangle are equal to two right angles. What a commentary on covetousness! Afterwhile the world and the church will learn that Paul spoke truly about the love of money!

The Woman's Missionary Advocate comes robed in an entire new dress made up in the new and latest style. We like this charge. It is a decided improvement. The contents are as interesting as ever. It still holds itself at the old price—fifty cents a year. Let all our Christian women subscribe for this monthly, and thus keep up with the growing work of our Woman's Board of Missions.

The Louisiana women are coming to the front in the fight against the Lottery. Some of them have sharpened their pencils and are speaking brave words through the columns of the New Delta, of this city, and the Caucasian, of Shreveport, and in some other papers. We recognize this fact as a "good sign." John A. may now prepare to

"Fold his tent like the Arabs
And silently steal away."

Look at our school advertisements, will you? Did you ever see anything like it in any other paper? It is a real study, that fifth page! Schools for girls and boys, young women and young men—schools of every grade; and if your children are not educated, it will not be because the ADVOCATE has not brought the subject before you and pointed out the school you should patronize.

The editors of the Missionary Review of the World, published by Funk & Wagnalls, make the following prize offer: For the best contribution to the Review, "giving examples from modern missionary history of the unmistakable interposition of God in answer to prayer and in behalf of his servants and their work," one hundred dollars, and for the second best, fifty dollars. The articles must contain ten such examples, brief and telling, duly authenticated, and must not exceed 3,000 words. Can not some of our readers win those prizes?

The iniquitous Louisiana Lottery bill is settled as far as the Legislature is concerned. Failing in the Senate to pass it over Gov. Nicholls' veto, its advocates passed a resolution denying the Governor's right to veto an amendment to the Constitution. This throws it into the courts. If Gov. Nicholls be sustained, morality and right has conquered. If not, it is probable that for another series of years this abominable fraud will ply its trade. The bribe will be too much for Louisiana voters.—Raleigh Christian Advocate.

The inference is unjust to our people. Having just made a tour through a large part of the State, we are confident that the anti-Lottery sentiment has greatly strengthened since the people have learned somewhat of the unprecedented methods that obtained in the Legislature. On all sides their indignation is deep and growing deeper. If it ever comes to a popular vote, the Lottery is gone forever.

Personal and Otherwise.

Rev. H. W. Featherstun is now in charge of Edward McGehee College for Girls, Woodville, Miss. We have received the "announcement" of said school, and wish Bro. F. even larger success than he achieved with Kavanaugh College.

Miss Mary L. Smithey, Miss Helen Richardson and Miss Fannie Hinds have been appointed by Bishop Wilson to labor in the China Mission.

Rev. William M. Hayes has been appointed by the College of Bishops commissioner of education for Paine and Lane Institutes. The Wesleyan speaks of him as "a ready speaker, genial in manner, and of fine spirit."

Rev. J. W. Malone, our pastor at Minter City and Strathmore, Miss., has done so well this year, that his appreciative people have voted him a month's vacation, which he will spend in North Georgia, visiting relatives and attending the Piedmont Chautauqua.

The Meridian District Conference passed a resolution recommending that the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE be removed to Jackson, Miss. The Holly Springs District Conference passed a resolution that the paper be published simultaneously at Jackson, Miss., and New Orleans, and that an editor reside in each place.

Senator Gibson has our thanks for a copy of his speech delivered in the United States Senate, July 11, on "The American Merchant Marine."

Gov. Nicholls has appointed Hon. W. H. Jack, of Natchitoches, superintendent of public education in Louisiana. Mr. Jack is a prominent lawyer and a prominent Baptist, and, doubtless, will make a good superintendent.

The churches in Shreveport are holding open-air union meetings in the Court-House Square every Sunday night.

Bishop Fitzgerald is to write the life of Bishop McTyeire.

The Central Methodist says: "The man who can not, in his own estimation, beat any editor he ever read after editing a paper is yet to be found, unless it be one who has tried it."

Absence from the office is the reason that a new paper, The Way of Faith, edited by Rev. L. L. Pickett, has not been mentioned. Bro. Pickett starts upon the editorial sea with sails well filled. May he "sail steady with an upright keel!"

Dr. Saunders favors us with the catalogue of Martin Female College, Pulaski, Tenn., of which he is now president. Dr. Saunders did good work for our church at Meridian, as president of East Mississippi Female College, and we commend him heartily to the Tennesseeans.

Ram's Horn:

An old colored man said he could talk more religion in five minutes than he could live in two weeks, no matter how hard he tried. The old man has lots of company.

Rev. J. T. Nicholson writes from Edwards, Miss.: "Our third quarterly meeting commenced here on last Saturday, July 19. Bro. Little was greeted by a good congregation, and gave them an impressive sermon. The Quarterly Conference was called to order at two o'clock P. M. The reports showed that our cause is prospering. Bro. John W. Crisler was licensed to preach. On Sunday morning Rev. A. F. Watkins preached an excellent sermon on Christian Education, after which $544 was cheerfully subscribed for the endowment of Millsaps College. May the agent leave as pleasant impressions everywhere as he left here!"

MISSISSIPPI STATE SUNDAY-SCHOOL CONVENTION.

The eleventh annual meeting of the Mississippi State Sunday-school Convention will be held in the city of Vicksburg on August 5 and 6, 1890.

Each county Sunday-school Convention is entitled to two delegates, and each regular Sunday-school of any Protestant denomination to one delegate. It is earnestly desired that every county in the State be represented. Ministers of all denominations are honorary members of the convention.

Leading Sunday-school workers will be present to make the meeting interesting and instructive, and a programme of exercises will be promulgated as soon as possible.

It is expected that reduced fare will be obtained from the railroads, and entertainment will be provided for all who attend.

JNO. T. BUCK,
Chair'n Ex. Com.

"That our daughters may be as corner-stones polished after the similitude of a palace." This is the motto of Hardin College, of Mexico, Mo. The college owes its existence to gifts amounting to $62,500, from ex.-Gov. Hardin, and, under the directions he gave, the property has increased to the value of $129,700, and not one cent of debt. The new catalogue is very handsome, and shows an enrollment last year of nearly 150 pupils.

Church in Japan.

A brother in Homer, La., offered to be one of one hundred to give $15 to build a church this year in Japan, and to give $10 a year for four years to support it. This has been answered by one brother from Moss Point, Miss.

In the Open Air.

It was my good fortune, on Monday night, to take part in the open-air service held at Keller Market Square. It was, indeed, gratifying to be given the chance of preaching to the people there gathered. I found the meeting in charge of Bros. Vail, Blen and Harrison, with organist and cornetist, and also a number of ladies and gentlemen as participants in the praying and in the singing, which was energetically and ably led by Bro. Sam Bench. A great many persons of all sizes, ages and of the two colors had come out; excellent order was maintained, and it was truly delightful to talk to such an orderly, well-behaved and deeply interested audience.

Much good is being done by those who have given themselves to this special work. There is in connection with this preaching services a mission school which is in a flourishing condition. From what I saw that Monday night, and from what I know of the Christian men and women at work out there, I feel that I can heartily recommend the Keller Market open-air meetings to the sympathy, prayers and material help of all Christians who would lend a hand towards reaching for Christ the perishing multitudes of this wicked city. Let such meetings as these be started in all the neglected quarters of New Orleans.

Alas! like the measles broken out on a human body, so there are hundreds of saloons and lottery shops spotting the body of the Crescent City, and scarcely a block above or below Canal Street is free from them. We will be getting a piece out on the road to success in giving Christ to the masses, when we have downed forever the John A. Morris Lottery and all others, have had the Sunday law rigidly enforced, and have gotten out of the barracks and gone into the streets and squares and hedges and lanes of the city with "the glorious gospel of the blessed God."

Those humble workers for God, those earnest soul-seekers, those consecrated men and women out at Keller Market Square should not ask in vain for needed spiritual and money backing at the hands of the evangelical churches of New Orleans. Go out brother, sister, and see them work, and work with them, next Monday or Friday night.

JOHN T. SAWYER.

NOW the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect in every good work, to do his will, working in you that which is well-pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ; to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen.—Hebrews xiii, 20, 21.

BUT if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.—I. John i, 7.

THE SAND-MAN.

Come, little girl, put by your things,
The Sand-man comes this way.
He'll soon pass by,
And you and I
Will feel the spell he brings,
And say,
Sleep till break of day.

Dolly is sleepy, watch her head,
The Sand-man's on the way,
She can not sigh,
Nor droop her eye,
She gives a nod instead
To say,
Sleep till break of day.

Ah, there he goes! I caught him there
As he came down this way;
By yawn and sigh,
And sleepy eye,
I'd know his face again—
Ani say,
Sleep till break of day.

The Sour Pucker.

"Was it pleasant, as you thought it would be?" asked mother, as Mabel came in from a school exhibition.

"Oh, yes, it was splendid," answered the little girl; "I should like to see it all over again."

The mother listened attentively as Mabel described all she had seen. Then, looking tenderly at her, she said, "But I am very sorry, my dear, that you had so poor a seat."

"Why, mother! what do you mean? Who told you I didn't have a good seat?"

"Oh, I heard about it. A great many who were there knew it."

"Mother! I don't understand! I never spoke to a single person from the time I went in till I came out—not one. To be sure I didn't have a good seat at all, but I never complained. I got along the best way I could, and managed to see it all. Who could have told you such a thing?"

"Our tongues don't tell all the tales that are told, Mabel dear. Our faces talk sometimes, don't you know?"

The child was speechless, and mother went on: "Uncle George was in just now and told me he was sorry you had so poor a seat, but he could not get at you; and when I asked him how he knew it, he said, 'Oh, anyone could read it in her face; she had on her sour pucker!'

"The face talks! Indeed it does! And many a secret thought is revealed by this mischievous little tell-tale," added mother.—Selected.

KEEP YOUR TEMPER.—"I never can keep anything?" cried Emma, almost stamping with vexation. "Somebody always takes my things and loses them." She had mislaid some of her sewing implements.

"There is one thing," remarked mama, "that I thiuk you might keep, if you would try."

"I should like to keep even one thing," answered Emma.

"Well, then, my dear," resumed mama, "keep your temper; if you will only do that, perhaps you will find it easy to keep other things. I dare say, if you had employed your time in searching for the missing articles, you might have found them before this time; but you have not even looked for them. You have only got into a passion—a bad way of spending time—and you have accused somebody, and unjustly too, of taking away your things and losing them. Keep your temper, my dear; when you have missed any article, keep your temper and search for it. You had better keep your temper, if you lose all the little property you possess. So, my dear, I repeat, keep your temper."

Emma subdued her ill humor, searched for the articles she had lost and found them in her work-bag.

"Why, mama, here they are! I might have been sewing all this time if I had kept my temper."

IT'S VERY HARD.—"It's very hard to have nothing to eat but porridge, when others have every sort of dainty," muttered Charlie, as he sat with his bowl before him.

"It's very hard to have to get up so early these bitter cold mornings, and work hard all day, when others can enjoy themselves without labor. It's very hard to have to trudge along through the snow, while others roll about in their coaches!"

"It's a great blessing," said his grandmother, as she sat at her knitting, "to have food when so many are hungry; it's a great blessing to have a roof over our heads when so many are homeless; it's a great blessing to have sight and hearing, and strength for daily labor, when so many are blind, deaf or suffering."

"Why, grandmother, you seem to think that nothing is hard," said the boy, still in a grumbling tone.

"No, Charlie; there is one thing I think is very hard."

"What's that?" cried Charlie, who thought that at last his grandmother had found some cause for complaint.

"Why, boy, I think that heart is very hard that is not thankful for so many blessings!"—Selected.

WHAT A LITTLE GIRL DID.—A good many years ago a little girl of twelve years was passing an old brick prison in the city of Chicago, on her way to school, when she saw a hand beckoning to her from behind a cell-window, and heard a weary voice asking her to please bring him something to read.

For many weeks after that she went to the prison every Sunday, carrying the poor prisoner a book to read from her father's library. At last one day she was called to his death-bed.

"Little girl," said he, "you have saved my soul. Promise me that you will do all your life for the poor people in prison what you have done for me."

The little girl promised; and she has kept her promise. Linda Gilbert has been all her life the steadfast friend of the prisoner. She has established good libraries in many prisons, and visited and helped hundreds of prisoners; and from the great number whom she has helped, six hundred are now leading honest lives. Prisoners from all parts of the country know and love her name; and surely the God of prisoners must look upon her work with interest.

And all this because a little girl heard and heeded the call to help a suffering soul.—The Home.

ABOUT THE ALLIGATOR.—An observer down South says an alligator's throat is an animated sewer. Everything that lodges in his open mouth goes down. He is a lazy dog, and instead of hunting for something to eat, he lets his victuals hunt him—that is, he lies with his great mouth open, apparently dead, like the 'possum. Soon a bug crawls into his mouth, then a fly, then several gnats and a colony of mosquitoes. The alligator does not shut his mouth yet. He is waiting for a whole drove of things. He does his eating by the wholesale. A little later a lizard cools himself under the shade of the upper jaw. Then a few frogs will hop up to catch the mosquitoes. Then more mosquitoes and gnats will light on the frogs. Finally, a whole village of insects and reptiles settles down for an afternoon picnic. Then all at once there is an earthquake. The big jaw falls, the alligator blinks one eye, gulps down the entire menagerie, and opens his great door again for more visitors.—Scientific American.

ADVICE TO BOYS.—Horace Mann gives this bit of advice to boys: "You are made to be kind, boys—generous, magnanimous. If there is a boy in school who has a club-foot, don't let him know you ever saw it. If there is a boy with ragged clothes, don't talk about rags in his hearing. If there is a lame boy, assign him some part of the game that doesn't require running. If there is a hungry one, give him part of your dinner. If there is a dull one, help him to get his lessons. If there is a bright one, be not envious of him; for if one boy is proud of his talents and another is envious of them, there are two great wrongs, and no more talent than before. If a larger or stronger boy has injured you, and he is sorry for it, forgive him. All the school will show by their countenances how much better it is than to have a great fuss. And remember who said 'Love your enemies,' and 'Bless them that curse you.'"

Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar has made a name and record in the past fifty years that is enviable. Thousands of people having tried it for coughs, colds, catarrh, asthma, bronchitis and consumption know its value, and would not be without it. Why? Because it cures where other remedies fail. We recommend it for children subject to croup and whooping-cough. It will give relief and cause speedy cure. The medical profession recognize it, and physicians frequently prescribe it for lung troubles. These facts have pushed Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar to the front rank. It is the best remedy for coughs, colds, all throat and lung affections, and no family should be without it. One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as a 50c. bottle.

The only reliable vegetable substitute for calomel, which acts on the liver, blood, kidneys and stomach, and best anti-bilious purgative is Maguire's Cundurango. Endorsed by Archbishop Ryan, of Philadelphia; Rev. McNally, of St. Louis, and a host of prominent people.

Household.

A SUNSHINY HUSBAND.—A sunshiny husband makes a merry, beautiful home, worth having, worth working for. If a man is breezy, cheery, considerate and sympathetic, his wife sings in her heart over her puddings and her mending basket, counts the hours till he returns at night, and renews her youth in the security she feels of his approbation and admiration. You may think it weak or childish, if you please, but it is the admired wife who hears words of praise and receives smiles of recommendation, who is capable, discreet and executive. I have seen a timid, meek, self-distrusting little body fairly bloom into strong, self-reliant womanhood, under the tonic and the cordial of companionship with a husband who really went out of his way to find occasion for showing her how fully he trusted her judgment, and how tenderly he deferred to her opinion. In home life there should be no jar, no striving for place, no insisting on prerogatives, or division of interest. The husband and the wife are each the complement of the other. And it is just as much his duty to be cheerful as it is hers to be patient; his right to bring joy into the door as it is hers to sweep and garnish the pleasant interior. A family where the daily walk of the father makes life a festival is filled with something like heavenly benediction.—Selected.

TRAIN THE GIRLS.—When a girl is ten years old, she should be given household duties to perform according to her size and strength, for which a sum of money should be paid her weekly. She needs a little pocket money, and the knowledge of how to spend it judiciously, which can so well be given by a mother to her little girl. She should be required to furnish a part of her wardrobe with this money. For instance, if she gets ten cents a week, she should purchase all her stockings, or all her gloves, as her mother may decide; and, doing this under her mother's supervision, she will soon learn to trade with judgment and economy. Of course, the mother will see that the sum is sufficient to do this, and yet leave a trifle for the child to spend as she pleases. This will supply a healthy stimulus; it will give her a proper ambition and pride in her labor, and the ability to use money properly. As she grows older these household duties should be increased, with the proportionate increase of money paid for the performance of them. We know a lady who divides the wages of a servant among her three daughters. There is a systematic arrangement of her labor, which is done with a thoroughness and alacrity rarely found, either with a hired girl or daughter who feels that she has to do it with nothing to encourage or stimulate her in the work.—Selected.

A KIND WORD.—A kind word costs but little, but it may bless all day the one to whom it is spoken. Nay, have not kind words been spoken to you which have lived in your heart through years, and borne fruit of joy and hope? Let us speak kindly to one another. We have burdens and worries, but let us not, therefore, rasp and irritate those near us, those we love, those Christ would have us to save. Speak kindly in the morning; it lightens the cares of the day, and makes the household and all its affairs move along smoothly. Speak kindly at night, for it may be before dawn some loved one may finish his or her space of life for this world, and it will be too late to ask forgiveness.—The Sunlight.

TOLEDO, O., Jan. 10, 1887.

Messrs. F. J. Cheney & Co.—

Gentlemen: I have been in the general practice of medicine for most 40 years, and would say that in all my practice and experience have never seen a preparation that I could prescribe with as much confidence of success as I can Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by you. Have prescribed it a great many times and its effect is wonderful, and would say in conclusion that I have yet to find a case of Catarrh that it would not cure, if they would take it according to directions. Yours truly,

How Electricity Is Measured.

BY PROF. ED. L. NICHOLS.

The measurement of electricity has long since been brought to a high degree of precision, but the conditions under which the currents used in electric lighting must be measured are entirely different from those employed in the laboratory. The requirements are a cheap, automatic and reliable apparatus, capable of acting without supervision for a considerable time. One of the simplest forms of the electric meter depends upon the chemical action of the current. When the electric current is caused to flow through a vessel containing the solution of any salt, the only way in which it can find passage, is by decomposing the compound into its constituent parts. The molecules of those compounds which in chemistry are called salts, are complex. They are formed by the union of two distinct groups of atoms. One of these groups is called the acid radical, the other consists of one or more of the atoms of some metal. The affinity which the acid radical and the metallic atoms possess for each other is considerable, and in order to separate them a definite amount of energy must be expended. When the salt is dissolved in water, and the solution forms the path of an electric current, a portion of the salt is broken up into the two groups just mentioned. The metal set free from its acid radical partner, appears in its own natural metallic form at the point where the current leaves the solution. The acid radical appears simultaneously at the other terminal where the current enters the solution, where it either attacks the substance of which the terminal is formed, or, failing in that, decomposes some molecule of water. In this process electric energy is expended, and the amount of metal set free at the negative pole of the elec-tro-lytic cell affords a perfectly definite measure of the quantity of the current which has been transmitted.

The choice of metals is limited to two or three well-known types, for although almost any metallic salt may be decomposed by the current, those only are suitable for the purpose, of which the deposited metal will remain in the solution without being corroded or redissolved. The metal must, morever, form an adherent coating upon the surface of the electrode, so that the latter can be removed from the cell, and washed and dried, without loss of weight; and almost the only voltameters in which these conditions are fulfilled, even approximately, are those in which silver is deposited from a solution of nitrate of silver, copper from the sulphate of copper, or zinc from the sulphate of zinc.—Chautauquan.

UNKNOWN SENSATIONS.—Sound is the sensation produced on us when the vibrations of the air strike on the drum of our ear. When there are few the sound is deep; as they increase in number, it becomes shriller and shriller; but when they reach forty thousand in a second they cease to be audible. Light is the effect produced on us when waves of light strikes the eye. When four hundred millions of millions of vibrations of ether strike the retina in a second, they produce red, and as the number increases, the color passes into orange, then yellow, green, blue and violet. But between forty thousand vibrations in a second and four hundred millions of millions we have no organ of sense capable of receiving the impression. Yet between these limits any number of sensations may exist. We have five senses, and sometimes fancy that no others are possible. Moreover, looking at the question from the other side, we find in animals complex organs of sense, richly supplied with nerves, but the function of which we are as yet powerless to explain. There may be fifty other senses as different from ours as sound is from sight; and even within the boundaries of our own senses there may be endless sounds which we can not hear, and colors as different as red from green, of which we have no conception. These and a thousand other questions remain for solution. The familiar world which surrounds us may be a totally different place to other animals. To them it may be full of music which we can not hear, of color which we can not see, of sensation which we can not conceive.—Pop. Science Monthly.

GRATUITOUS ADVICE.

This species of advice is not always acceptable, but in many instances much benefit would be derived were it acted upon. No section of the country is exempt from disease. To know the best means of combatting this common enemy, with the least injury to our pockets and tastes, is certainly a great advantage. We must expect Torpid Liver, Congested Spleen, Vitiated Bile and Inactive Bowels, and all prudent persons will supply themselves with Tutt's Pills, which stimulate the Liver, relieve the engorged Spleen, determine a healthy flow of Bile, thus regulating the bowels and causing all unhealthy secretions to pass off in a natural manner. "An ounce of preventive is worth a pound of cure." Be advised and use

Missionary.

One Thousand Men For China.

I send you herewith a copy of an appeal sent out by the Missionary General Conference, hold in Shanghai in May, to the Protestant Churches of Europe and America, for one thousand men for China within the next five years.

This appeal is timely. The men are needed. The churches of Europe and America are abundantly able to send the men in the time specified. The way is open for them to enter in. All China is open and waiting for the gospel. Who will go? I am sure, from what I have seen and heard in the past few weeks, that there are many well-qualified young men and women in our church who are willing to go as missionaries, if the church through her constituted authorities will call and send them. Some of the older preachers, who are now making successful pastors, have told me that they were ready in their younger years to go as missionaries, but they were not called by the church. There ought to be some way to get at such cases. Let the Bishops, the presiding elders, and the missionary secretaries lay their hands on the properly qualified men wherever they find them throughout the church, and bring them forward as candidates for the mission field; and let the men, so called, have laid upon their consciences the responsibility of obeying or refusing the call.

Why may not individual churches, or individual Sunday-schools, or wealthy individual members, or Annual Conferences undertake the support of one or more missionaries in foreign fields? It can be, and is being done. Others, many others, can and ought to do it. The Missouri Conference Sunday-school Convention, in Chillicothe, pledged the Sunday-schools of the Missouri Conference to the support of Bro. Brown, who goes to China next fall, and the Sunday-school at Fayette is going to support another missionary for China. So here we have two men provided for by the Sunday-schools of the Missouri Conference. Other Conferences and other Sunday-schools and individual churches ought to follow their example.

How many of the one thousand shall the Southern Methodist Church furnish? Would fifty be too small a proportion? It is certainly not too large. We claim nearly 1,200,000 members. This is one-twenty-fifth of the 30,000,000 Protestants in the world. According to this ratio 40 would be our share. But as we are one of the strongest and richest Protestant Churches in the world, we can easily send 50 men, and we can not afford to undertake a smaller share of the work. Bro. Reid writes me that the General Conference of Missionaries was a most enthusiastic gathering. Everybody went away full of hope and courage for the future of mission work in China. Several important steps of a practical nature were taken. Among them were the following: A plan for the union of the five Presbyterian bodies represented in China; a plan for a China Methodist Union, in order to more effective co-operation of the various Methodist Churches in China; the further development of the school and text-book series; a plan to secure a standard version of the Bible in Chinese for all the missions in China; a united call for lay missionaries as evangelists, teachers, and physicians; the call for one thousand men for China, etc.

Thus we see that those on the field and fully acquainted with the work in all its phases, its difficulties and successes, so far from being discouraged, are full of faith and hope, and are developing more practical and comprehensive plans, and calling deliberately and unitedly for more men and means to do the work and do it speedily. Let every man and woman in the Southern Methodist Church respond to this call, and as God gives them the opportunity and the means, let them go or send.

After supplying the twenty men, or thereabouts, that are needed to man our present mission in China, we ought to open another mission in one of the many still destitute regions of that vast empire. We will by no means have done our duty as a great Protestant Church to China, when we, with the help of other missionaries, shall have evangelized the southern end of the Kiang-su province and the northern end of the Chehkiang province. We must go into the regions beyond and establish another mission and do our part in a comprehensive plan for the evangelization of the whole empire.

A. P. PARKER.

The following is the appeal:

TO ALL PROTESTANT CHURCHES OF CHRISTIAN LANDS.

Dear Brethren in Christ: We, the General Conference of Protestant Missionaries in China, having just made a special appeal to you for a largely increased force of ordained missionaries to preach the gospel throughout the length and breadth of this great land—to plant churches, to educate native ministers and helpers, to create a Christian literature, and in general to engage in and direct the supreme work of Christian evangelization, and;

Having also just made a special appeal to you for a largely increased force of unordained men, evangelists, teachers and physicians—to travel far and wide, distributing books and preaching to masses, to lend a strong helping hand in the great work of Christian education, and to exhibit to China the benevolent side of Christianity in the work of healing the sick;

Therefore, we do now appeal to you, the Protestant Churches of Christian lands, to send to China in response to these calls one thousand men within five years from this time.

We make this appeal in behalf of three hundred millions of unevangelized heathen; we make it with all the earnestness of our whole hearts; as men overwhelmed with the magnitude and responsibility of the work before us; we make it with unwavering faith in the power of a risen Savior to call men into his vineyard, and to open the hearts of those who are his stewards to send out and support them, and we shall not cease to cry mightily to him that he will do this thing, and that our eyes may see it. Speculation and the Greed of Gain.

The success which is brought to light every few days of some wily schemer who has filled his pockets at the expense of his trusting victims need occasion no surprise. He understands human nature, and has only appealed to that greed for gain which has been a leading characteristic of the race in all the ages. The original tempter succeeded in his nefarious enterprise by promising universal knowledge for a single act of disobedience. Eat the apple and be as a god, was the proposition to which the first fair woman is said to have yielded, and the thing "to be desired" in the eyes of all her posterity has been a magnificent acquisition at a trifling outlay. The greater the disproportion between the proposed cost and the promised return the more seductive the offer becomes. An invitation to invest a thousand and increase it ten per cent. excites little attention; but a chance to invest the ten and thereby gain a thousand will fill the not every time it is cast.

A friend of ours had invented a little machine that would be very useful if it could be produced and sold at a small cost, but he lacked the means to engage in its manufacture. He sought everywhere in vain for some one who would place a little capital at his disposal, with the most ample security in the offer of a division of the profits certain to be a fair return of interest on the investment. While he was thus meeting with refusal and discouragement a smart rogue was selling to the same people who gave him the cold shoulder large blocks of stock in a bogus enterprise that promised 300 per cent. gain every three months. In every case of swindling the temptation is one and the same. The "green goods" man offers $1,000 of his currency for $350, and asks his victim why others should prey on the community and grow rich while the one he addresses as his "friend" plods on wearily, giving 100 cents in labor and sweat for every dollar he acquires. The form is as multifarious as the outlines in nature, but the essence is identical in all.

The greed to which it appeals is sometimes restrained, but it is never wholly wanting. Some have learned by bitter experience not to trust the glittering deceit, and a few are held back by a higher law that has the mastery of them. But the great bulk of mankind is in the market and waiting for the onslaught of the serpent. A worn-out swindler who had spent his whole life in a course of deceit was asked what he had learned that would help him most if he could run his career again. He answered that he had found out how big a fool he was in underestimating the gullibility of others. If he had only known at the outset the capacious swallow of the smartest and shrewdest he approached, he would have increased a thousandfold the magnitude of his schemes and retired with a fortune at the close of his first year.

To get without expensive giving; to put a penny in the slot and run the chance, no matter how slender, of lifting the bar and pocketing a guinea; to fill one's coffers without the dripping brow, the blistered hands, the aching sinews, and all that marks the years of patient toil; to acquire a fortune on the turning of a die or the revolution of a wheel; to dodge the prevalent law and grow rich by a guess or a fortunate wager; to gamble for wealth that is not earned and obtain it by a lucky venture—these are the most plausible of all the forms of guile that lure men to their ruin. The hunger for such coveted possessions takes little account of the character of the means proposed for its satisfaction. It does not stop to consider that this greed is a robber seeking to despoil another of his possessions. The less the equivalent it is asked to give for the good it desires the more tempting is the opportunity. From the boy who searches along the street for a treasure of some kind he hopes to find, to the speculator, who puts out his contracts in the expectation of a margin that shall swell his gains into the millions, the aching heart of the one who loses is never once considered. "How fortunate!" says the urchin who picks up the coin some one still poorer may have dropped. "How lucky!" exclaims the dealer in options and futures when a turn in the market pours the treasure into his lap, leaving the wretch on the other side desolate and starving. Can peace and comfort dwell with such unearned acquisitions?

The successful side of the venture is miserable enough. The pocket that is full of treasure grasped with no rendered equivalent holds a gnawing cancer that no sophistry can appease. But the victims, the dishonored trusts, the desolate homes, the fools beguiled to their ruin, these make part of every case; and this fact is too easily forgotten. In all legitimate trade there is at least a chance that both parties may profit by the bargain. But in speculative gambling one or more must lose all that the winners gain. For every smile there is a tear, for every shout of exultation there is a wail of misery; in each game some one must sit in the ashes of buried hopes. We would say of speculation, and the tempting offer of every wily schemer, what the wise man says of contention, "Let it alone before it be meddled with."—New York Journal of Commerce.

GRANT'S FURNITURE STORE

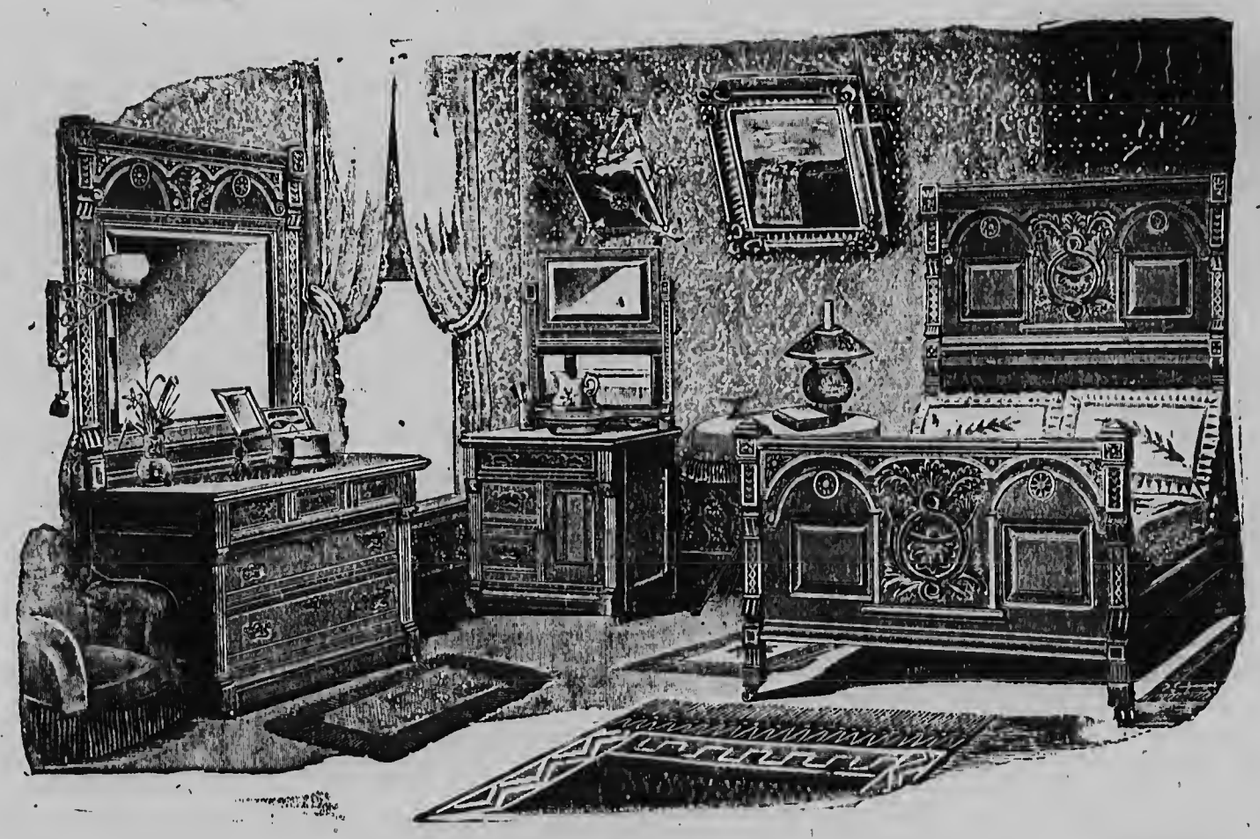
NEW STORE, AT 114 Camp St. NEW ORLEANS. NEXT DOOR TO ADVOCATE OFFICE.

BEAUTIFUL PARLOR GOODS.

I have one entire floor devoted to the display of these goods alone, and have over sixty different varieties to select from. Complete Suits anywhere from $35 to $650, and odd pieces—such as Sofas, Divans, Easy Chairs, Patent Rockers, Window and Reception Chairs—at as low prices in proportion as the Complete Suits. I have these goods in Cherry, Mahogany and Walnut, and can give you your choice of any of the following coverings: Crushed, Embossed, Plain and Silk Plushes, Hair Cloth, Mohair, Raw and Spun Silks, Satins, English Tapestries, French Valours, Petit Point, Brocatelle or Damasks. I make a specialty of these goods, have many of the patterns made specially for my own trade, and can offer a greater variety at lower prices than any other house in the South.

NEW STOCK

In all departments, and every grade of goods, from the cheapest to the most expensive, in endless variety. I have all the latest and most fashionable designs, and, as I have only purchased from factories whose goods I have been selling for the past six years, can and do guarantee every piece of Furniture that leaves my establishment.



LOW PRICES

are the order of the day, and I propose to sell strictly reliable goods at a lower price than has ever before been quoted in the South. My store has long been known as "The Cheapest Furniture House in New Orleans," and this season I intend to add to the reputation it has gained in this respect. I only ask a chance to save you money.

HANDSOME BEDROOM SUITS.

A very extensive assortment of these goods in every style; and whether you wish to pay $40 for a Complete Suit of twelve pieces, or from that price anywhere up to $1,000, I can sell you what you require. I have these goods in Black Walnut, Natural and Dark Cherry, and Natural and Dark Mahogany, or in imitation of any of these woods, and can furnish the very latest, neatest and most artistic designs.

I have also a large and carefully selected stock of Hall, Library, Dining-room and Kitchen Furniture; Reed, Rattan and Wicker Chairs, Rockers, Lounges and Cribs; Brackets, What-nots, Easels, Music Stands and Fancy Top Tables; Carpets, Carpet Strips, Matting, Shades, Curtains, Curtain Poles, and everything necessary to furnish a house completely throughout.

LARGE SALES.

I have a large city trade, and am shipping goods extensively to every Southern State. My country trade has increased very rapidly during the past year, and the facilities which my new store affords me for carrying a larger and better stock will enable me to still further extend it, and to give complete satisfaction to my customers.

Vacation.

If you have made your plans for vacation, look them carefully over and see if they include a supply of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. The pure air in the country or by the sea-side with the change in diet will be beneficial, but to make the most of the time given you for rest, take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It will quicken the appetite, insure perfect digestion, remove from the blood all debilitating, life-destroying humors, and supply the system with the electric element of health, energy, and strength.

China Grove Camp Meeting.

The camp meeting at China Grove, Pike county, Miss, will commence the Friday before the fourth Sunday in August (22nd). Preachers and people are cordially invited to attend. The expenses of the preachers attending the meeting will be paid, and a hack will leave Magnolia on Friday morning for the camp ground; but a conveyance will be furnished them at any time.

J. M. PUGH, Pastor.

Monteagle Assembly and Summer Schools.

EIGHTH ANNUAL SESSION, JULY 1 to AUGUST 25, 1890.

Assembly Park open to Summer Residents from June 1.

MONTEAGLE, TENN., widely known as the "Southern Chautauqua," is on a mountain plateau or spur of the lower Cumberlands, reached by mountain railway, one hour from Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis R. R. at Cowan, Tenn.

Rising 2,000 feet above the sea level, dry, pure air, no malaria, no mosquitos, magnificent scenery and abundance of pure spring water, it is the great natural sanitarium of the Southwest.

With 100 acres of picturesque, wooded heights enclosed; with improved water-works, sewerage, daily mails, telegraph, public buildings, and near 100 cottages; with the annual Assembly Platform and Summer Schools, affording a continual feast, it is a quiet "lodge in the wilderness," having all the world within call.

Parties desiring cottages for the summer should make early application.

For full particulars as to rates, advantages, etc., or any information desired, address,

F. H. PEEBLES, Gen'l M'g'r,
Monteagle, Tenn.

The Clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders.

The Episcopal Diocese, of New York, has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and the Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

A Lottery bill has been reported to the House by the Postoffice Committee, and is a substitute for all pending measures. It provides, among other things, for the exclusion from the mails of any newspaper, pamphlet or other publication containing an advertisement of any lottery or gift enterprise. A similar bill has been considered by a Senate committee, and will probably be reported in a few days.

Attorney General Dillard, of Dakota, has rendered a decision that a maintenance of a place where liquor is drunk is violation of the law, and the seller must prove that he is not violating the law.

The town of Lawronce, Mass., was laid waste by a cyclone on July 26. Over a hundred houses on the main streets were wrecked. Many lives were lost, and a number of persons injured. Damage to property estimated at $100,000.

Mayor Shakspeare and members of the City Council, who visited Chicago to study terminal facilities, returned on July 26, impressed with the necessity for further franchises to the railroads in order to encourage a belt system in this city.

The strike of the freight handlers of the various roads in Cincinnati came to an end on July 26. The railroads have conceded nothing and will take back such of the old men as they choose, retaining as many of those of the new employees as they may wish. The strikers attribute their defeat to lack of organization.

Delegates from 105 railroad centers in this country and Canada attended the meeting of the grand council of the Steam Railroad Men's Protective Union in Boston on July 27. The necessity for metallic drawbar, guardrail and higher elevation of bridges were forcibly prescnted by many of the delegates. The question of shorter hours of labor for trainmen and switchmen, and more wages were discussed at length, but nothing definite was done.

The new meteorological observatory of the signal service office, situated on the roof of the Customhouse, in this city, is complete and in full operation. It is considered the best-equipped observatory in the country.

A native Chinese Christian, in full oriental costume, and with cue and shaven head, occupied the pulpit of the Church of the Strangers, New York City, on July 27. His sermon was eloquently delivered in English, his diction being almost faultless. He selected as his subject a portion of the text running, "Why does the heathen rage?" He prophesied the embrace of Christianity by the Chinese people at no distant day.

The town of Wallace, Idaho—probably the most flourishing mining town in the Northwest—was destroyed by fire, and about 1,500 people are homeless.

The third annual meeting of the National Bar Association will be held in Indianapolis, beginning Wednesday, August 6. It is expected that delegates from all the leading State and local bar associations throughout the country will be present.

FOREIGN.

A dispatch from Geneva, Switzerland, says that the federal council has about decided to expel the Mormons from the republic. It has been urged to take this course for some time past. Petitions in favor of the expulsion have been signed by tens of thousands of working people, who can not tolerate the Mormon doctrine.

It is officially announced that there have been seventy fatal cases of Asiatic cholera in Baku, Russia, and vicinity. The heat is intense.

A regiment in Buenos Ayres, headed by its officers, revolted on July 26, and the outbreak has become general. The government, with the aid of the police, is trying to isolate the insurgents. Desperate fighting has occurred in the streets. The minister of finance is held a prisoner by the insurgents, and the president of the republic has escaped to Rosario.

It is said that Emperor William has sent a communication to Prince Bismarck, intimating a desire to make a short visit at Friedrichsruhe. The Emperor is utterly averse to all public action against the prince on account of his public utterances on state affairs, and desires a conciliatory meeting with his former chancellor.

The village of Montorfano, in Italy, has chosen a distinctively Protestant local government. The place was hitherto dominated by the Catholics. A tendency towards a similar change is visible in a number of villages.

There have been 1,967 notices of eviction issued in Ireland during the past three months.

In the struggle now going on between Salvador and Guatemala, Honduras remains neutral, but is inclined to favor Guatemala. The combatants are massing their forces in all possible haste. Guatemala's troops are said to be superior in numbers, but deficient in morale. The battle fought on the twenty-third, a dispatch says, resulted in the rout of the San Salvadorans, but as San Salvador commands the cable to Central America, the government only allows dispatches favorable to itself to be sent abroad.

La Paris publishes cablegrams containing news of the mission of Lieut. Wyse, who went to Colombia to secure a renewal of the Panama Canal concessions. The dispatches say that the Colombian government has welcomed the proposals of M. Wyse, having had assurance that the French government would do everything needful to facilitate the completion of the canal.

A fearful accident happened in the new Manchester Ship Canal road, on July 28. Two workmen's trains collided. Ten workmen were instantly killed, and sixty others seriously injured.

If you have made up your mind to buy Hood's Sarsaparilla, do not be induced to take any other. Hood's Sarsaparilla is a peculiar medicine, possessing, by virtue of its peculiar combination, proportion and preparation, curative power superior to any other article of the kind.

The New South Again.

We hear on every hand that the New South is making wondrous strides commercially. Do you wish evidence of the fact? Then look at the ad. of Ludden and Bates, Southern Music House of Savannah, Ga.

Another great summer offer. A clearance sale that offers immense advantages to those who think and act quickly. No house has a more solid reputation for selling only the best Pianos and Organs at the fairest prices.

Easy enough to see why Ludden & Bates should do a business of $500,000 a year. And of such enterprises is the New South made up.

LOOK FOR JOY.

Trip lightly over trouble,
Trip lightly over wrong;
We only make grief double
By dwelling on it long.
Why clasp Woe's hand so tightly?
Why sigh o'er blossoms dead?
Why cling to forms unsightly?
Why not seek joy instead?

Trip lightly over sorrow,
Though all the day be dark,
The sun may shine to-morrow,
And gaily sing the lark.
Fair hopes have not departed,
Though roses may have fled;
Then never be down-hearted,
But look for joy instead.

Trip lightly over sadness,
Stand not to rail at doom;
We've pearls to string, of gladness,
On this side of the tomb;
While stars are nightly shining,
And Heaven is overhead,
Encourage not repining,
But look for joy instead.

Letter No. 4.

THE SHIP'S DEPARTURE—THE WEATHER—SEA-SICKNESS—PROMINENT PEOPLE ON BOARD—THE MAN DR. TALMAGE BAPTIZED IN THE JORDAN—THE ESCAPED NUN—SERVICE AT SEA—SUNSET AT SEA—PASSNETT ROCK—COAST OF IRELAND—ARRIVAL.

From time immemorial it seems to have been the custom for an individual, in departing on a long sea voyage, either to burst out into spontaneous poesy, or, next best, to indulge in liberal quotations from the poets about the sea. Byron is most frequently called upon to assist the young navigator in relieving the soul of its pent-up emotions; while the great poet himself, on leaving England, cries out in rhyme:

"'Tis done! and shiv'ring in the gale,
The bark unfurls her snowy sail!"

Can anyone tell me what the poets mean by "'tis done"? They all use the expression, and use it often. But whether it heads a sonnet or a poem of majestic length, the reader is always left to wonder and guess at the condition hidden back of this most indefinite phrase. "'Tis done," says Byron. What was done? Who had hurt his feelings, or what transaction had taken place?

"'Tis done!" I cried last Wednesday evening of July second. But my "'tis done!" was no mystery, but meant that I had paid down sixty dollars for the privilege of sleeping in a box six feet long and a foot wide for ten days, while crossing the Atlantic Ocean.

At half-past four, of the afternoon above mentioned, the steamer Bothnia, of the Cunard Line, with three hundred passengers in the saloon, fifty in the second cabin, and one hundred in the steerage, swept out to sea. The scene at parting was striking in every respect; the smoking monster moving uneasily at her moorings, as if chafing to encounter the ocean waves. There were final business transactions, the last freight rushed in, the late passenger, the chattering throng, the cries of cabmen, and the shouts of sailors. Above all, there were the farewells; some full of laughter and merriment, while others were tearful, and still others were of such a nature that I felt my own eyes filling with sympathy. The pier was crowded with friends of the travelers, and spectators of the departure; and as the steamer swung off and away into the mid-stream of North river, with prow pointing to the bay, that pier became a snow-bank of waving handkerchiefs, answered instantly by a long line of white from the vessel. And so they waved until distance blurred and then blotted them from the sight. Down we dropped into the bay, crowded with shipping; past Governor's Island, with its circular fort; past Jersey Heights, crowned with stately residences; past Forts Hamilton and Fisher, with their frowning batteries; down and out into the wide sea. Standing at the stern of the vessel, with my Bible resting on the taffrail, I read portions of God's Word, and saw America fade from my view.

Contrary to all expectation, we encountered rough weather the first day out. For two days we had, as the sailors called it, a heavy sea. One wave, dashing up on deck, washed the ladies right and left, while another, under a lurch of the ship, poured a torrent through the port-hole of my stateroom, and deluged things generally. A heavy fog off the banks of Newfoundland encircled us, now expanding and now contracting, as if undecided what to do with us. The fog whistle sounded dolefully every thirty seconds; the rain dripped, or fell heavily; the smoke drooped out of the great chimney, and hung down like a wet banner, and then would break off in pieces, and be swallowed up and lost sight of in the encircling fog.

In the midst of this Neptune came aboard and swayed his sceptre over the great majority of the passengers. This is only another way of saying we were seasick. Think of three hundred people all sick at the stomach at the same time! Happy the man who has a friend to hold his head! But friends are few at such a moment. Each man mourns to himself apart. As the song of "Bingen on the Rhine" says:

"There was lack of woman's nursing;
There was dearth of woman's tears."

The women at such a time have to nurse themselves. On account of the heavy sea, and many crossing the ocean for the first time, not a stateroom but had its moaning inmate. I listened to the interjection, "Oh!" intoned and accented in diversities remarkable. It sounded around me like the moans and cries of a battle-plain. Merchant, professor, preacher, clerk, artist and mechanic were all on a common level now. Deep called unto deep. Author answered musician (for we had both) in a way not usual. Clergyman responded to layman in cries of nature that proved the homogeneity of the race. In the midst of it all a lady in the saloon, sitting at the piano, commenced singing "Annie Laurie." Her fine, rich voice filled the cabin, shaming many a prostrate man, touching the hearts of numbers with thoughts of home, and impressing every listener with the fact that there was one plucky person on the ship whom wind and wave and seasickness could not force down. Was I seasick? you ask. Please don't mention it; but for two days I lay in my berth scarcely able to lift my head in silent misery. "What is seasickness?" I asked the ship surgeon whom I called in, and he told me that it was mainly a brain affection; that the condition and action of the stomach arose from sympathy with the nerve and brain. Be it so. In addition to the dreadful pain it creates, it intensifies greatly two of the senses. One the sight, which takes note of the fact that the state-room, with its iron-plated ceiling, and seven by eight size, is like a burial vault, and that the berth only needs a glass cover to become a coffin. Next, the smelling power becomes acute, critical, discriminating, and analytical. It is well known that ships have a smell; but, being of a complex nature, it has puzzled many. I herewith hand you the analysis, which I worked out while lying sick in my narrow berth.

We have a number of notable people on board. Mrs. Barr, the novelist; Mrs. Lockwood, the superintendent of the Peace Department of the W. C. T. U.; Harry Paulton, the author of something, I forget what; Edith O. Gordon, the escaped nun; the man whom Dr. Talmage baptized in the river Jordan, and the ex-governor of Wisconsin. In spite of their greatness, they live and move around like the rest of us. It would do your heart good to see the governor of the great State of Wisconsin reach across the table with his gubernatorial hand and help himself. The baptismal protege of Dr. Talmage is a queer genius. He told me, in a conversation yesterday, that the baptism took place in an accidental way; that he always wanted to go under the river Jordan, and happening to meet Dr. Talmage (whom, I suppose, always wanted to put somebody under the Jordan), the submerging naturally and inevitably took place. The young man has achieved fame at the expense, not of blood or brain, but by a little water. Again and again he was pointed out on the ship, and will be till the end of his life, as the man whom Dr. Talmage baptized in the river Jordan.

The voyage over the Atlantic becomes unspeakably monotonous. The passengers resort to various expedients to kill the time. There were no glittering icebergs and spouting whales to be seen. Evidently they had been engaged by other tourists for the season in other parts of the world. So the passengers helped in various ways to annihilate the eleven days of the sea-trip. Mrs. Lockwood lectured twice; the escaped nun gave a private address to the ladies in regard to the convent life. In the midst of her speech she was rudely interrupted by a Catholic priest, who, thrusting in his head through a window, called the lady speaker a liar. In one of the evenings the ladies improvised a concert. Most of the gentlemen turned the upper deck-cabin into a regular pool-room, in which the speed of the vessel was made the fluctuating stock. Gambling has certainly taken hold of the nation. Into none of these places did I go; but, stretched in my steamer-chair, read all the day, or studied the ways and phases of the ocean. I was especially interested in the storm-petrel—a little bird with the size and movement of the swallow, that followed us across the ocean. I asked a sailor where they rested when they got tired, and he replied, "On the waves."

"But may not a fish take them under if they do that?" I said.

"Oh!" replied the sailor, "they takes their chances."

Next morning I saw them resting on the waves. As their little forms were lifted up and down by the great rolling swell of the Atlantic, I thought what a grand cradle these birds have; and another thought, sweeter and better, was: He that feedeth the sparrow on the land, cares for, feeds and protects these little birds far out upon the boundless sea. What a sermon those petrels preached to me that day!

On Sabbath morning I attended my first religious service at sea. An Episcopal clergyman officiated. The hymn, "Lead, kindly Light," sung very delightfully by a large improvised choir, went with word and strain directly to the heart.

A sunset in mid-ocean is hung up as a picture of unfading beauty in my mind. The broad crimson disc was slowly sinking in the waves, when suddenly a line of golden fire ran along the edge of a long purple cloud that just peeped above the horizon.

But, in spite of the changing colors of the sea, of occasional sails, and a few schools of porpoises, the days were long and the trip tedious. So when, on the morning of the tenth day, we sighted Fassnett Rock, the heart fairly leaped with joy. Fassnett Rock is fifty yards in diameter, conical in shape, and surmounted by a lighthouse. It was on this rock that the City of Rome struck a few weeks ago. Nevertheless, that same rock was to me like a lump of sugar broken off from the bed of Continental European sweetness, and placed there at the south end of Ireland to sweeten the waters there, and give a saccharine dash to the thoughts and emotions of land-sick men and women.

From this point we ran up the eastern coast of Ireland toward Liverpool, at a distance of three to six miles from the shore. Most agreeably was I disappointed in regard to the appearance of Erin. The island held me with an ever-changing, but never-failing charm. For miles I beheld such a scene as this: Bold, rocky shores, with precipitous or sloping hills coming down to the water's edge; a long line of white surf foaming along the shore and leaping up high on other places, as if to scale the rocks; flocks of white-winged seagulls wheeling about, with restless cries; yonder a ruined monastery, and farther still, and perched on a high cliff, the ruins of an old castle. Farther up the coast the hills, covered with green, came with gentler and more beautiful slopes to the sea-margin. I could see through a glass that every square yard of their surface was under cultivation. A number of the hill-sides, from a variety of crops, and through the division of the fields into regular squares, had the appearance of a great natural checker-board. But whether at foot of cliff, or base of hilly field, the white surf beat all along the strand. One line in the "Exile of Erin" well describes it:

"In dreams I revisit thy sea-beaten shore."

Many thoughts arose as I gazed upon this down-trodden country; and, by and by, among the thoughts came welling up the recollection of three Irish songs; beautiful and pathetic are they all. Two especially lingered with me—the "Exile of Erin," and "The Irish Emigrant's Lament."

On Sabbath morning, at nine o'clock, our ship, after eleven days on the trip, made fast to the docks in Liverpool; and in a little while after my foot pressed the shore of the old world.

LIVERPOOL.

Washington Letter.

(From Our Regular Correspondent.)

Mr. Harrison has given his aid in a good cause by sending a special message to Congress urging the passage of the anti-lottery law, proposed in the bill which the House Committee on Postoffices has prepared at the request of Postmaster General Wanamaker, who says the present law is utterly inadequate to stop the growing lottery evil. This bill provides a penalty of not more than $500 fine, and not more than one year's imprisonment, for sending through the mail letters containing money for lottery tickets, drawings of lotteries, circulars or newspapers containing lottery advertisements, and gives the Postmaster General authority to detain any suspicious mail matter, whether addressed directly to the lottery company, its known agents, or to third parties whom he has reason to suspect of acting as agents for lotteries.

The committee, in reporting this bill, says: "In Washington alone it is estimated that not less than 50,000 letters are mailed each month, addressed to the Louisiana Lottery Company, and in New Orleans it is five or ten times as much. All of this matter is unmailable under our present laws; but it goes without let or hindrance, because, under existing statutes, it seems to be impossible to obtain proof of its character." And in concluding its report, the committee further says: "That Congress is willing to provide any remedy for the correction of this evil within the letter and spirit of the Constitution will be treated herein as an accepted fact; and the committee has, therefore, proceeded in its work with the view of providing a law which, it is believed, will place within the reach of executive officers and within the jurisdiction of the courts every means that can be adopted to crush out the baneful influences of these concerns, whether chartered by States, or organized and protected outside the laws."

Few people are aware of the extent of this lottery evil. Right here in Washington it is estimated that more than $1,250,000 is spent annually with this one company; and the fact has just been established in the trial of a police lieutenant that this company has for years regularly bribed the police, in order that its agents might be allowed to sell tickets without being molested. Every newspaper of prominence in the city prints glaring advertisements of this gambling concern, and nothing short of a law can keep this polluting matter out of our households.

Mr. Wanamaker is very much in earnest about this matter, and says that he will do everything in his power to have Congress pass this bill before adjourning, and it behooves every Christian man and woman in this broad land to lend his or her influence towards the same end. Get up petitions; have your neighbors sign them, and send them to your Congressman, and the good work will be half accomplished.

This life is a state of probation and exercise like to that (which prefigured and represented it) of God's people in the wilderness, wherein God leadeth us through many difficulties and hazards, in many wants and hardships, to humble and prove us, in order to the fitting us for another more happy state. —Barrow.

Gen. Clinton B. Fisk.

The death of this gentleman, which recently occurred in New York, has been noticed in all the papers, and his well-known friendly relations with our church have been frequently noted; but there are some things about him which could be known only to myself, and which, in justice to his memory, at least, ought to be known.

He was commander of the United States forces at Nashville in 1865. My official relation to the government, being virtually, or quoad hoc, if you please, deputy United States marshal, having our church property in charge, and so being under the protection of the United States Court, in order to make this protection available, I must be frequently at headquarters. This necessity arose from the constant comings and goings and changes of the military. My legal protection, on court records, was of no avail among forty passing army subalterns. So I was frequently at his, as at every other commander's headquarters. As well as my recollection now serves me, I never asked him to do anything he did not do promptly, or give a satisfactory reason for refusing.

At length, after April or May—the fighting part of the war, but that only—was over, and late in the summer, the government printers began slowly to evacuate our House, and move to another place. As frequently as prudent—likely more so—I expressed anxiety that they leave altogether. I could, I said, arrange with the printers, without any red tape, to lend them such of our material as they were using, and let it be returned after a while. On one of these visits, late in October, the General took me in his ambulance and drove down to our House, and remained there five or six hours, looking through the rooms thoroughly, making many inquiries, etc., and there said to me: "I tell you what I advise you to do: Write me a letter setting forth the state of the case; tell me what you want, and why you want it. I will send that to Washington, and we will see what can be done." The letter was handed him next day, and on December 13 the order came for the delivery of the entire property to us. That is exactly how we recovered the Publishing House. There was no other agency. In 1866 I left Nashville, and saw no more of Gen. Fisk for about seven years.

In March, 1873, the late Bishop Jones, of New York, well and favorably known to all our old preachers—I being then engaged in presenting our Publishing House claim to the government—wrote me advising that I come there at the time of the annual meeting of their Missionary Committee, where he would assist me in procuring petitioners to lay before Congress. Of course, I was there at the time, where I was very kindly received by the Bishop, as well as by Dr. J. P. Durbin, Bishop Simpson, Dr. Wheedon, and many others. I there heard the name, Gen. Fisk, mentioned, and to my surprise, on inquiry, learned he was my old Nashville commander, and that to-day he was unwell—not able to be in the committee. Previously I knew him only as a military commander, rating him quite above all the scores of other officers with whom I had had dealings, in prompt justice, accommodating courtesies, etc. I lost no time in visiting him. He expressed no little gladness to see me; introduced me to his wife, and we had a good social talk about years ago. On learning my business in New York, he did not need to be asked for assistance, but promptly proffered co-operation in anything, any way that would favor my mission, and assisted me much in getting men of influence to sign our petitions. The following letter is one of his last acts in this behalf:

ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC RAILROAD CO.,
8 Broad St., Drexel Building,
NEW YORK, April 9, 1874.

Rev. R. Abbey, Washington, D. C.:

My Dear Sir: In response to your favor of the eighth instant, I beg leave to say that I was assigned to duty in Nashville, Tenn., in April, 1865, and was in command of the District of Tennessee a part of that and the following year. I was also Assistant Commissioner of the Freedmen's Bureau, and gave the order (under direction of my superior officer) for the restoration of the property of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to its rightful owners. I was familiar with the facts presented in your memorial to Congress, asking consideration of your claim, and do not hesitate to say that your representations are correct, and the demands of the church you plead for reasonable. I hope the Committee on War Claims will recommend such award in this case as justice to the multitude of men, women and children interested in the claim demands. The committee is composed of eminently fair-minded, just and able men, who will, doubtless, give this important matter such consideration as it deserves. Very truly yours,

CLINTON B. FISK,
Late B't'v't Major Gen'l U. S. Vols.

Shortly after this we met again at the General Conference at Louisville, where, with his noble-hearted Christian wife, they made such fraternal demonstration as is well remembered by many. R. ABBEY.

YAZOO CITY, Miss., July, 1890.

Stamp Out the Lottery.

THE PRESIDENT ASKS CONGRESS TO CHECK THE EVIL.

President Harrison, on July 29, sent the following message to Congress:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The recent attempt to secure a charter from the State of North Dakota for a lottery company, the pending effort to obtain from the State of Louisiana a renewal of the charter of the Louisiana State Lottery, and the establishment of one or more lottery companies at Mexican towns near our border, have served a good purpose of calling public attention to an evil of vast proportions.

If the baneful effects of the lotteries were confined to the States that gave the companies corporate powers and a license to conduct a business, the citizens of other States, being powerless to apply legal remedies, might clear themselves of responsibility by the use of such moral agencies as were within their reach. But the case is not so.

The people of all the States are debauched and defrauded. The vast sums of money offered to the States for charters are drawn from the people of the United States, and the general government, through its mail system, is made the effective and profitable medium of intercourse between the lottery company and its victims. The use of the mails is quite as essential to the companies as the State license. It would be practically impossible for these companies to exist if the public mails were once effectually closed against their advertisements and remittances. The use of the mails by these companies is a prostitution of an agency only intended to serve purposes of legitimate trade and a decent social intercourse. It is not necessary, I am sure, for me to attempt to portray the robbery of the poor and the widespread corruption of public and private morals which are the necessary incidents of these lottery schemes.

The national capital has become a sub-headquarters of the Louisiana Lottery Company, and its numerous agents and attorneys are conducting here a business involving probably a larger use of the mails than that of any legitimate business enterprise in the District of Columbia. There seems to be good reason to believe that the corrupting touch of these agents has been felt by the clerks in the postal service and by some of the police officers of the District. Severe and effective legislation should be promptly enacted to enable the Postoffice Department to purge the mails of all letters, newspapers and circulars relating to the business.

The letter of the Postmaster General, which I transmit herewith, points out the inadequacy of the existing statutes and suggests legislation that would be effective. It may also be necessary to so regulate the carrying of letters by the express companies as to prevent the use of those agencies to maintain communication between the lottery companies and their agents or customers in other cities. It does not seem possible that there can be any division of sentiment as to the propriety of closing the mails against these companies, and I, therefore, venture to express the hope that such proper powers as are necessary to that end will be given to the Postoffice Department.

BENJ. HARRISON.

Millsaps College Notes.

A former citizen of Copiah county, in this State, but now a resident of Brazil, showed his love for his native State by paying $50 toward the endowment of Millsaps College.

A Mississippi Methodist, too poor to make any other contribution to the college, presented the agent with a valuable Indian curiosity, as the first contribution to the college museum.

Everywhere the agent finds boys who ask when the college will be opened. Let our people answer the question, and hasten the time by subscribing to the endowment fund.

Since our last report Bishop Galloway has visited three places in North Mississippi and collected something over $650. At Providence the agent took up a collection amounting to $500, and at Adams Church, in Lincoln county, a liberal people responded to the call with $900. This is not a bad week's work. The brethren who try it will find this the easiest collection they have ever taken up.

Sunday-School Lesson.

LESSON VII.—August 17.

THE TEN LEPERS.

Luke xvii, 11-19.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Were there not ten cleansed? but where are the nine?—Luke xvii, 17.

TIME.—Third year of Jesus' ministry.

PLACES.—Near the dividing line between Samaria and Galilee. Jesus was on his way toward Jerusalem, and intended to cross the bridge over Jordan, and travel southward through Perea.

11. And it came to pass, as he went to Jerusalem—This is the first distinct note of time in St. Luke's narrative since chap. ix, 51. It appears to coincide with the journey of which we read in Matt. xix, 1; Mark x, 1, and is the commencement of the last progress through the regions in which our Lord had already carried on his ministry. The fact, peculiar to St. Luke, that it led him through Samaria, apparently though that part of it which lay on the borders of Galilee, is obviously reported in connection with the miracle that follows, the other gospels dwelling on the departure from Galilee and the continuance of the journey to Jerusalem by the route on the east of the Jordan valley. He passed through the midst of Samaria and Galilee—The most natural meaning of these words is that our Lord, when rejected at the frontier village of En Gannium, altered his route, and determined to pass toward Jerusalem through Perea. In order to reach Perea he would have to pass down the Wady of Bethshean, which lies between the borders of Galilee and Samaria, and there to cross the bridge over the Jordan.

12. Ten men that were lepers—The rules of Lev. xiii, 45, help us to bring the scene before the mind's eye—the group of the ten sufferers, full of leprous sores, their clothes rent, their heads bare, their upper lips covered, and crying, "Unclean! unclean!" The herding together of those who were shut out from all other fellowship has its parallel in the four lepers of II. Kings vii, 3. The Samaritan would not have been allowed to associate with the Jews had not leprosy obliterated religious distinctions, as it still sadly does in the leper-houses ("abodes of the unfortunate") at Jerusalem, where alone Jews and Mohammedans will live together. Which stood afar off—They kept at a distance, because forbidden by law and custom to come near to those who were sound, for fear of infecting them.

13. Jesus, Master—Although they do not yet know the Savior's Messianic dignity, yet they account him a prophet, mighty in deed and word; their faith is sincere without being perfect, on which account, also, the Savior does not repel them.

14. When he saw them—Jesus always listened instantly to the appeal of the leper, whose disease was the type of that worse moral leprosy which he specially came to cleanse. He said—Apparently he called out this answer to them while they were still at the required legal distance of one hundred paces. Go show yourself unto the priests—It was at once a test of faith, as the lepers were told to start on their journey before they felt that they were healed, an act of obedience to the law of Lev. xiv, 2, and, in its result, a proof of the reality and completeness of the work of healing. Here, however, it may be noted, there was no accompanying touch as the outward means and pledge of healing, and the command was, therefore, in a greater degree than it had been before, a trial and test of faith. It did not necessarily imply a journey to Jerusalem. Any priest in any town was qualified for the functions of inspecting and deciding on the completeness of the cure. Suddenly, or by degrees, as they went, the taint of blood disappeared, and their flesh became as it had been in the days of health. And ...as they went—In this spirit of implicit faith—they were cleansed. God highly honors this kind of faith, and makes it the instrument in his hands of working many miracles. He who will not believe till he receives what he calls a reason for it is never likely to get his soul saved. The highest, the most sovereign reason that can be given for believing is, that God has commanded it.

15. One of them, when he saw that he was healed, turned back—The healing took place when they had shown, by starting on their way to fulfill the command of Jesus, that they had faith. The Samaritan was on his way to his own priests at Gerizim. The words imply that the work of healing was not accomplished till the company of lepers were at least nearly out of sight.

16. And he was a Samaritan—As in the parable of the good Samaritan, St Luke's purpose in the selection of the incident falls in with what may be called the catholicity of his gospel, the breaking down of every middle wall of partition that divided the Jew from the other nations of the world.

17. Were there not ten cleansed? but where are the nine?—Literally, Were not the ten cleansed? but the nine—where? What worse leprosy or superstition, ignorance, eager selfishness, or more glaring ingratitude had kept back the others? We do not know. There is a tone of mingled surprise, grief, indignation in the question thus asked. Looking to the facts of the case, an ethical question of some difficulty presents itself. If the nine had faith to be healed—and the fact that they were healed implies it—how was it that faith did not show itself further in gratitude and love? The answer is to be found in the analogous phenomena of the spiritual life which are found at times in cases that are as the cleansing of the soul's leprosy. Men have the faith which justifies; they are pardoned, and they have the sense of freedom from the burden and the disease of sin, and yet their lives show no glow of loving gratitude. They shrink from fellowship with those who, having been sharers in the same blessing with themselves, are separated from them by outward lines of demarcation. We may perhaps think, without being overbold, of the twelve disciples of the Baptist who continued in their separatist life at Ephesus without knowing the warmth and love and joy of the indwelling of the Spirit, as presenting such analogous phenomena. (Acts ix, 1-7.) The history of most churches or smaller religious societies, perhaps also that of most individual men, presents many more.

18. There are not found—Ingratitude is one of the most universal and deeply seated of human vices, and our Lord was perfectly familiar with it. But in this instance he was moved by the depth of this thanklessness in so many recipients of so blessed a favor. Hence his sorrowful amazement. He felt as if all his benefits "were falling into a deep, silent grave." Save this stranger—The word for "stranger" means literally a man of another race, an alien. It implied, as did the whole treatment of the Samaritans by the Jews, that the former were not recognized as being in any sense children of Abrahsm.

19. Thy faith hath made thee whole—The verb, elsewhere rendered, as in chap. vii, 50, "hath saved thee," is obviously used here so as to include both its higher and lower meanings. The nine had had sufficient faith for the restoration of the health of their body; his had gone further, and had given a new and purer life to his soul.

Missionary.

Letter from City of Mexico.

I feel sure the ladies of New Orleans, who have aided the school in Mexico for so many years, will be glad to know that the school entire is now organized into a missionary society by their faithful Christian teacher, Miss Louise Roldan. She was with Miss Haliaran in the school, and has been faithful to us all these years. I have longed inexpressibly to speak the language with such accuracy that I would not fear to attempt to instruct our women how to work, for, indeed, they know nothing of individual work for Christ. Last week Sister Grimes came to the city, and I immediately appealed to her to help me (interpret for me). We organized a Woman's Missionary Society. From that Miss Roldan learned to direct the children. And our teacher of the boys' school then organized his boys into a missionary society. These children's meetings have inspired me with renewed hope. Of course, we had to arrange a constitution suited to the peculiar needs of these people, and much of our money must go to relieve the suffering around us. But the spiritual benefit, who can measure? This evening I went down to the school on a little business, about the time for it to dismiss for the day. I found the school-room arranged as for a prayer meeting; the organ open, and one of the teachers playing for the children, while they sang, "Sweetest name is Jesus, blessed Jesus." One little bare-footed girl, who is the president, rose and read a chapter, and prayed. Then, after more singing, they proceeded with the business of the meeting, and I am sure our Christian sisters who have contributed to the support of this school would have said if they had been with me, "After many days, the fruit appears." They who can make anything, agree to pay a cuartilla (three cents) a week, as dues to the society. When in payment for the pleasure they had afforded me, I laid some money on the table, they asked me to join and be one of the members with the children. Of course, I readily consented, as they wanted me, although I am a member of the other. I want to arrange to take the poor little children into the country one day and give them the fresh air and let them see the green trees, as few, if any, ever saw the country. And now that I can make myself understood, I'm kept so busy in mission work, I have no time for anything else. I have gone to the homes of the sick. Only a few days since, Miss Roldan and I visited one of our sick pupils, who has been a true and faithful Christian since she renounced Catholicism and came into our church. She it was who said, when received into the church, if the Lord wanted her to go to Africa as a missionary, she would go. She has proven by her pure life what the religion of Christ can do for the heathen. This faithful Christian pupil is now very ill, with no comfort, not even a bed to rest on in comfort. I greatly fear she will not recover. Her home itself is enough to cause her death. I did what I could for her. Her schoolmates all have such respect for her, and they feel deeply grieved over her sad condition. Our Bible woman is working with renewed zeal, and I trust the day is not far distant when Methodism in Mexico City will be placed upon a sure basis. You may be sure while we stay we will follow the teachings of our Christian women at home, that we may truly say, "She hath done what she could."

Missionary Success

It is fixed. "I will declare the decree."

It is definite. "I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance."

It is ever expanding. The waters of prophetic vision, "to the ankles;" "to the knees;" "to the loins;" "waters to swim in;" that "can not be passed over."

It is universal. "Go and disciple all nations." A whole world full of believing sons and daughters.

It is irresistible. "All power is given unto me in heaven and on earth. Go ye, therefore."

It is with Christ's presence. "Lo, I am with you all the days."

It is inspiring. When duty's brow is sunlit with hope, the feet and heart take wings.—Dr. Herrick Johnson.

Missionary Notes.

The foreign missionary work re-invigorates the church for its home work. As great themes widen the intellect, so great purposes foster strength of spirit. Genius expands with the canvas. Thus it was in the early church. Paul was wonderfully quickened by the thought of the evangelization of the world, which was laid upon his heart. As the subduing of the earth is the work committed to man, and the assumption of the task has been the means of developing him, so the work of redeeming the world has been the great educator of the church. And it never comes to its greatest strength and power of enthusiasm until it takes up the foreign work.—Dr. Storrs.

If there is any doubt in any mind as to the duty which the American churches, as well as those of other English-speaking peoples, owe to India, it ought to be dissipated by the fact that there are in that great empire three millions of educated young men—not to speak of the other sex—who are familiar with the English language. They have been trained in English schools connected either with the government or with the various missions. These men have at hand the entire range of English literature, Christian and infidel. They represent an influence sufficient in itself to transform the whole sentiment of that great empire. But the question is whether a religious tone shall characterize that influence, or whether the various forms of skepticism and indifferentism which now floods all English-speaking communities shall possess the land.—Church at Home and Abroad.

If Sunday-school children were thoroughly informed on missionary matters, the church would be a great gainer. The lives of missionaries, the various missionary fields, the religions of different races, and many features of missionary work form exceedingly interesting topics of study for the young. This knowledge should be imparted to the children by means of lectures, addresses, and attractive papers. The Young Men's Missionary Band connected with the London Missionary Society is an organization whose object it is to do this work in England. It seeks to arouse interest in missions by seeking opportunities to visit and address Sunday-schools and churches, and it is making steady and satisfactory progress. If there were not some danger that our churches would be hampered by too many societies, the propriety of organizing a Young Men's Missionary Band might be worthy of consideration.—New York Advocate.

Joan of Arc being asked why her standard was so victorious, answered, "I said to it, Go boldly among the English, and then I followed it myself." She told the secret of all success. Have an idea; push it forward; and then go after it with might and main; then succeed. Failure has a secret, as well as success, and its secret is indifference. The Christian ideal is the noblest on earth. The conquest of the world for Jesus means the uplifting of the whole human race to a higher plane than any nation has yet reached. "Forward, forward standard!" we cry, but we are willing to watch it from a distance. That is the secret of our failure to do greater things for Christ. We must follow our ideal closely, fervently, with the longing for victory that makes victory possible, before we shall attain the desire of our hearts. When we give our money, we may make it little or much, according as we follow it with prayer, with desire, with hope, with unutterable longings for souls, or drop it like a dead stone into the contribution-box. By all means let us say to the gospel, "Go boldly among the brethren;" but if we wish victory, let us follow it ourselves.—Helping Hand.

In the apostolic missions there were many converts of high social, political and ecclesiastical position, as Sergius Paulus the proconsul, Dionysius the Areopagite, Tyrannus the philosopher, Clement the Senator, the magicians at Ephesus and "honorable women." True, there were "not many noble," for in any community the rich and noble are few in number, as compare with the poor, but there were very many converts from the higher classes, as many perhaps in proportion to their whole number as from the lower. In modern mission fields, however, except in Japan and one or two other countries, few or no converts come from the more powerful classes; nearly or quite all from the lower ranks. While the apostles had success in intellectual cities like Athens, Corinth and Rome, modern missionaries make few converts among more cultivated people as the Chinese or upper caste Hindoos; their great successes being generally found among ignorant masses like the Sandwich Islanders and the Congo tribes. Is there indeed a difference between apostolic and modern missions in this respect, and if there is, to what is it owing?—The Colloquium.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is a peculiar medicine. It is carefully prepared from Sarsaparilla, Dandelion, Mandrake, Dock, Pipsissewa, Juniper Berries, and other well-known and valuable vegetable remedies, by a peculiar combination, proportion and process, giving to Hood's Sarsaparilla curative power not possessed by other medicines. It effects remarkable cures where other preparations fail.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the best blood purifier before the public. It eradicates every impurity, and cures Scrofula, Salt Rheum, Boils, Pimples, all Humors, Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Sick Headache, Indigestion, General Debility, Catarrh, Rheumatism, Kidney and Liver Complaints, overcomes that tired feeling, creates an appetite, and builds up the system.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Has met peculiar and unparalleled success at home. Such has become its popularity in Lowell, Mass., where it is made, that whole neighborhoods are taking it at the same time. Lowell druggists sell more of Hood's Sarsaparilla than of all other sarsaparillas or blood purifiers. Sold by druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared only by C. I. By All Odds

The most generally useful medicine is Ayer's Pills. As a remedy for the various diseases of the stomach, liver, and bowels, these Pills have no equal. Their sugar-coating causes them not only to be easy and pleasant to take, but preserves their medicinal integrity in all climates and for any reasonable length of time. The best family medicine, Ayer's Pills are, also, unsurpassed for the use of travelers, soldiers, sailors, campers, and pioneers. In some of the most critical cases, when all other remedies have failed, prove effective.

"In the summer of 1864 I was sent to the Annapolis hospital, suffering with chronic diarrhea. While there, I became so reduced in strength that I could not speak and was compelled to write everything I wanted to say. I was then having some 25 or 30 stools per day. The doctors ordered it medicine that I was satisfied would be of no benefit to me. I did not take it, but persuaded my nurse to get me some of Dr. Ayer's Pills. About two o'clock in the afternoon I took six of these pills, and by midnight began to feel better. In the morning the doctors came again, and after deciding that my symptoms were more favorable, gave me a different medicine, which I did not use, but took four more of the pills instead. The next day the doctors came to see me, and thought I was doing nicely, (and so did I). I then took one pill a day for a week. At the end of that time, I considered myself cured and that Ayer's Pills had saved my life. I was then weak, but had no return of the disease, and gained in strength as fast as could be expected."—F. C. Luce, late Lieut. 56th Regt. Mass. Vol. Infantry.

"Ayer's Pills are

The Best

I have ever used for headaches, and they act like a charm in relieving any disagreeable sensation in the stomach after eating."—Mrs. M. J. Ferguson, Pullens, Va.

"I was a sufferer for years from dyspepsia and liver troubles, and found no permanent relief until I commenced taking Ayer's Pills. They have effected a complete cure."—George W. Mooney, Walla Walla, W. T.

Educational Convention in Shreveport.

Within the last five years there has been, what may fitly be termed, "a revival of learning" in Louisiana. Public sentiment has been awakened and public enterprise quickened until a new life has been infused into very many communities. Primary and academic schools have sprung up in many sections of the State, and hundreds—yea, thousands of children are receiving lasting benefits from this revival. Many agencies have been earnestly at work in this matter, chief among them the Louisiana State Educational Society. This society has been at work now about seven years, and the good results of its work were brought out and placed before the public at its recent session in Shreveport. The meeting was composed of some of the foremost educators of the State, both men and women; able addresses and essays were delivered, and a review of the work showed progress in every direction. Judge Garrett, of Monroe, for the Committee on Resolutions and Recommendations, reported some very gratifying facts, which we are glad to place before our readers. Among other things, the report said that the records of the State developed the fact that the population of Louisiana had increased twenty per cent. in ten years and wealth had increased over forty per cent., while the public school treasury had increased in five years from $450,000 to $843,000, which is over ninety per cent. increase. He challenged comparison with any sister Southern State where fifty per cent. of the population was non-taxpaying. He also recited as a fact that while the public schools of the State had increased ninety per cent. in five years, eight to ten colleges had been established in North Louisiana, and many fine private schools besides. This was the result of the last five years. This association began its work seven years since, and it may assume the honor of this great success.

These facts make a complete answer to the Lottery gabble about the State being too poor to educate its children. When a State doubles its contribution for educational purposes in five years there is no meaning in arguing that she needs Lottery money to develop educational resources. Those composing this association have studied the educational question for seven years, and are, therefore, presumed to know something about it. They know the question in all its phases and know the needs of the hour, and are men and women who do not hesitate to speak out. If Louisiana today stood in need of Lottery money to educate her children, they would know it and, knowing it, they would say so. But what do they say on this point? After the offer of the Lottery Company is made to contribute $350,000 a year, this association, in convention assembled, passed the following:

Whereas, One of the provisions of the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the State of Louisiana, known as the "Lottery amendment," contemplates the application of a portion of the money to be derived from the sale of the proposed franchise to the support of the public schools of the State; And, whereas, The Louisiana Educational Association is firmly convinced that such a method of raising money for the cause of education is unwise and immoral and calculated to poison at its very source the stream of knowledge from which the children of the State are invited to drink; therefore, be it

Resolved, That this association earnestly protests against the proposed change in the Constitution of the State, and especially against the use for educational purposes of funds derived from such a source.

Now, let the people remember that this association of educators knows a great deal more about education in Louisiana, and takes a great deal more interest in it than the Lottery gamblers know or care, and that ought to settle the question forever. Among the resolutions passed by the association, we find these:

Resolved, That manual training should receive more attention in our public and private schools, as a branch of common-school education, and that industrial training should be made compulsory in all schools.

Resolved, That the Louisiana Educational Association respectfully urge upon all school officers and teachers throughout the State the importance of instruction in physiology and hygiene, and especially as related to what is known "scientific temperance instruction," as provided for in the act of the Legislature of 1888, approved July 6, 1888, which act goes into full effect with the fall session of our public schools.

Deeply impressed with the importance of such instruction, this association respectfully urges upon all who are charged with the enforcement of this law such an observance of its provisions as will secure the inestimable benefits soon to follow from its proper enforcement.

Resolved, That we recognize it as the duty of those interested in the employment of teachers for our public colored schools to select only those whose moral and intellectual worth shall fit him or her to the task of attempting to elevate the colored race.

Resolved, That we will henceforth bend our energies to having teachers thus qualified employed in the colored schools, regardless of color.

Whereas, The people of Louisiana are fully able to afford the necessary facilities for a liberal education to all their children, and it is their bounden duty so to do.

Resolved, That it shall be the continuous and unwearying work of the members of this association to bring to bear all honorable influences to secure the necessary State and parochial legislation to consummate the desired end to give to each boy and girl in Louisiana the opportunity of a liberal education in our public schools.

Honor to the President.

The whole nation will honor the President for the message sent to Congress to close the mails to all newspapers which advertise the Louisiana Lottery, and to all mail which is for the business of this gambling concern. If the citizens of a State wish to inaugurate and keep up a gambling concern, it is but just that it be confined and circumscribed to the limits of that State. The nation is infected by this infamous concern that sends its streams of corruption to every city in the Union. As long as the mails are open to it every city, town, village and hamlet is at the mercy of this thieving stock company. If the fraudulent companies in all the cities of the Union are hunted down, the mails closed against them by the government, why should this company, which is without a basis for any stock, and whose business gives no quid pro quo, still be allowed to use the mails?

The baneful influence of vicious literature, that has been declared contraband mail matter long since, is hardly as ruinous in its far-reaching influences as the mania for gambling created by this concern all over the nation. Be Mr. Harrison what he may on other lines, in this act he has done himself honor and justice to the moral sentiment—the backbone of the nation. There will be a long howl that will echo far and near from some of the Democratic head-lights who are under the baneful influence of this awful curse—the Lottery Company; but let all lovers of integrity, those who fight sin and denounce political corruption, honor the man who helps to throttle this hydra, that coils its body around the State of Louisiana, and has a head spitting forth its venom in every city, hamlet, village and post-office, however small, in this broad land. All rights—State rights, private rights, and every other—will be arrayed against this measure by the aiders and abettors of this company. No doubt, both State Senators and a majority of our Congressman will be opposed to this measure. Be that as it may, without regard to party, all true lovers of Louisiana and Right ought to endorse and commend this action of the President. If Louisiana must have a fountain that gives forth deadly waters, let the flow be confined and flow only over the State that has not manhood enough to declare for virtue, honor and integrity. Let not this awful virus inoculate all States with corruption and gamiug. It is to be hoped that this legislation will be completed in Congress and go into immediate effect. Again we say, All honor to the President; he has done his duty in this act. S. S. K.

A College President on His Vacation.

MR. EDITOR: Since my last letter I have been visiting several places in North Louisiana. Stopping a few days at Ruston, I was helped to see the people in the regions around by the generous kindness of Bro. Faunt LeRoy. He has the ponies, and knows how to drive them. He is adding improvements to his church-building, and thinks that the harmony of things will require the sermons to be well studied. He has in hand also the inauguration of a Louisiana Chautauqua, one mile from Ruston. So his energies are stirred on several lines.

At Homer I tried to sow good seed, preaching the gospel of Christian education, which was appreciated by Bro. Randle and his co-workers, who were assembled in District Conference there. These brethren subscribed liberally to the endowment last year. Homer College is still the property of the friends or members of our church, and ought to be maintained as a Christian school.

At Robeline, I found Bro. Cassity sufficiently recovered from the distressing effects of his accidental poisoning to be able to hold his District Conference. The brethren reported progress on almost all lines of Christian work, and added $800 to the handsome contribution made last year by Shreveport district to the endowment of Centenary College.

In passing through Shreveport I attended the Louisiana Educational Convention for two days of its session, making a brief plea for classical education, which was well received. Conference and association with this large body of intelligent and educated men and women was a source of pleasant edification. Many able papers were read; but none of them were discussed, as it seemed to me they should have been. I find that the popular error that ignorance and crime are linked as cause and effect still holds a place in the minds of some teachers. I repudiate the doctrine as it is commonly held. No ignorance leads to crime but ignorance of God's law. No education leads to virtue but instruction in God's law. The ignorant and poor criminal is caught and punished; the educated and rich criminal goes unwhipped of justice. The lion that fought with the man was at immense disadvantage, not for lack of strength to fight, but for lack of ability to write his account of the fight. The ignorant and helpless poor are oppressed and slandered. Does any thoughtful man doubt that the attendants and members of the Louisiana Legislature committed more sin in the eyes of God during the late session at Baton Rouge than has been committed by all the negroes who have stolen pigs and cows in Louisiana since our last war? The reckoning day will come, when it will be shown that a godless education has made no man better, and that ignorance of secular science is not the parent of crime.

At Colfax I found Bro. Alexander and those who co-operate with his tallness in Conference assembled when I arrived on Friday. Colfax has been rather famous for some things not the best, but it is greatly improved and improving. A beautiful new church approaches completion—the handsomest house in the town; just as all churches should be. Twenty-five persons were added to the church on Sunday, and the altar was full of mourners on Sunday night after an effective sermon by Rev. A. D. McVoy, president of the Mansfield Female College. Here sixteen hundred dollars were subscribed for the endowment of Centenary, with a promise of more hereafter.

Everywhere the educational spirit seems to be strong. I doubt if in any part of this country a more striking manifestation of its growth could be found than is to be seen in the handsome school-buildings and large attendance of scholars along the railways and in the adjacent regions from Monroe to Shreveport and thence to Alexandria.

I find the anti-Lottery sentiment deep, strong and growing everywhere; in places it is hot—hot as the weather in July.

Crops are generally good and promising, but fruit is a total failure throughout Louisiana.

Centenary College is talked of by the people everywhere, and her prosperity is rejoiced in. The prospect for students is very good. I have been able to add about $3,500 to the endowment since I left home in June. When I see the promising crops of cotton and cane, I listen for the man who will meet Bro. Peter James' offer of $25,000, or endow and name a professorship in the college.

W. L. C. HUNNICUTT.

Letter from Japan.

I have just returned from one of my visits into the country, visiting several of my appointments on the south and western end of the island of Shikoku (Four Kingdoms). The night of my leaving Kobe was calm and pleasant, and most of Saturday, June 14, was pleasant; but before night we were in a gale. The captain, fearing to cross the Bungo Straits, on account of the storm and rough sea, thought best to run in under shelter of the island, or the long cape which runs out from the southwest part of this island. It was well he did, for, from all accounts since then, it was a typhoon in the Pacific, and was very severe in the Inland Sea. Some of my fellow-passengers went ashore while we were at anchor to visit some of their friends. They mentioned my name, and a lady said to them: "I know that missionary, and have been to hear him preach at Yowatahama." To my surprise, when one of the gentlemen returned, he brought to me a nice little box of fish, rice and other eatables from this lady, with her compliments, and that she would come aboard and see me if it was not so stormy. I felt deeply touched at such kindness from one who was not yet a member of the church, but is reading the Bible, and who, no doubt, has felt something of the love of God in her heart. The town is called "Three Tables," and has never been visited by any foreign missionary. I was sorry not to be able to go ashore and see her and others there who are interested in reading the Bible. I know her brother well. He is the chief officer of the town of Yowatahama, where we have a small society of Christians. He, himself, is deeply interested in Christianity, and so is his wife. Ten days after this I met several persons from towns near "Three Tables," who have Bibles and are much interested and seeking after light and salvation. While at Uwajima, we had good meetings, and before leaving them baptized four adults and one little child. The people all over the country are much disturbed by politics, and looking forward to the election of candidates for the House of Representatives in Tokyo. That election took place on July 1; the first election these people have ever had during their existence over two thousand five hundred years since. The election passed off very quietly in Kobe; very different from elections in Christian countries.

On my return, I took steamer direct for Tadotsu, and it seems, and I feel sure, I was under the guidance of our kind and loving heavenly Father, who is always watching over us for good. On Friday night Dr. W. R. Lambuth, Bro. Towson and Bro. Wilson left Kobe on a steamer for Hiroshima. All went well until two o'clock in the morning, when there was a terrible crash, and they, supposing the steamer had struck upon a rock, rushed to the upper deck in their bare feet and found they had come into collision with another steamer. It was very dark, but they soon found from the cries for help that the other vessel was sinking and many persons had thrown themselves into the water. The steamer was almost immediately filled with water and sank in less than twenty minutes. It is not yet known how many persons were lost. No one was lost from the steamer on which our friends were. Bro. Towson had a few bruises, and Walter one; but otherwise they were all safe. They felt uneasy about me, not knowing my whereabouts, having left Kobe before my telegram reached there telling of my safe arrival in Tadotsu. Their steamer was detained for examination at Takamatsu, and taking jinrickshaws went overland to Tadotsu; but they did not reach there until Sunday morning and found me safe, but not well. It was sad news they brought me of the loss of life by the accident; but the Lord kept them in the hour of peril from all harm. They were greatly relieved to find me safe in Tadotsu. When at Yawatahama, a steamer came taking the direct route to Tadotsu, and I concluded to go on that one.

Had this steamer not gone direct, I would have had to take passage to Oita, and there change steamers, and I may have taken passage in the ill-fated steamer. May we not see clearly the direction of a kind and wise Providence always watching over us and directing our steps? Not feeling well, I left for Kobe on Sunday night, while they remained to take another steamer for Hiroshima on Monday morning. Surely "the goodness and mercy of the Lord endureth forever." Oh, that we could always trust him, and commit our ways into his hands! Pray for us, and for the work in which we are engaged.

Ever your brother in Christ our Lord, J. W. LAMBUTH.

KOBE, July 3.

The Round Table has suspended until September 1, when "under new and improved facilities, and additional editorial assistance," it will appear again.

Notes.

"A man who hasn't got religion enough to hold him level on a horse trade, will bear watching everywhere."—Ram's Horn.

One of the best compliments a preacher ever received: "His sermons were like a good meal of victuals; you were all the better for them without thinking of him."

The Southwestern Methodist prints a note that will bear republishing; and let all our preachers think on it well:

The number of souls converted under the ministry of a preacher during the year is a better measure of his ability than the size of his salary.

There are some very curious Christians in this world. There are Christian men who spare no pains or expense to keep the Jersey cow in good condition, but are too poor to afford their children an education or to supply them with wholesome reading matter at home! Do you know any such?

The Raleigh Christian Advocate tells a story on a preacher thus: "After preaching he called on a class leader to pray, and the leader opened his prayer with these words, 'Lord, help us to dismiss from our minds the frivolous words to which we have just listened!'" Haven't you sometimes felt that some such prayer would be appropriate?

The next session of Centenary College, at Jackson, La., will open on September 3. It is very desirable that students should be present at the opening of the session, in order that they may be properly classified. President Hunnicutt intends to preach an opening sermon on the first Sunday of the session. This will be intended to prepare the minds of all connected with the college for the labors before them.

The Alabama Christian Advocate has this:

A young man who has just entered upon the work of the ministry can render himself disgusting to all right-thinking people by pushing himself to the front, and by trying to find out what everyone thinks of his sermon after the little thing has been emptied on a long-suffering audience. Young man, this paragraph is intended to do you some good. Read it and apply it to yourself.

Some people are superstitious about the number thirteen. A writer in the New York Sun has this to say:

Everybody knows that there were thirteen colonies, which became thirteen States; but there is a coincidence which I have not seen pointed out, that the Articles of Confederation were thirteen in number, and that there were thirteen years between independence and the adoption of the Constitution.

Who will be superstitious after that?

"Long Tom" writes for the Wesleyan. What a realistic fellow he is! Just look at this picture, the original of which you have seen more than once. Speaking of District Conferences, he says:

One thing is clear—we have not all yet learned how to "report." We can talk with confidence of the good in our charges—but a question on dancing, card playing, theatre going and such like throws us very suddenly into the realm of the indefinite. Such questions are real fog producers. We know somebody is in there by the noise he makes lest he be run against.

The Behring Sea correspondence, and the McKinley tariff, and the Lodge Force bill, and the Lottery bill, and the Farmer's Alliance uprising, and the Constitutional Convention in Mississippi, and the Anti-Lottery Convention in Louisiana, and the Central American Revolution, and the South American troubles, and the German Emperor's visit to the Queen of England, and the publication of "In Darkest Africa," and the marriage of Stanley, mark this summer as a little above ordinary.

Hon. Franklin Garrett, of Monroe, La., stated to the Educational Convention, recently held in Shreveport, that "the population of Louisiana had increased 20 per cent. in ten years, and wealth had increased over 40 per cent. in the same time, while the public school treasury had increased in five years from $450,000 to $843,000, which is over 90 per cent. increase." How does that statement tally with the Lottery idea that Louisiana needs Lottery money to educate her children?

We have just read the report of a ringing sermon on the Louisiana Lottery, delivered recently by Dr. Steel in McKendree Church, Nashville, Tenn. We are glad that our brethren abroad are "awaking to our help." If they had waked up about six months ago, we should have been spared a legislative spectacle that puts to shame the darkest thing in the history of human legislation. People outside of Louisiana are beginning to see that they are as much interested in the overthrow of the Lottery as we are. The Lottery's boast that ninety-seven per cent. of its earnings come from abroad seems to have been a telling shot. We appreciate all the help we can get, and hope the Christian people of the land will continue to aid us by word and deed and prayer.

Personal and Otherwise.

Rev. C. F. Reid, of our China Mission, is at home seeking health and recuperation. Florence, Boone county, Ky., is his home.

Dr. A. Coke Smith has been elected to the chair of Practical Theology in Vanderbilt University.

Rev. E. S. Lewis has been appointed by Bishop Galloway to the Richland circuit, North Mississippi Conference, to fill out the unexpired term of Rev. John Barcroft, deceased.

A note from Bro. Foust, of Oak Ridge, La., says: "I preached yesterday for the first time since my leg was amputated." We rejoice that our brother has so far recovered as to be able to occupy his pulpit.

P. Werlein has laid us under obligation for a beautiful song, entitled "A Precious Promise." Music by W. H. Hartwell. It is founded on the passage, "Say ye to the righteous, it shall be well with him."

The Board of Missions is called to meet in the Mission Rooms, Nashville, August 20, at 10 A. M., to take action on the resignation of Dr. A. Coke Smith as secretary.

Bishop Galloway will dedicate the new Methodist Church in Yazoo City, Miss., Sunday, August 17.

A private letter from Dr. Carradine, dated London, July 23, says, "I leave to-morrow for Paris." Accompanying the letter were some pictures as souvenirs of City Road Chapel, which brings up the thrilling history of Methodism, from the day John Wesley began his field-preaching "on a little hill near Bristol" till the close of his remarkable career.

Meridian District.

TO THE PREACHERS.

DEAR BRETHREN: During the month of August it is expected that you should preach on "Christian and Denominational Education" at every appointment in your respective charges. And I beg you to emphasize the duty of Methodists to patronize our own Methodist schools and colleges, and particularly those institutions which afford religious as well as literary advantages; where Methodist students are not discouraged from attending Sunday night services or the Wednesday night prayer meeting, and where they are permitted to participate in the sacrament of the Lord's Supper when the Quarterly Conference is held during the week.

Call attention to East Mississippi Female College, which, under the presidency of Bro. C. W. Anderson, will soon begin the twentieth session. It ought to be near the hearts of all. President Anderson is now with us, and we feel assured he will succeed in every respect.

Do not forget Centenary College while you point out the glorious possibilities of Millsaps College, so soon to be established. Remember we have not a little interest in the Vanderbilt. Get subscriptions for full amount of your assessments for educational aid, and collect as soon as possible. There is the same reason for the existence of our denominational school that there is for our denominational existence. The church which educates is the church which God will most graciously bless. Let no other take our crown.

T. L. MELLEN, P. E.

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. F. M. Featherstun writes: "We have had a good meeting at Woodville, Miss.; thirteen souls happily converted, and the church greatly quickened, for which we are thankful. Percy's Creek Church is now having a good meeting; two conversions last night, July 28. I was with them four days. Bro. Hurst, the pastor, is doing a good work among this people. He has the hearts of all his people. Our church is doing well in this part of the Woodville district. Our presiding elder is faithful and efficient—always at his post of duty."

—Presiding Elder McDonald writes from French Settlement, July 31: "Rev. H. B. Trevillon, P. C., of New River mission, Mississippi Conference, had the misfortune to loose his circuit mule. His charge is a new one and weak, and will do well to support the preacher and his family. I am told that he can buy a Creole pony for $50, that will do his circuit work. Will the brethren in this (Woodville) district help—say, a dollar or less from many, and let us mount our brother preacher again. Hand the money to your pastor in charge, or to me during the month of August."

Postponement!

The Sam Jones' meeting in West Point is unavoidably postponed from August 5 to August 17, 1890, when it will begin and continue through the twenty-fourth. Cause—Mr. Jones' inability to arrive on time for first appointment.

Pounded.

To-morrow, August 2, will be my 53rd birthday. And my people, among whom I have lived seven months today, conceived the idea that I needed and would be the better for a pounding. So last night suddenly the parsonage was made glad by the presence and contributions of my dear brethren. Men, women and children came, bringing packages, ranging all the way from a pound of rice, sugar or coffee, including ham and preserves, up to a barrel of flour. And, let it be known, this pounding was not a substitute for the pastor's salary. And to crown it all, this morning my presiding elder, Rev. W. B. Lewis, acting for a number of brethren and friends, handed me a beautiful gold watch—a birthday present. Surely our hearts are rejoiced, and this pastor and family feel like working and watching for these souls. I will say we are happy in our home and work. And if we are changed at the Annual Conference, I will not do like Tom Sterling: blame my presiding elder. I will not brag on my people too much, lest some one else should covet my place. Thanks to each and everyone who has helped to make us happy in our parsonage home. May God's Spirit be with them!

Mansfield Female College
Conservatory of Music and Art.
MANSFIELD, LA.

One of the most popular and flourishing institutions of the South. The Sixty-seventh Session opens September 10, 1890, and the Spring Term begins January 28, 1891, with an able and experienced faculty. Curriculum comprehensive, instruction thorough. Advantages in Music unsurpassed, as in the best conservatories. The pianos are new and of the best make. The Technicon and the Technikbons are used to facilitate the work in the music department, placing this department beyond competition. Departments of Fine Arts and Industrial Arts under specialists.

The location is unsurpassed for beauty and attractiveness, and the school is celebrated for the remarkable record for good health maintained. The climate is the best in which to educate, and the place is the safest for girls. The main building is of brick, massive and commodious, with a large and well-shaded campus. Rooms large, well furnished, warmed and ventilated. Ample provision for the table of the best the market affords. All necessary comfort secured. Expenses very low and the school very economical. A new building with a large audience hall is in contemplation, and extensive improvements are in progress to make this the grandest institution in the State.

THE GIANT ANGER.

Fight the Giant Anger,
Fight him every day;
He's a dreadful monster,
Turn from him away.

Fight the Giant Anger;
Neve let him rise;
Show him how you hate him,
And his ways despise.

Fight the Giant Anger;
Fight him all along;
Lay him down, and keep him;
Hold him fast and strong.

Fight the Giant Anger!
They are fools who bend;
Good men, all have done it;
Angels help will lend.

Fight the Giant Anger;
Man may take a town;
God says, he is better far,
Who keeps this anger down.

Fight the Giant Anger;
Fight him till you die;
If you conquer, you will wear
A golden crown on high.

A Child's Conversion.

The following incident was related to me by the mother of the little girl, and thinking that its simple pathos might reach some heart groping in the darkness of sin, and help to shed the divine light there when more learned exhortations had failed to lead the sinner to a knowledge of Christ's saving grace, I have written it down:

"When my little daughter was ten years old she had a severe attack of scarlet fever. For days we were uncertain as to what the result would be. As I sat watching beside her cot towards the end of this critical period, she opened her eyes and said to me:

"'Mama, what is religion?'

"'Why, dear, it is to love God with all your heart; to be willing to do whatever he wants you to, and to do it gladly, even though you may not always understand just why you are required to do it. Then when you have done all you can and trustingly leave the rest to Jesus, your heart will be filled with joy and gladness,' I explained.

"'Oh! mama, I am so glad you have told me, for that is just the way I feel. I am very happy. Won't you read me some nice story and then talk to me about it like you used to do? Don't you mind the time when you would read to me Sundays, and when I couldn't understand the hard words you would stop and tell it all over to me? I wish you would do that now,' she said. So I got a book and read to her, and when she had rested I said:

"'Emmeline, did you ever feel like this before, or do you think it is because you are going home to be with Jesus that makes you feel like this now?

"'Oh, no; I am not going to leave you now, mama, dear. I am going to stay and help you take care of little brother and sister. But I always feel just so happy when I pray. I feel as though I could almost fly away,' she said.

"'Emmeline, when did you feel like this first?' I asked.

"She said: 'It was a long time ago, when I first went to school. You know there were a lot of bad boys there, and one night as we were coming home, they were teasing the rest, but they didn't bother me, because I left the sidewalk and walked up the middle of the road so that I wouldn't hear the bad words they were saying; and as I walked along, I prayed to Jesus that he would save me and make me a good little girl. All at once I felt so happy that I wanted to sing, and so I hurried home; and do you know, mama, I never knew just how I got home that night; it seemed to me that I could almost fly, I felt so light-hearted and glad. When I got in, you said I looked tired, and had better lie down and rest. Don't you remember? And now, whenever I pray, I just feel like that—so very happy.'

"When she mentioned the incident, I did remember it well. From that time until her death, which occurred when she was a woman grown and had faithfully kept her promise to help me take care of 'little brother and sister,' she never had a doubt. During her last illness, she was perfectly happy; and when the Bridegroom came, we felt that

'She had gone unto that school
Where she no longer needs our poor protection,
And Christ himself doth rule.'"

Mr. P. D. D. Delacroix, Cypremort P. O., La. Nov. 30, 1888, says: "Three years ago an agent representing Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar came into my store. Being busy, was unable to give him any time. Before leaving he gave me a sample bottle of Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar, asking me to give it to anyone suffering with a cough or cold. Several days afterward I caught a heavy cold. Remembering the sample, thought I would try it. Six teaspoonfuls cured me. Ordered a supply at once, and have sold it with satisfaction to all. It acts like magic on all my family, and I would not be without it. I take pleasure in recommending it at all times." One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as 50c. bottles.

The Proper Use of Money.

Some boys and girls spend every cent on candy, toys, or trifles; others save every cent. Neither of these methods is to be commended. It is equally wrong to squander or hoard.

Money should be expended to advantage. That involves prudence in earning, saving and spending.

A prudent boy will buy nothing that he does not need. He will buy the best for his money. He will learn to "shop"—as the girls do—that is, look around until he is certain that some other article will not suit him better.

Perhaps the greatest check on reckless or foolish expenditure is a day-book. How many boys know what that is, or have used one?

A bright boy has for three years kept a day-book, in which he entered every cent that passed through his hands. All money that he receives from any source, is entered in the credit column. All money expended is set down in the debit column. Every week the book is balanced.

It requires about ten minutes each day to set down the daily expenditures, and fifteen minutes at the end of the week to balance the book.

This book shows "where his money has gone." It also checks foolish expenditure.

When he foots up his "debits" at night, he will be ashamed to enter "candy" or "cigarettes" three or four times. The next day he will think of his day-book and refrain.

You can save money by keeping a day-book. The items surprise and instruct you. It does not make you stingy or mean. It gives you more money to spend on necessities. It inculcates business habits that may be of value.

To the girls these remarks equally apply.—Golden Days.

I WONDER.—I wonder if there would be less work to do if Edward should hang up his hat instead of leaving it for Mary! If Mary should carry her shawl with her to the carriage instead of asking Edward to step back for it! If Anna could bring her book downstairs instead of asking Alice to turn back to get it!

Or if Alice did not say: "Please, Anna, run, turn off the gas; I forgot it!" If Frank had brought the dipper from the field instead of sending little Ben (because he was only a boy) for it! If, when Lucy left the piano, she had shut it, instead of mother having to do it when bed-time came! If Alfred always closed the door after him instead of wifie having to get up!

I remember how willing we are to do these little things for each other—but—I just wonder! —Santa Claus.

HAPPY MOUNTAINS.—A senator who, not very long since, left his place vacant forever, used often to quote a remark which he once overheard in the White Mountains at a hotel where he was staying with his family.

On a piazza one day a girl near him said to her companion, a damsel of her own age:

"O Marianne, I do think that gown of yours is just too lovely for anything, and it is so appropriate to wear up here!"

The other smiled self-approvingly.

"Yes," she said, smoothing down the folds of the frock in question, "I do think this gown sets off the mountains better than any other I ever had on."—Youth's Companion.

WHAT THE PULPIT MIGHT DO.—While it is of little use to preach against municipal corruption in Protestant pulpits, for the "ringsters" will not be among the hearers, there are thousands of men of wealth and influence who do, in one way or another, play into the hands of the "ringsters," who ought to be told their duty. We believe that if the pulpit were bravely to show the present fact of corruption, the inevitable consequences that must follow in its train, and the fact that no gang of political hucksters could corrupt city, State or nation without the passive support of the great body of good citizens, indignant virtue would rise up and put the agents of corruption to speedy flight. It is often said that the press is all-powerful and that the influence of the pulpit has decayed. The press is not omnipotent, for it is divided; part of it is corrupt, and another part pure and meritorious. The pulpit is feeble only because the pulpit does not begin to guess its own power.

Let the pulpit bravely do its duty, and it will find itself as powerful for good as it ever was. Let this be done all along the line, and it will effect a reform which the press, with all its power, can not compel.—The Churchman

THE HELPFULNESS OF SUNSHINE.—Be sunshiny! There is nothing in the world so helpful as cheerfulness. What a wonderful power for good there is in a happy face! One instinctively feels that happiness is never far from truth. The face that shines must have something behind it to make it shine, and there is no real sunshine of the soul except truth and goodness. Other lights are transitory and fitful; but the sweet, steady light of a true soul beams upon the face like the joy and peace of a summer day.

This is the real secret of the healthfulness of sunshine in human lives. We know that it comes from something very deep and genuine and abiding within. The sunshiny person, we feel, has become possessed of the secret of life—the being in perfect sympathy and harmony with all things. And every smile, every loving, cheerful look, is an overflowing of the great fountain of truth and peace that is swelling up in the soul.

Therefore, the happier we are in the possession of the truth, the more we shall help others by inspiring them with a sense of its realness and its value. Sunshine always has a winning quality, that makes people wish to hold it and keep it. One of the first conscious acts of an infant is to grasp at sunbeams with its chubby hands; and all through life we are seeking the sunshine of the sky and the sunlight of the heart. Whoever reflects it, helps others. It is a Christian service to be happy.—Zion's Herald.

THE LITTLE CHILDREN THAT ARE GONE.—Why do they come, these little ones that enter our homes by the gateway of suffering, and that linger with us a few months, uttering no words, smiling in a mysterious silence, yet speaking eloquently all the time of the purity and sweetness of heaven? Why must they open the tenderest fountains of our natures only to leave them so soon, choked with the bitter tears of loss? It is impossible wholly to answer such questions of the tortured heart; but one can say, in general, that these little temporary wanderers from a celestial home, come and go because of the great love of God. It is an inestimable blessing to have been the parent of a child that has the stamp of heaven upon its brow, to hold it in one's arms, to minister to it, to gaze fondly down into the little upturned face, and to rejoice in the unsullied beauty of its smiles, and then to give it back to God at his call, with the thought that in heaven, as upon earth, it is still our own child, a member of the household, still to be counted always as one of the children whom God hath given us. Such a love chastens and sanctifies the hearts of the father and mother, carries them out beyond time and sense, and gives them a hold upon the unseen. As things of great value always cost, it is worth all the sorrow to have known this holy affection, and to have this treasure in heaven. —Chicago Advance.

SOMETHING TO AVOID.—A little personal pique, a bit of wounded vanity, a sudden flame of anger, often undoes the most substantial and faithful work, and nullifies the most intelligent and wise action. It is one of the painful things in experience that effort is often defeated by these small, purely personal, and often momentary feelings, which are generally unintelligent and unwise. Life would be freed from some of its most painful features if men always acted to each other on a basis of real justice and intelligence, and left their small personal feelings and prejudices out of sight.

If you wish to see things clearly, and to be just with your fellow-men, keep clear of the fumes of vanity and the thick atmosphere of mere personal feeling. Make it a rule to see what a man is and does, and to value him by these things. A person may be very distasteful to us and yet be eminently useful and successful in the world. —Christian Union.

"Advertising is to a genuine article what manure is to land—it largely increases the product. Thousands of persons may be reading your advertisement while you are eating or sleeping or attending to your business; hence, public attention is attracted, new customers come to you, and if you render them a satisfactory equivalent for their money they continue to patronize you and recommend you to their friends."—P. T. Barnum.

Mails at 250 Miles an Hour.

Within a twelvemonth from the present date mails will be carried from Boston to New York City in sixty minutes, writes a Boston correspondent of a daily paper. So say the capitalists who are making arrangements for the establishment of a transport line on the so-called "post electric system" for the conveyance of letters and packages between the metropolis and the modern Athens. Even the least sanguine backers of the enterprise are confident that if the expected public support is given to the scheme, not more than two years will be required at most for the establishment of the necessary plant in running order to bring the two centers of population within an hour's distance by post. The said plant will resemble, as to its most essential part, a little elevated railway supported on a single line of tall iron uprights and stretching from the post-office here to that on the Island of Manhatten. Along the track on top runs a small car laden with mail freight, which at certain intervals during its transit is seen to go under queer looking box-shaped arches. These box-like arrangements contain each one a coil of wire, passing beneath the rail below and around over the arch, so that the moving mail carriage runs, as it were, through a succession of coiled wire hoops. And these latter communicate the motive power to the vehicle.

Such a hoop of magnetized coiled wire is called a "helix," and possesses this peculiar property; that if a bar of iron or steel be placed with one end near the centre of the coil the bar will be drawn into that centre. Place a number of similar coils in a row and start an electric current through them; then apply the bar to the first coil, and by cutting off and letting on the circuit at the proper intervals, so as to disengage the bar from the attraction of one coil in time to have it drawn on by the next, the bar may be made to move continuously through the loops. It is in this way that the little mail-car of magnetized steel is caused to pass along its rails through successive coils of boxed-in wire, the latter being magnetized by a current from a dynamo which the car itself shut off and turns on automatically as it proceeds. The speed to be attained by the car in this manner is almost incalculable. As is recognized in mechanics a constant propelling force is productive of nearly infinite velocity, obstructed only by the resistance of friction. In this system the only friction comes from the air and the slight contact of the car with the rails. Two hundred and fifty miles an hour is not thought to be an overestimate of the speed easily to be compassed by the port-electric post dispatch. At the starting-point the wire coils will have to be close together and on up-grades; but elsewhere, and especially on down-grades, they may be few and far between, the motive power needed being slight. Six stations, placed at intervals between here and New York, will supply the requisite currents from dynamos.

Many experts think that the system is destined to revolutionize the postal service in this country. For instance, it is expected that instead of mails hours apart between Boston and New York, carriages will be sent over the tracks from either end of the line at five-minute intervals, thus rendering it unnecessary the waiting for mails to close, and giving people in one city an opportunity to read their letters two hours after they are written in the other. Once proved the notion a success here, and it will be quickly adopted everywhere. By applying it on a larger scale, too, who knows that it may not serve for the transportation of passengers some day? At the rate of 250 miles an hour one could put a girdle around the earth in four days! Truly, it is a wonderful century we live in.

Be not instable in thy resolutions, nor various in thy actions, nor inconstant in thy affections; so deliberate, that thou mayst resolve; so resolve, that thou mayst perform; so perform, that thou mayst persevere: mutability is the badge of infirmity.—Enchiridion of deaths that result from malaria is frightful. There is no disease that is so insidious in its attack. Its approach is stealthy and it permeates every fibre of the body, and remedies, which if applied at the outset, by delay lose their power. Dr. Tutt's Liver Pills have proven the most valuable malarial antidote ever discovered. A noted clergyman of New York pronounces them "the greatest blessing of the nineteenth century," and says: "in these days of defective plumbing and sewer gas, no family should be without them." JOURDEN—HOLLINSWORTH.—At the residence of the bride's father, Mr. H. Hollingsworth, July 20, 1890, by Rev. J. W. Tinnin, Mr. J. N. Jourden and Miss Mollie Hollingsworth, both of Clark county, Miss.

Obituaries.

Obituaries of less than thirty-five lines of six words each, will be published free of charge. For all over thirty-five lines, five cents for each additional line will be charged, and the money must invariably accompany the manuscript. When parties desire extra copies of the ADVOCATE containing the obituaries of their friends, they must send with the order the sum of five cents for each extra copy ordered.

LANEY.—On the morning of July 10, 1890, the sweet spirit of Miss MINNIE LANEY took its flight to heaven. She was the youngest daughter of Mr. R. W. and Mrs. Susan Laney, who resided five miles west of Shannon, Lee county, Miss. She left eight sisters, two brothers, and the best of parents. She died in the bloom of young womanhood, aged eighteen years six months and seven days.

She was a devoted Christian, having professed a hope and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in August, 1886, under the ministry of Bro. J. B. Stone. God blessed these good parents with a family of noble, God-fearing children, whose circle was permitted to remain unbroken for more than thirty years. Though the jewel is taken away, may they find consolation in the Word, which teaches that "he doeth all things well." It is, doubtless, as a brother said, "These providences are visited upon us to take our affections off of earth and to bind us on to heaven." Let us think the Master had a use for this precious girl, and that her actual life has only just begun, under the approving smile of God, to continue through all eternity. How many die after having filled a simple niche in the wall of time, soon to be forgotten! Miss Minnie did not live in vain. The land in which she lived, with all its varied interests—its churches, its schools, its society—received a blessed influence from her pure presence which can not soon die. Of her it may truthfully be said, 'She blessed us in her life and in her death." A brief mention of her last hours seems timely. She was ill only a few days and suffered much. As the crisis drew near she grew delirious. She spoke of a recently departed and very dear grandmother whom she seemed to recognize on the other shore, and at one time exclaimed, "How long till I shall reach heaven!" Thus passed away one of the purest, noblest characters that ever blessed the world; one with the grandest possibilities before her. Dear friends, be not grieved. God will have her grand spirit develop to an infinitely grander perfection under the light of his countenance and the benediction of his eternal smile.

F. AND F.

DOYLE—Departed this life at his quiet home, Doyline, Webster parish, La., July 2, 1890, in the full triumph of faith, Bro. DOWNS BREWSTER DOYLE, who was born in White county, Tenn., of Methodist parents, September 10, 1817, and came to Claiborne, now Webster, parish in 1843. He was married to Miss Emeline Austin, in his native State, in 1841. By assiduity he acquired means and raised, respectably and comfortably, a large family who now, consisting of his wife and seven surviving children, remain mourning their great loss.

He suffered, with patience and Christian fortitude and resignation, of throat difficulty for many months, to which affection he finally succumbed in the house, with some improvements and additions, he had lived for fifty-six years, serving the community as a faithful man—sometimes in important offices of trust.

He was a Christian man. He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1872, at a meeting held by Rev. S. S. Scott, near his home. He continued faithful, serving the church in many a capacity—Sunday-school superintendent, steward, district steward, and delegate both to District and Annual Conferences. His home was the comfortable and welcome home of the preachers—many of whom will recollect Capt. Doyle. In his death not only the family, but the community, and especially the church, have met a serious loss. May God bless and sustain the family in their bereavement, and raise up his equal in the church!

LEWIS A. REED.

SLEDGE—We, as committee for Eden Sunday-school, Carrollton circuit, Grenada district, North Mississippi Conference, do hereby express our regret at the loss of a member from this Sabbath-school. Miss MOLLIE, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. C. Sledge, who was called from earth on Sunday morning, June 29, 1890, after a few hours' illness, aged fourteen years.

Our hearts go out in sympathy to the home where the daughter and sister is so sadly missed. May the loved ones feel that God's ways are always right, and may she and they, as unbroken family, have part in the first resurrection.

CARRIE E. COGDELL,
For Committee.

WHITE—ELI WHITE was born in Pompey, Onondaga county, N. Y., July 11, 1839. In 1857 he left New York and came to Mississippi. He was married, September 13, 1860, to Miss Celia Ratcliff. He and the companion of his bosom were received into the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1889, by the Rev. G. W. Gordon. He fell on sleep at his home in Carroll county, Miss., June 17, 1890.

Bro. White had many friends, who took pleasure in speaking of his virtues. He had a kind and loving heart. Said he, "If it is God's will, I am ready to go." May his wife and three sons continue to follow husband and father! May they find that rest "that remaineth to the people of God!"

D. L. COGDELL.

AUSTIN—Mrs. HARRIETTE AUSTIN was born in East Feliciana parish, La., in 1826, where she lived until May, 1890, when she fell on sleep. Sister Austin was married early in life to Mr. Bradford, with whom she lived until 1858, when he was called to give an account of his stewardship, leaving her with two children to support. She was a kind mother, a loving wife and a friend to all. She joined the Methodist Church early in life, of which she remained a member to the day of her death.

Sister Austin had been afflicted for a long time, and her sufferings were great, but were borne with Christian fortitude. The writer had the privilege of visiting and conversing with Sister Austin during her last illness several times, and enjoyed worshiping with her. She loved the worship of God, and said to me more than once, "My faith in God keeps me up," and expressed herself as being willing at any time to go. Sister Austin, after the death of her husband, lived a widow until 1871, when she was married to Mr. L. S. Austin, who preceded her to heaven only a few months, where he was waiting and watching for her. They sleep together in the cemetery at Jackson, La., from whence they will come forth on the morning of the resurrection, and will go forth to meet the Lord in the air, and embrace their children again who are left to weep for her, to whom I would say: Your mother sleeps in Jesus from whence none ever wake to weep.

D. F. QUICK.

BULLOCH—The following resolutions were adopted July 13, 1890, by the Lake Charles (La.) Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Sunday-school:

Whereas, Miss CARRIE BULLOCH, a member of our Sunday-school, died July 10, 1890, aged fifteen years; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we sincerely mourn her death, and deeply sympathize with her bereaved family.

Resolved, That in the regularity of her attendance at Sunday-school, her manifest interest in her lessons, and exemplary deportment, she has left us an example worthy of our careful imitation.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be furnished to our local newspapers, and to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, with a request for their publication.

GEO. H. WELLS,
For Committee.

DAWSON—Died at Lisbon, La., July 2, 1890, Mrs. MATILDA OVERTON DAWSON, wife of Bro. J. W. Dawson. She was born in Claiborne parish, La., February 22, 1850; embraced religion and joined the Methodist Church about the sixteenth year of her age, and ever after lived a devoted Christian life.

She was universally beloved; even the colored people loved her and mourned her death. She was buried from the Methodist Church at Lisbon, the writer preaching the funeral sermon to a large congregation of weeping relatives and friends. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord; they rest from their labors and their works follow them." May the God of all grace support and comfort the bereaved husband, motherless children, and devoted parents.

J. L. P. SHEPPARD.

BERRY—Miss ANN CATHERINE BERRY (familiarly known as "Aunt Katy") was born September 11, 1811, in Camden, S. C., and died in Johnston Station, Miss., at the home of Sister M. C. Berry, who was the wife of Rev. H. B. Berry, who died several years ago, and was a member of the Mississippi Conference. "Aunt Katy" was a sister of his. She professed religion when about ten years of age, and remained a consistent member till the day of her departure, which occurred on June 29.

The writer visited her from time to time, and always found her enjoying peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ. She passed away in great peace, and fell on sleep.

G. B.

STOLKS—Little ADA KITTURE died at her father's residence, in St. Helena parish, La., aged eight years. Little Ada was born March 12, 1885, and died March 31, 1890. She was the daughter of J. W. and Lenora Stolks. She told her mother she was going to God; he would take care of her. She suffered intensely from a burn. Her sufferings are no more. Her parents deeply mourn her loss; but their loss is her eternal gain. The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord!

MINNIE JONES.

THE MISSIONARY REVIEW OF THE WORLD, for August, is one of great interest. Dr. Bradford, of Montclair, opens with a graceful and graphic sketch of a Missionary Heroine, the first wife of the heroic Judson, and worthy of him. Dr. Pierson reviews and sums up his marvelous missionary tour abroad. He also has an article on the Lack of Consecration and Prayer. Prof. Schodde gives a translation of a paper by the late Dr. Franz Delitzsch on the Conversion of the Jews. Dr. Storrow concludes his series of valuable historical papers on missions in the 17th and 18th centuries. There is a short and able paper on Prayer and Missions. A Chinese Secret Society and its Workings, by the editor of the Chinese Evangelist, will be a surprise to most readers. Dr. Ellinwood discusses Missions in Pagan Lands with his usual intelligence and force. The other seven departments contain a vast amount of missionary intelligence, choice correspondence, a full account of the proceedings of the late International Missionary Union, Monthly Concert matter, editorial notes, etc. Published by Funk & Wagnalls, 18 and 20 Astor Place, New York. $2 per year; in clubs of ten, $1 50. Specimen numbers, 20 cents.

NOW the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect in every good work, to do his will, working in you that which is well-pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ; to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen.—Hebrews xiii, 20, 21.

GRANT'S FURNITURE STORE

NEW STORE, AT 114 Camp St. NEW ORLEANS. NEXT DOOR TO ADVOCATE OFFICE.

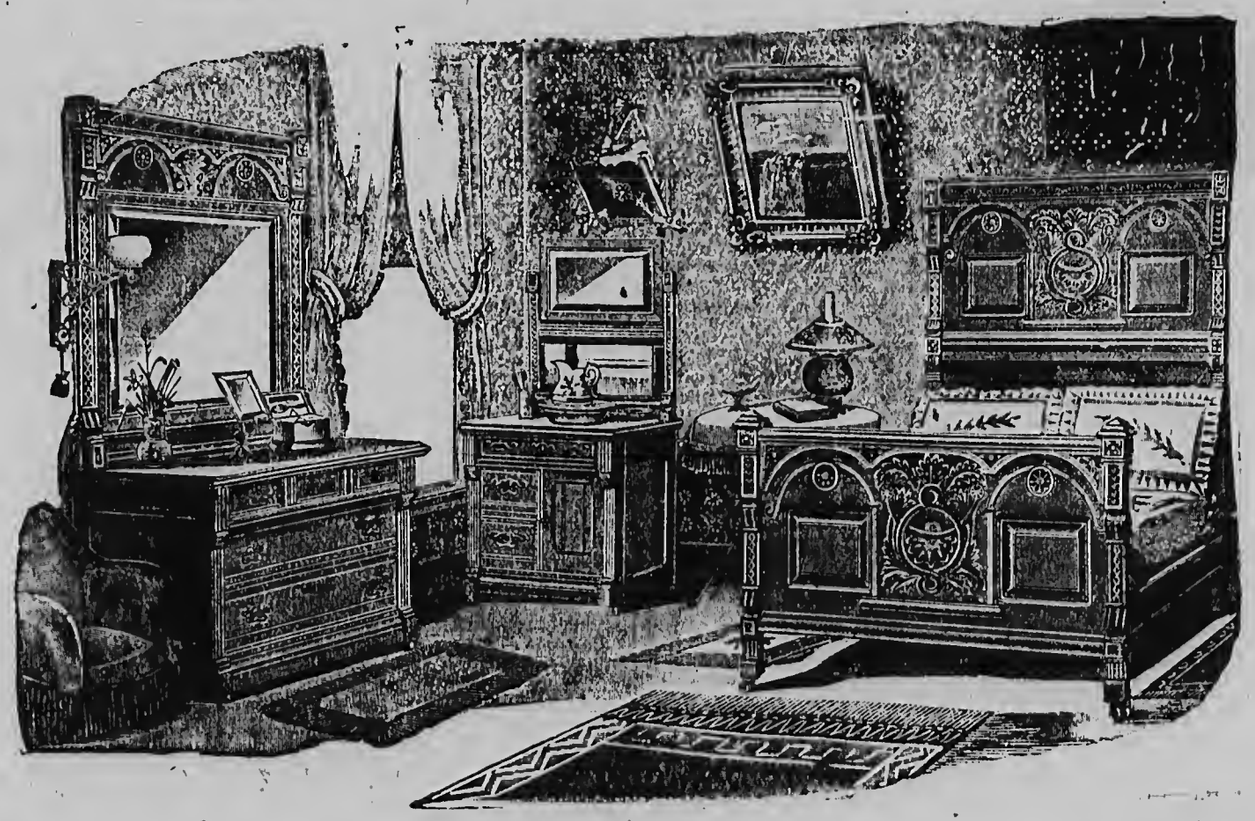
BEAUTIFUL PARLOR GOODS.

I have one entire floor devoted to the display of these goods alone, and have over sixty different varieties to select from. Complete Suits anywhere from $35 to $650, and odd pieces—such as Sofas, Divans, Easy Chairs, Patent Rockers, Window and Reception Chairs—at as low prices in proportion as the Complete Suits. I have these goods in Cherry, Mahogany and Walnut, and can give you your choice of any of the following coverings: Crushed, Embossed, Plain and Silk Plushes, Hair Cloth, Mohair, Raw and Spun Silks, Satins, English Tapestries, French Valours, Petit Point, Brocatelle or Damasks. I make a specialty of these goods, have many of the patterns made specially for my own trade, and can offer a greater variety at lower prices than any other house in the South.

NEW STOCK

in all departments, and every grade of goods, from the cheapest to the most expensive, in endless variety. I have all the latest and most fashionable designs, and, as I have only purchased from factories whose goods I have been selling for the past six years, can and do guarantee every piece of Furniture that leaves my establishment.



LOW PRICES

are the order of the day, and I propose to sell strictly reliable goods at a lower price than has ever before been quoted in the South. My store has long been known as "The Cheapest Furniture House in New Orleans," and this season I intend to add to the reputation it has gained in this respect. I only ask a chance to save you money.

HANDSOME BEDROOM SUITS.

A very extensive assortment of these goods in every style; and whether you wish to pay $40 for a Complete Suit of twelve pieces, or from that price anywhere up to $1,000, I can sell you what you require. I have these goods in Black Walnut, Natural and Dark Cherry, and Natural and Dark Mahogany, or in imitation of any of these woods, and can furnish the very latest, neatest and most artistic designs.

I have also a large and carefully selected stock of Hall, Library, Dining-room and Kitchen Furniture; Reed, Rattan and Wicker Chairs, Rockers, Lounges and Cribs; Brackets, What-nots, Easels, Music Stands and Fancy Top Tables; Carpets, Carpet Strips, Matting, Shades, Curtains, Curtain Poles, and everything necessary to furnish a house completely throughout.

LARGE SALES.

I have a large city trade, and am shipping goods extensively to every Southern State. My country trade has increased very rapidly during the past year, and the facilities which my new store affords me for carrying a larger and better stock will enable me to still further extend it, and to give complete satisfaction to my customers.

Monteagle Assembly and Summer Schools.

EIGHTH ANNUAL SESSION JULY 1 to AUGUST 25, 1890.

Assembly Park open to Summer Residents from June 1.

MONTEAGLE, TENN., widely known as the "Southern Chautauqua," is on a mountain plateau or spur of the lower Cumberlands, reached by mountain railway, one hour from Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis R. R. at Cowan, Tenn.

Rising 2,000 feet above the sea level, dry, pure air, no malaria, no mosquitos, magnificent scenery and abundance of pure spring water, it is the great natural sanitarium of the Southwest.

With 100 acres of picturesque, wooded heights enclosed; with improved water-works, sewerage, daily mails, telegraph, public buildings, and near 100 cottages; with the annual Assembly Platform and Summer Schools, affording a continual feast, it is a quiet "lodge in the wilderness," having all the world within call.

Parties desiring cottages for the summer should make early application.

For full particulars as to rates, advantages, etc., or any information desired, address,

F. H. PEEBLES, Gen'l M'g'r,
Monteagle, Tenn.

The Clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders.

The Episcopal Diocese, of New York, has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and the Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Postmaster General Wanamaker, referring to the appointment of Major Eaton to be postmaster at New Orleans, said: "The selection was made largely on account of Mr. Eaton's consistent record as an anti-lottery man, and I hope the department will be able, with his co-operation, to give the existing laws much more effective force. We need the heartiest co-operation at the New Orleans end to effect any reforms even under the proposed laws."

It is said that leading Republican and Democratic senators have agreed that the Force bill shall go over to December. This is regarded as in the nature of an informal understanding which originated with Republicans who can see no utility or advantage in pressing the measure at this session, especially when opinions as to its expediency are so conflicting.

The Southern Pacific Company has accepted the offer of the subsidy of $315,000, and the rights of way to complete a coast line of railways between Santa Margarita and Ellwood, thus making a continuous line from San Francisco to Los Angeles. A convention of delegates from coast counties will be held in San Francisco, August 16, to make arrangements with the railroad company.

The Navy Department has fixed the twenty-third of August as the time for transportation of the remains of the late John Ericsson, the great Swedish inventor, on board the Baltimore.

The charter of the Bank of Natchitoches was filed on August 2. It is now a State bank, with a capital of $50,000.

About seven miles north of Bradford, Ind., the south-bound passenger train from Chicago came in collision with the north-bound passenger from Louisville. Several of the cars were completely telescoped. Two men were killed and nine injured. The conductor of the south-bound train intended to side-track his train three miles north of the wreck, but went to sleep.

A hail storm visited Sioux Falls, Dak., and Richland, Minn., on August 3, and did much damage. The damage at the latter place is estimated at $75,000.

A mass meeting of the Republicans of Denton county, Texas, was held in Dallas, on August 3. Resolutions were passed condemning the Force bill, affirming "it was calculated to act as a mischief-maker, and would result in a rupture of harmony in the South."

The Senate committee, on August 4, took up the anti-lottery bill prepared at the postoffice department, and which was reported favorably to the House last week. Some doubt was expressed as to the constitutional right of Congress to interfere with matter intrusted to the mails, and the bill was referred to a sub-committee consisting of Senators Sawyer, Mitchell and Reagan for examination and report.

The convention of the State Farmers' Alliance was opened, on August 6, at Baton Rouge, La.

In the Senate, on August 4, Mr. Gibson, of Louisiana, urged the necessity of taking up and passing the River and Harbor bill. The failure to pass the bill, he said, was equal to a tax of $50,000,000 a year to the producers in the Mississippi Valley.

FOREIGN.

A company has been formed at Rio de Janeiro for the purpose of assuring the stability to coffee quotations and to facilitate business in that commodity. Agencies will be established in London, New York, Havre and Hamburg. Shares in the new company to the amount of £50,000 have been subscribed.

Nine thousand acres of rye and cotton land in the province of Gerbeih, Egypt, have been covered with an inflow of salt water, and the growing crops thereon have been destroyed.

The London postmen recently discharged on account of their activity in organizing the men, and urging their demands for better treatment, are in a starving condition, despite the efforts of the union to help them. The newspapers very generally urge Postmaster General Raikes to reinstate them.

A famine prevails in the Soudan. In some parts of the country the deaths from starvation average 100 daily.

The laws against the Hebrews are being enforced with renewed severity in Russia. Large numbers of Jews who live near the German and Austrian frontiers have been compelled to move further within Prussian territory, the pretext being that many of them are engaged in smuggling.

Emperor William paid a visit to King Leopold of Belgium on August 2, and met with an enthusiastic reception.

The Russian papers announce that transportation to Siberia will shortly be abolished as a judicial punishment. They omit to mention the fact that it will be maintained, as now, without a judicial sentence.

Affairs between Salvador and Guatemala are in statu quo, and it is believed that the present difficulty between the countries will be settled satisfactorily.

The cholera is increasing at Mecca. On August 2 there were 400 deaths reported.

The city of Pekin and two others in China is submerged, and business is paralyzed.

Order has been restored in the capital of the Argentine Republic, and the provinces are tranquil.

The Czar, in a letter to his minister of war, emphasizes the fact that Russia requires a strong military organization, not for aggressive purposes, but to maintain the honor and integrity of the empire and to protect the invaluable blessings of peace, which he hopes will be long preserved.

Emperor William arrived at Osborne on August 4, and was graciously received by Queen Victoria.

Unless more care is given to the hair, the coming man is liable to be a hairless animal; hence, to prevent the hair from falling, use Hall's Hair Renewer.

Crystal Springs Camp Meeting.

The nineteenth annual camp meeting at the Henington Camp Ground, near Crystal Springs, will commence on Thursday, August 28, 1890, and close on Wednesday evening following. Ample accommodations will be provided, at reasonable rates, for the entertainment of all who attend. The usual reduction of fare will be given from points on the Illinois Central railroad. We cordially invite all who desire to enjoy this annual "feast of tabernacles," to come and share with us its blessings in the spirit of love and harmony. In order to defray the expenses of the meeting, and to avoid the necessity of a public collection, a small gate fee of twenty-five cents for single admission is required. Children under twelve years, free. Tickets during the meeting, twenty-five cents.

J. W. MCNEIL, Sec'y.

Rapides Camp Meeting.

Our second annual camp meeting will commence at the Rapides Camp Ground, August 24. The place is favorably and conveniently located. Considerable preparations are being made for the entertainment of the public. We expect the following named preachers to be present on that occasion: Revs. O. M. Lyons, F. N. Parker, F. S. Parker, J. T. Sawyer, J. L. Hoffpauir, A. E. Olay, B. F. White, William Wimberly, J. F. Foster and S. H. Whatley. We extend a hearty invitation to all. M. L. DUNNAM, Pres.

B. K. HUNTER, Sec.

St. Tammany Camp Meeting.

The St. Tammany Camp Meeting for 1890 will begin October 9, and will continue about six days. All ministers of the gospel are earnestly requested to come and help us work for the salvation of souls. G. R. ELLIS, P. C.

Morton Camp Meeting,

This camp meeting will begin on Friday night before the fourth Sunday in August. The camp ground is only one mile from Morton station, V. and M. railroad. Ministers will be carried out and entertained free of charge.

D. P. BRADFORD, P. C.

Lake Circuit Camp Meeting.

The annual camp meeting of the Lake circuit, Brandon district, will begin on Friday before the fifth Sunday in August.

BY SUMMER SEAS.

BY WILLIAM D. KELLY.

A silver haze above the meadows floats,
And shimmers on the surface of the seas,
Where the spread sails upon the masted boats
Await the coming of the tardy breeze.

There is no ripple in the tall green grass,
No rustle in the leafy boughs is heard,
And by the whisper of no winds that pass
The silence of the summer day is stirred.

Where yonder fringe of matted seaweed shows
The highest limit of the billows' reach,
In lazy languor, as it ebbs and flows,
The full tide plashes on the sandy beach.

And overhead, so vast and blue, one dreams
Of oceans held in equipoise, the sky;
With here and there a sunlit cloud that seems
The white wings of some vessel drifting by.

It was, methinks, on such another morn
Some dreamer of the fabled days of yore
Saw Neptune, heralded by Triton's horn,
First speed his chariot the waters o'er.

Or, lying hidden in some dusky shade,
And looking outward over level lawns,
Heard those weird melodies which Pan essayed
On tuneful reeds, to please his dancing fawns.

And were those merely myths? Here, by the verge
Of the old ocean, he who dreams may see
The nereids from their caves emerge,
And hear Pan's pipe resound across the lea.

Letter No. 6.

GLASGOW—THE NECROPOLIS—LOCH LOMOND—ON THE TOP OF BEN LOMOND—THE GUIDE'S CONVERSATION—THE PONY AND GUIDE LUNCH TOGETHER ON THE EDGE OF A PRECIPICE—INVERSNAID—A VISIT TO THE CAVE OF ROB ROY.

In Glasgow there is little to arrest the progress of the traveler. These things may be said of it: that it is the great ship-building city of Great Britain; it has a chimney almost as high as Washington's Monument, and it possesses an ancient cathedral built in the twelfth century. To me the most striking sight in Glasgow is the Necropolis. On a lofty, conical-shaped hill the cemetery of the city has been located. The tombstones cover the hill-sides, tier above tier, and rank upon rank, like a white-robed army. The hill fairly bristles and glistens with marble slabs and monuments to the very summit, and upon the apex of the eminence towers high above all the monument of John Knox. When, at a distance, you look at the marble-clothed hill, it seems to the hasty glance a part of the city; but a second look reveals it to be the city of the dead. It is a striking and solemnly impressive sight. I toiled up the spiral ascent to the top, and sat down to rest and think under the shadow of the monument of Knox. Next to a church, give me a cemetery in which to read and meditate and pray.

In Glasgow and the town of Ayr, I saw for the first time of my life barefooted white women on the streets; and I saw numbers of them. Verily I can see a new light on that sweet couplet:

"Will you go to the Indies, my Mary,
And leave Old Scotia's shore?"

Another spectacle that impressed me more agreeably in the two cities mentioned above, was the way that women carry their babies. The mother wraps her shawl about herself and child in such a way as to make a nest for the little one in front. The shawl is not pinned, but in some ingenious way it is passed in and under itself so as to be self-confined, while it holds the babe securely. The strain is transferred thus from the arm to the back, and the woman walks erect as an arrow. Moreover, the folding of the wrap has, to my eye, all the lines of grace, while the baby, snug and comfortable, looks out serene and smiling on the world.

The Indian mother straps her child on her back, and goes bent forward along the road. The present matron of America hangs her child on one arm, and goes around inclining to one side, like the leaning Tower of Pisa, or like a bow when tightly strung. The Scottish mother is ahead of the females of ancient and modern America.

From Glasgow it is twenty miles by rail to Loch Lomond. We passed the historic ruins of Dumbarton Castle on the way. As we drew near the queen of Scotland's lakes, happening to glance from my car window, I saw looming up before me, high into the heavens, a purple mass of beauty and majesty in the form of Ben Lomond. I recognized the mountain instantly from pictures I had seen.

An hundred tourists, myself among them, took a steamer at the southern end of the lake. Now, although the boat had abundance of seats, and we were all on deck, and there was nothing to keep everybody from seeing, behold! as soon as the steamer started, every living soul stood on their feet, and kept there as long as I was with them. Drawn by the beauty of the scenery, hungry to see all, "they would not down." The lake is twenty-five miles long, with a varying width of from one to five miles. A dozen wood-crowned islands dot, or rather gem, the southern part of the loch. The green-clad hills slope in graceful lines to the shore for the first three or four miles; then suddenly the mountains, in towering majesty, surround it, clothed in robes of royal purple, and with clouds resting on their heads as crowns.

At Rowordennan, half-way up the lake, I left the great body of tourists, and disembarked at the foot of Ben Lomoud, in order to ascend to the summit. It takes two to three hours to ascend, and one and a half to descend. Procuring a guide and pony, I sallied forth and up. And up it was. A dozen times I thought I saw the top, and as often another, and bolder and higher swell of the mountain greeted me. The path runs zigzag all the way up to overcome the steepness. Halfway up a covey of grouse flew up from the heather at our feet, and went skimming down the mountain-side. A few sheep scattered about were hard to be distinguished at first sight from boulders of limestone, which cling here to the face of the mountain in great profusion. The sheep seemed surprised to see us, and, after a swift, startled look, scampered off amid the rocks.

As we toiled upward the guide and I entered into conversation. He informed me that his wages was ten shillings a week. Think of it!—two dollars and a half a week, in which he is required frequently to climb to the top of Ben Lomond.

"Have you a family?" I asked.

"Yes; a wife and six children."

Again the song comes up:

"Will you go to the Indies, my Mary," etc.

I then begged him to ride, and let me walk some; but he wouldn't hear to it. After a little he told me that a few days before he had piloted a lady and gentleman up, and that the gentleman rode and the lady walked all the way.

"What!" I exclaimed, and then added, "They must have been husband and wife!"

The guide was not certain.

"Was the man from America?"

He thought he was.

"What excuse did he offer for riding, and allowing the lady to walk and climb a distance of five miles?"

"He said he wanted to keep his feet dry!"

Here I collapsed. I fell into a fit of musing of that precious man, with those blessed feet of his, that lasted a mile. I finally emerged with the conclusion that he was already dry through and through. Heart dry, soul dry, the whole life and man dead and barren and dry.

The sensation of steadily rising higher and higher is peculiar. As you notice that the horizon is expanding, that the houses beneath you are getting smaller, and the clouds nearer, there is a combination of thrills that pass through the heart that leave a vivid and everlasting memory. Finally we reached the top—guide, pony, and myself. What a view! Some one says you can see half of Scotland from this peak. The summit is about twenty-five feet square, and level almost as a table. On the northern side the mountain falls away in a sharp, precipitous descent to the valleys beneath you. The pony walked to the edge of this side and began cropping the grass. (I was not on him then!) The guide sat on the same little plot of grass, and began eating his lunch of bread and cheese, with his legs dangling over the precipice, while he meditatively looked towards the North Pole.

I shall carry through eternity with me the memory of the glorious view I obtained at noon, of July 16, from the summit of majestic Ben Lomond. Beneath me, and miles away, lay Loch Lomond, Loch Katrine, Loch Achray, and four other lakes gleaming like burnished silver in the sunlight. Stirling and Edinburgh, fifty miles away, that can easily be seen from this point, were hidden by a falling rain that walled in the eastern view. Southward I could see thirty miles, and no farther, because of a vail of low-hanging clouds. But west and north mountains upon mountains, peak beyond peak, in wild and yet harmonious array, stretched away in the distance, filling the soul with awe and reverence. Great altars of God they seemed to be, with the mist of a perpetual cloud-like incense drifting about their sides, or hovering over their heads. I removed my hat and worshiped God in their company.

While lingering upon the fascinating spot, suddenly four English youths made their appearance, panting from their long, steep ascent. They were from Lancastershire, and viewing Scotland on foot. They remained only a few minutes, evidently coming up merely to say they had been there. Taking the southern side of the mountain—which, although steep as the roof of a house, yet is less sharp in decline than the others—taking this side, and utterly ignoring the winding path, they went slipping, sliding and bounding down, followed by a large black dog barking after them in high glee. It looked like they would reach the bottom in fifteen minutes; but evidently they met with difficulties, for on reaching the foot of the mountain, one hour and a half afterward, I discovered that they had just arrived. I sat down with the ruddy-checked boy-travelers to dinner in the pretty flower-surrounded hotel at the base of Ben Lomond. The dinner was composed of salmon, trout, roast beef and gooseberry pie. My! how those Lancastershire boys did eat. It did me good to watch them. They were a little embarrassed at their own appetites, as I gathered from unmistakable Masonic signals that passed between them.

In the afternoon I took another passing steamer and pursued my journey to the head of the lake. I remained over night at Inversnaid, where I landed in order to visit the cave of Rob Roy. Many of my readers will remember Walter Scott's description of this cave in one, and, I believe, two of his works. It derives an added interest from the fact that Robert Bruce lived in concealment in it after his defeat at Dalree. The cave is on the eastern bank of Loch Lomond, one mile above Inversnaid. On leaving the hotel you plunge into the woods at once. The right, or eastern, bank of the lake at this point is exceedingly lofty, and in places precipitous. A wild-looking forest covers the sides. Looking up through the boughs of the trees you can see the tall cliffs hundreds of feet above you, crowned with huge masses of gray stone. At some period in the past the cliff above shook its head and shoulders, and sent down great showers of these limestone boulders all along the side surface down to the very water's edge. The path to the cave, one hundred feet above the level of the lake in some places, and hundreds of feet below the cliff, winds through the forest, in and around these great rocks, through dense thickets, over musical little waterfalls, and by banks lovely with the tints of myriads of wild flowers. I gathered a handful of these crimson, yellow, purple and white sylvan beauties that charmed my eye that evening, and that must have gladdened the vision of Bruce and his few noble followers when they trod this self-same path to the cave. At last I reached it where the rooks were in wildest confusion, and where the mountains towered highest on the opposite side. Descending fully thirty feet amid the boulders, you turn to the left, walking on a narrow ledge around the jutting shoulder of a great gray mass of granite, you come to the mouth of the cave. Truly it was a safe place. Fifty or sixty feet above the water, hidden among the rocks, overshadowed and screened by the trees, it would have taken the sharpest of eyes to have discovered the place. I discovered it by the help of a guide. There is an upper cave, and fifteen feet lower another one, somewhat larger, which I explored, or rather examined, with lucifer matches. It is now not over ten feet square; but was evidently once larger. Memory was busy in recalling the noble life and achievements of the fugitive king, who had once slept on the cold rocks at my feet. The reader will readily understand why this cave impressed me more than the palatial abodes of royalty to-day, and how the arch of this gloomy cavern spoke more powerfully to my soul than the parapets of castle and the lofty vaulting of cathedral. Quickly and willingly I bared my head here at the very memory of a great man, which thing I have never done to a merely rich man.

That evening, at the Inversnaid Hotel, I sat down with thirty ladies and gentlemen to a dinner consisting of eight courses. I had little appetite, and no sympathy with the social tomfoolery that was going on in connection with that dining-table. My thoughts were at the cave with the Bruce. I studied their faces, and again thought of him. I noticed their devotion to the bill of fare, and the abundance before them, and thought of the royal fugitive hungry in his cave. I saw that they knew how to eat! I remembered that Bruce knew how to live, and to achieve. I pushed the contrast one step further: The world, I said to myself, has never heard of these wine-drinking human figures before me; but all the nations have heard the thrilling story of Robert Bruce, the man who arose from the cave on the shore of Loch Lomond to be King of Scotland, and the conqueror of the armies of England.

To the People of the United States.

ADDRESS OF THE ANTI-LOTTERY CONVENTION.

The Anti-Lottery Convention, which met in Baton Rouge, August 7, issued the following address to the people of the United States:

Your fellow-citizens of the State of Louisiana opposed to lottery gambling and lottery charters, assembled in convention at Baton Rouge, August 7, 1890, make to you this appeal for aid in the struggle they are engaged in with a powerful gambling corporation which sits here among us, like a giant octopus, and stretches its arms to the remotest hamlet in the land. For your sympathy they ask not, because that they have this well they know, by the unanimous voice of the free press of this great country, which, untouched and untouchable by lottery influence, has denounced, in no uncertain tones, the infamy we are combating. We desire briefly to state to you the facts. In 1868 the carpet-bag Legislature of Louisiana, at the instigation of a syndicate of gamblers formed in New York in 1863, composed of John A. Morris, Ben Wood, C. H. Murray and others, chartered the Louisiana Lottery Company with a capital of $1,000,000, giving it a monopoly of drawing lotteries in the State for twenty-five years. This grant was notoriously obtained by bribery and corruption. At that time the public regarded it with horror, and the men connected with it were pursued with public and private condemnation and disgrace. For ten years it maintained itself against constant legislative assault by similar corrupt means. In 1879 the Legislature repealed this charter, a result accomplished by a majority of only two votes in the Senate. This repeal was practically nullified by an injunction issued by Edward C. Billings, United States district judge for Louisiana, who held in the very teeth of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, rendered in the similar case of Boyd vs. Alabama, that an immoral bargain, such as this charter enclosed, was a sacred contract protected by the Constitution of the United States and binding upon the police power of a sovereign State. The same Legislature that repealed this charter called a constitutional convention. This convention was attacked by the lottery people with money, with Judge Billings' decision, with promises to give up its monopoly, to retire from politics, and to allow a provision to be inserted in the Constitution prohibiting all lotteries after January 1, 1895.

Several distinguished attorneys of the Lottery Company were elected to this body. The whole convention was surrounded with a strong lobby of purchased respectability. Under these combined influences a provision was inserted in the projected Constitution reinstating the repealed charter, without the monopoly feature, permitting the Legislature to charter other lotteries, and providing that after January 1, 1895, all lotteries should be prohibited. This provision was intended and regarded as a compromise, and rather than defeat the whole Constitution in which it was imbedded, the people adopted it with the belief that in a few years the evil would die beyond any prospect of resurrection, and such was the pledge of the Lottery Company. Mark the result. With this new lease of life came a new lease of power and a prosperity incredible. They have practically enjoyed their renounced monopoly by preventing every Legislature elected since 1880 from granting additional lottery charters. This has been accomplished by the unlimited use of money, by playing upon the opposition of good men to the multiplication of such charters, and by their control, through the ownership of certain dominant politicians of both political parties, of nominations to the Legislature. The market value of their stock has risen from $35 per share in 1879 to $1,200 per share in 1890, so that now it is more than double that of the whole banking capital of the State. They have built up the original capital, which was never subscribed, and have accumulated an enormous surplus of unknown amount, while declaring dividends of from 80 to 170 per cent. per annum, and that, too, out of only one-half of the net earnings, as the other half belongs to the lessees, Howard and Morris.

Definite information as to their list of stockholders, officers, profits and business affairs can not be obtained, as they are kept studiously concealed from the public. The scheme of their drawings has increased from a monthly capital prize of $30,000 to a monthly capital prize of $300,000, and a semi-annual prize of $600,000.

The aggregate of the schemes of the monthly and semi-annual drawings is the fabulous sum of $28,000,000 per annum, and the aggregate of their daily drawings is over $20,000,000 more. They receive annually a million and a quarter from the written policies sold on the numbers of the daily drawing, apart from the sale of the regular printed tickets. They receive annually about $22,000,000 from their monthly and semi-annual drawings. The schemes of the last drawings are so arranged that they can sell 75 per cent. of their tickets, pay 10 per cent. for selling them, lose all the prizes provided for in the schemes, pay $1,000,000 for expenses, and still make $3,000,000 profit per annum.

We make no idle assertion when we denounce these schemes as fraudulent, even from a lottery standpoint. This company offers to distribute less than 53 per cent. in prizes. No authorized lottery on earth that we know of, outside of Mexico, is allowed to distribute less than 70 per cent. The chance to win a prize of any sort in one of these drawings is about one in thirty, whereas if it were an honest lottery, it would be, at least, one in ten.

These were the reasons which induced two Postmaster-Generals of the United States to exclude it from the mails as a fraudulent lottery. What is known as the daily drawing takes place every day except Sunday, 313 times per annum. The scheme is based on the ternary combination of the natural numbers from one to seventy-eight, and on some days from one to seventy-five, giving in the one case 76,076 and in the other 67,525 different combinations of three numbers each. The prizes paid are out of all honest proportion to the cost of the tickets or the chances of winning. For instance, for a $1 ticket the chances of winning a prize of 85 cents is 1 in 3; winning a prize of $1 70, 1 in 19, and of winning a prize of $4 25 is 1 in 1,237.

In addition to these printed tickets written policies or bets on the numbers of the daily drawings are taken at the fancy of the better, with a percentage of from 22 to 41 per cent. in favor of the Lottery.

There are more than a hundred policy shops in the city of New Orleans where such tickets are written. They are placed at points where they waylay the wage-earner in his progress to and from his work. From the best information we can get the receipts of these shops average about $30 per diem. They swarm daily with slatternly women, barefooted children, bloused workingmen, youthful clerks and household servants sent to market or on some purchasing errand. None but the poor and ignorant enter these direful doors. Some of these shops keep "dream books" and other stimulants to aid the superstitious in selecting lucky numbers.

By daily repetition of play thousands of poor wretches become afflicted with the "lottery craze," and to gratify this theft and embezzlement enter innumerable households. We have the authority of the Lottery that 93 per cent. of this enormous revenue of $22,000,000—a revenue greater than that of any five average States in this Union—comes from the people of this country outside of the State of Louisiana, because its advocates have the effrontery to use this fact as an argument for its re-charter by the people of Louisiana.

Through the purchase of stock by its stockholders and friends it has obtained control of a large portion of the organized capital of the State. Its strong hand on the financial springs of a commercial community is so masterful as to silence the opposition of the cautious and to attract the support of the timid.

By the force and glitter of its money power it has warped the judgment and conscience of many good people, making them first apologists for and then desirous of such riches, even though they be obtained without honor, and in desecration of the dignity of labor and long pedigree of toil. It has captured three-fourths of the Louisiana press, either by control of the capital invested, or by purchase of the proprietors.

In localities where it could not purchase the local press, it has started a hireling press of its own. To emphasize this assertion, we state the fact that the most blatant anti-Lottery papers in the State of a few years ago are to-day violent partisans of the Lottery. Its iniquitous business is blazoned by advertisements of winnings, often fictitious, all over the country, and it has thus created and thus it stimulates a gambling thirst in tens of thousands of ignorant and credulous persons from whom it monthly receives its enormous ill-gotten gains.

While the United States Postoffice Department is the principal instrument of its robbery of the people outside of Louisiana, yet the express companies also lend material aid, being itself excluded from the mails as a fraudulent Lottery, it skulks under the individual name of its president, and the name of a national bank chartered by the national government. It is estimated that one-third of the whole local mail matter that passes through the New Orleans postoffice is Lottery mail, and, that $30,000 per diem in postal notes and money orders are paid to its stalking-horse bank. The temptation to hold on to this power and to continue to amass this wealth has induced these Lottery people to violate all their promises and pledges made to the framers of the Constitution and to the people of Louisiana, reiterated again and again; and in pursuance of this broken faith they have precipitated the present conflict by agitating for a renewal of the charter. This agitation has drawn the attention of the good people of this State, hitherto sleeping, to the history and acts of the Louisiana Lottery, and the results of that investigation we have spread before you in this memorial.

By the Legislature just adjourned an attempt has been made to submit a constitutional amendment to be voted on by the people in 1892, giving to John A. Morris, a member of the original gambling syndicate of 1863, one of the original promoters of the Louisiana Lottery Company, and now its lessee and largest stockholder, and his unnamed associates, the practically exclusive privilege of drawing lotteries in Louisiana for twenty-five years from January 1, 1894, in consideration of the payment to the State of $1,250,000 per annum.

The statement of the proposition demonstrates the enormity of the crime involved in it. John A. Morris and his associates, who neither toil nor spin, who take or pay no honest wage, make no product, till no field, sow no crop, reap no harvest, who add nothing to the sum of human wealth or happiness, are to be authorized by a sovereign State for a paltry participation in the plunder to convert her territory for a generation into a gambling snare for the unwary of this whole country and to filch from them by fraudulent lottery schemes untold millions. There are no limitations on this proposed grant.

There are no penalties for its abuse. It is placed beyond the regulating power of the Legislature. All amendments tending to prevent the drawing of fraudulent lottery schemes were voted down. We beseech your aid to help us crush this monster. With this vast corrupt money power to confront we know that we have a battle to fight such as no people ever fought before. We shrink not from the contest; the true sons of Louisiana have never failed her in her hour of need.

They are as ready now as ever to spend their fortunes and shed their blood in defense of her honor. But this fight is not only ours, but yours also. Aside from the pollution of its presence a great part of the harm done and to be done by this robber of the people is beyond the borders of this State, among the people of our sister States of the Union. If the taint of a State-organized crime could be confined within the limits of the organizing State, the evil might be small and the ground of complaint local; but we protest that it is against the fundamental principles of this Union and violative of the sacred sisterhood of the States that one of their number should, for a pittance of revenue, charter a piratical corporation to prey upon the ignorance, the credulity and the cupidity of the citizens of all the others and to station its minions broadcast through the land to violate their laws.

If any State is so shameless thus to use its (at present) untrammeled power, it ought to be and must be restrained by the united power of the American people.

To that end we recommend the immediate adoption of an amendment to the Federal Constitution, prohibiting any State from chartering or licensing any lottery or gift enterprise, abolishing those already established, and giving Congress the power to enforce the prohibition by appropriate legislation.

A proposition to amend the Constitution covering all of this ground, except the abolition of existing lotteries, is now before a committee of the United States Senate, having been introduced by Senator Blair, of New Hampshire.

Such amendment can not, in the natural order of things, be put in force for some time. Until that time comes, we ask the adoption by Congress of some appropriate legislation, under the existing state of the Constitution, aimed at the heart of this devouring dragon. The legislation specially recommended by the President and Postmaster-General to exclude lottery business and advertisements from the mails and express companies is aimed in the right direction, and we ask its speedy adoption.

With a national evil of great magnitude to correct, and with the clear constitutional power to crush that evil effectively, why should the Congress and American people hesitate to strike? We ask every citizen of this country to use his influence with the existing Congress to have the above suggested legislation speedily adopted.

We ask that all candidates of all parties for the Legislatures of the various States be required to pledge themselves to vote for any amendment proposed by Congress to the Constitution of the United States, prohibiting and abolishing State lotteries. All this we ask in the name of our common citizenship of this republic and in behalf of the public honor, the public interest and the public and private welfare of the commonwealth of States.

We further request the free press to give this address the widest publicity.

Respectfully submitted,

EDGAR H. FARRAR, Chairman.

Christian Advocate.

"SOMETIME."

Sometime when all life's lessons have been learned,
And sun and stars forevermore have set,
The things which our weak judgment have here spared,
The things o'er which we grieve with lashes wet,
Will flash before us in life's dark night,
As stars shine most in deeper tints of blue,
And we shall see how all God's plans are right,
And what most seemed reproof was love most true.

And we shall see how while we frown and sigh,
God's plans go on as best for you and me,
And how he heeded not our feeble cry,
Because he to the end could see;
And even as prudent parents disallow
Too much of sweet to craving babyhood,
So God, perhaps, is keeping from us now
Life's sweetest things, because it seemeth good.

And if sometime, commingled with life's wine,
We find the wormwood, and rebel and shrink,
Be sure a wiser hand than yours or mine
Pours out the portion for our lips to drink;
And if some friend we love is lying low,
Where human kisses can not reach his face,
Oh, do not blame the loving Father so,
But wear your sorrow with obedient grace.

And you shall shortly know that lengthened breath
Is not the fairest gift God gives his friend,
Sometime the sable pall of death
Conceals the sweetest boon his love can send,
If we could push ajar the gates of life
And stand within, and all God's workings see,
We could interpret all this doubt and strife,
And for each mystery could find a key.

But not to-day. Then be content, poor heart;
God's plans, like lilies, pure and white unfold;
We must not tear the close-shut leaves apart.
Time will reveal the calyxes of gold;
And when through patient toil we reach the land
Where tired feet with sandals loosed may rest,
Where we may clearly know and understand,
I think that we will say, "God knoweth best."

A Sermon on "Heaven," by Rev. E. G. Cook.

MR. EDITOR: I send you a sermon by a venerable octogenarian. Rev. E. G. Cook delivered it in our pulpit, nearing his eighty-second year; and you will see the thoughts sparkle and the fancy lift its wings, and the logical chain unite its argument as they might have appeared forty years ago. The outer man perishes, but the inner man—the true ego—is renewed day by day. No small number of life-long friends will read it with peculiar interest and, I trust, with great profit.

Yours, C. K. MARSHALL.

VICKSBURG, MISS., Aug. 2, 1890.

"Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven."—Matt. xviii, 3.

Human life to be considered apart from any individual requires abstract thought not easily expressed nor understood; hence the use of figurative language, describing life as a race (Heb. xii, 1), or journey. The Divine Teacher speaks of "the broad road and the narrow way" (Matt. vii, 14). We know what it is to start in a road and to follow it, inquiring the way as we proceed. The road may divide, when it will be necessary to ask and follow directions that the proper route may be taken. The objects to be seen and the occurrences along the road may be varied, and the intended or supposed termination in no sense the same. Too many, however, are indifferent as to the road they are in, nor think of the far end; indeed, prefer to be ignorant as to the future, near or remote.

The analogy between the real course of human life and a road which may be traveled could be continued, and would suggest profitable thoughts in reference to our conduct along the journey of life. We may also suppose a road as one continued pathway, in which mankind always walks in one direction, or the reverse. In Bunyan's dream of "Pilgrim's Progress" he saw Christian in such a road, with hindrances and opposition, but final success. Whatever the choice may be, the condition of body and mind is increased and intensified—slowly or rapidly, for life long or short; and the attainment during probation and the effect in eternity are inconceivable: the termini are called heaven and hell. As well these words as Elysian Fields and Tarturus in mythology—Eden and Hades, or Paradise and Gehenna in the Bible.

It is not rash to suppose that all travelers think more of that which may be before them and to which they are advancing than of anything behind them and which they are leaving. If this be true, then the inference arises that all Christendom has the bad place before them, with their steps thitherward.

It is well known to all readers and speakers for the last twenty or more years that the absorbing topic has been hell. Many lectures, sermons not a few, and discussions, public and private, have abounded against hell. In all the assaults upon hell it is cause of gladness to know that there has been no avowed wish to blot out heaven also.

A good judge of human nature has well said that "the wish is father to the thought." The reasons are many and too obvious to require recital why those going the wrong way would do away with that which gives troubling thoughts of the revealed hereafter. We may leave those who would continue their assaults against hell (which they affirm does not exist) to the sermons, lectures and discussions alluded to.

"Heaven" is our preferred topic, and will now be considered. Both places, however, stand or fall together. Faith in each depends upon revelation in the Bible and upon human consciousness. The Bible testimony for heaven and hell is well known, and its teaching is unmistakable; hence the necessity of destroying faith in the inspiration and authority of that Book by those who have reason to fear hell, if such a place should exist. "How can ye escape the damnation of hell." (Matt. xxiii, 33.)

Human consciousness is alive with instincts as to right and wrong, good and bad, to which rewards and punishments are due in proportion as conduct may be better or worst; nor can it be known that the extremes of human achievement towards the best or worst may not justly end with something expressed by the terms "heaven" and "hell"—nay, this instinct is almost irrepressible in claiming that such ought to be the case. It is shown by the universal approval of the good—as, for Joseph in Egypt, Florence Nightingale among the sick, John Howard Payne among prisoners; and by the equally universal detestation of the bad—as Judas, Gesler and Arnold—and by mobs and lynching. The good have applause, rewards and monuments. The bad are denied all these. This instinct is recognized in jurisprudence as superior to Constitutions and enactments of all kinds.

Is heaven a state of being or place of abode? Such a question is often asked, though unnecessary. The Bible plainly teaches that there must be preparation—"Then prepare to meet thy God." (Amos iv, 12.) There is a place referred to thus: "I go to prepare a place for you." (John xiv, 2.)

It is excusable speculation to inquire where heaven is, though by no means important to know; but it is of unspeakable importance to start for it—by conversion, as in the text, if need be; and follow the road in that direction, becoming as little children: obedient to the authority and laws in the kingdom of Heaven. Whatever may be true of original sin and total depravity, we may assume that men start in the wrong direction when they commence to act at all ("Even in sin did my mother conceive me."—Psalm li, 5), and are said to be in the "broad road that leads to death." (Matt. vii, 13.) Of this they are not conscious, as there are pleasures of many kinds to be enjoyed, which the young may provide, or which may be prepared for them. It is a sad thought to know that they are ignorant of having made such a choice, and do not know that the road taken leads away from heaven. We should pity rather than blame those who are wandering without knowing whither, and lost, yet refusing directions.

The pleasures of the young are short-lived and cease to be sources of enjoyment; then is the heroic attempt often made to restore and perpetuate the real or supposed enjoyments of early life which memory recalls.

"How dear to this heart are the scenes of my childhood
When fond recollection recalls them to view."

The resources of the mind in this attempt are without number. It is sought in the dance, pursuit of wealth, extravagance and ambition. For these remembered joys of early life there are substitutes of national selection. The Chinese use opium; the Turks, tobacco; the Germans, lager beer; the French, wine. Those speaking the English language are eclectic, choosing of these as taste may decide. When these fail to raise the pulsation of a spurious spiritual life, the resort is then to whisky, rum, brandy or gin. At last morphine by pill, powder or hypodermic. All these refuges of lies come to an end sooner or later. The capability of man to reflect is brought into exercise often against the will. Conviction is wrought upon conscience. With some its force is admitted and confession is made of past error and present suffering, until the cry is extorted: "Oh, wretched man that I am." (Rom. vii, 24.) Then the penitent submits to be converted. Conversion may be understood as simply turning around in the supposed road of every life by reformation, repentance and restitution. The attempt is always made, first, by the individual to reforms; but too many, after becoming valuable members in the family and social circle, stop at this. An advance upon this is, second, to seek the aid of some one—preacher, priest or pope. Again, many advance further and, third, resort to the sacraments of some church, as baptismal regeneration, or confirmation, or priestly absolution. That one or all of these may not be sufficient we conclude, because the emphatic declaration in the text—"Except ye be converted"—would be made void or not be necessary if these could avail.

Christianity requires a change. Few deny its necessity. As well call it "conversion" as by some other word. Analogous to "admission" into societies or initiation in Masonry—all requiring conditions, precedent which presents the applicant as presumably worthy of commission, admission or initiation. Conversion, as in the text, is frequently sought, often professed, and many are seen to exhibit conduct which can only be understood upon the hypothesis that such a change has been wrought. The first or natural life passes away. (I. Cor. xv, 46.) It was used and enjoyed after a manner and for awhile until it became a failure, when some threw it away by shooting, drowning or otherwise as the frenzied fancy of the suicide might select. Multitudes, however, entered into the new life—which is afterwards or spiritual. (I. Cor. xv, 44.) To these revelation becomes the accepted rule of life, source of hope ("The full assurance of hope."—Heb. vi, 2) and satisfying assurance of every anticipation of the soul ("See the travail of his soul, and be satisfied."—Isa. liii, 2). Human imperfection had been known, and, doubtless, acknowledged; but now it appears most glaring, not unlike "a cage of unclean birds." Divine aid will be sought to be delivered from a character and conduct so unsightly. The problem now is to regain true manhood—why not call it by the objectionable term "perfection": the attainable opposite of the discovery just made. Men seek perfection in all the pursuits of life—why is it out of place in the greatest of all pursuits to reconstruct a perfect man, having a healthy body, sound mind and right spirit? Accept the promised help of God, and say, "Let us make man." (Gen. i, 26.) Christianity will not have finished its work if its subject be wanting in the highest attribute of a man; love, as it is of God. "God is love." (I. John viii, 16.) It is no secret that this passion exerts and gives zest to life. It is the soul, so to speak, of novels, poetry and song. "There is nothing half so sweet in life as love's young dream." A denial here would blot out from Anacreon, Ovid, Moore, Burns, and authors innumerable, all the creations of their genius wherever love gives fascination to fictitious characters and romantic incidents. Imperfect love is well known: the silly flirtation of the girl, the cruel coquetry of the young woman. It may be affected in the boy or the dude. Often the sanctity of married life has been betrayed, with woe to many because of the imperfect love of one or more. We read in mythology of the disgusting amours of the heathen gods and goddesses. In history, the shameful lives of kings and their mistresses, and of some queens no better. In the Scriptures there are characters—men and women—whose pretence of love is as despicable as language can express, as Samson and Delilah, David and Bathsheba. In our daily telegrams we read of the frequent nameless causes of jealousy, divorce, suicide and murder. "The course of true love never did run smooth," is a proverb; but is the experience of many a heart and known in many families, properly secret and almost sacred.

Our Christianity teaches that love must be pure, perfect and abiding, and proposes to make it so—not sentimental, passionate nor excessive, causing greatest grief by disappointment to death of the beloved. What gladness will come to wives and children when husbands and fathers will prefer home and the family circle after nightfall to the place of supposed pleasure, but often of real vice—the club room or worse! How changed society when all will have natures so that each will do to another as would be expected in return! The mystery of being a "new creature" (II. Cor. v, 17), will cease when we reflect that really we become new creatures daily; if not in religion, in some other departure from the life preceding. At every moment we may know "that it doth not yet appear what we shall be."

Hazael when he said, "Is thy servant a dog that he should do this thing?" little thought he would kill the king. So Peter when he declared he would die for his Lord little thought he would deny him before the cock was heard to crow in the morning. Nor is the witness of the Spirit so mysterious when we all know that bad men as well as good have attestations of conscience, accusing or else excusing. (Rom. ii, 5.)

The extreme conviction of the sinner causes sighing by all, sorrow by many, suicide by a few. The conversion of the Christian dispels these and gives joy unspeakable and full of glory—and eternal life.

Of all imperfect love is the universal attachment to beings and objects, real and ideal, which admits of no love to God. With reverence be the thought in our minds or expressed as our experience, that love to God and by him has its type in that which we know in the several relations of human life. The latter is imperfect, as before stated; but in the former, in our deepest spiritual communion, we make avowal of love to God with painful solicitude as to its being reciprocal: the sensation comes with more than melody from Eolian harp—"He first loved us." (John iii, 16.)

Whatever may be true of heaven—figuratively described as the "great white throne," "mansion not made by hands, whose walls and pillars are of precious stone," and "city paved with gold"—it is assumed that there is a state of mind called "heavenly" by all who see beauty in the rising sun or its going down, who hear melody in music, catch the fragrance of flowers and can appreciate the words of poetry or oratory and the exercise of our higher capabilities—friendship and love. The converted man who is in the kingdom of Heaven by conversion and exercises faith does not give them up, but has an increased enjoyment beyond that of his early life, and exceeding that of the whole life of one never converted. This is ideal, depending more upon memory and hope than upon anything real or present. The savage would have his faithful dog bear him company hereafter. The Jew expected a home over Jordan, flowing with milk and honey. Job would be "where the wicked cease to trouble and the weary are at rest." The more advanced conception of civilized man is thus expressed:

"This world is all a fleeting show
For mans illusion given—
The smiles of joy, the tears of woe
Deceitful shine, deceitful flow;
There's nothing true but Heaven."

Christianity excites hopes beyond all these: "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive what God hath prepared for those that love him." (I. Cor. ii, 9.)

Let a determined protest go forth against all who, Samson like, would lay hold of hell, one of the pillars of God's universal temple, and seek to bring the whole superstructure—life, love, heaven and hell—to a supposed wreck, over which weepers would be seen, like the Jews under the willows by the waters of Babylon, thinking of their land and city and temple, and they far away. (Psalm cxxxvii, 2.) Leave heaven as a place to God, but let all seek conversion into the kingdom of God, and, as in the text, therein become little children, "even babes in Christ," then full-grown men, nor cease effort until they enjoy love to God above all beings else; then will love passing the love of woman be felt to all who may be associated together here through time and those beyond time forever.

East Mississippi Female College.

While this institution is the property of the Mississippi Conference, and, notwithstanding its name, is not intended to be sectional, yet the Methodists of the Meridian district are most nearly identified with it, and ought to have the greatest interest in it, and intensest zeal for it. Under President Charles W. Anderson—a layman of great native and acquired abilities, a man with heart as well as brains, of experience in business, teaching and religion—our college enters upon the twentieth session with the brightest prospects in all its history. The faculty is composed of experienced and competent teachers. The grade of scholarship will be further advanced, and the Board of Trustees, co-operating with President Anderson, intend to make our college to be for the girls of Mississippi what Millsaps College is to be for the boys. While English literature will be prominent, and Latin, German and French will be taught as heretofore, mathematics will be given greater prominence, and the Bible will receive more attention. While not offensively sectarian, it will be decidedly religious. It will be a school to which parents can unhesitatingly send their daughters, and our brethren in the ministry need not qualify their indorsements. Thorough work will be done in every department.

To meet the increasing patronage, and to keep pace with the growth of Meridian—the most enterprising and flourishing town in Mississippi—the Board of Trustees have found it necessary to add a wing, which is now approaching completion. This new building gives a larger chapel, and doubles the accommodations for boarding pupils. We ought to extend the wing on the southern side of the old buildings, and make other needed improvements. To do all this requires money—more than I can raise in Meridian, and more than ought to be asked of the Meridian people. The college is not theirs only, but it belongs to the Mississippi Conference, and Methodists everywhere should esteem it a privilege to contribute liberally to the enlargement of the college-buildings, and thereby to the advancement of Methodism in Mississippi. Particularly ought the Methodists in the Meridian district to rally to the support of this institution, which has done so much good, and will do even greater good. "We have come to the parting of the ways." God has wonderfully blessed the Methodists in this district. They are possessed of ample means, not only to put up the needed buildings, but also to richly endow the college and make it the rival of any in the land. They are prospering abundantly, far more than our brethren in other portions of the State. If they will only be faithful and rightly use what God has so graciously given them, then will be greater blessings bestowed. Where is a better direction for beneficence? when a better time? and how can greater good be done than by contributing to this cause?

Let the brethren to whom personal letters have been written respond at once, and let their responses be liberal. Let others send me their contributions, and let our preachers call attention to our need and to our plans. Let us work together, begin at once, and cease not our efforts until the fullest success crowns our endeavors.

T. L. MELLEN, Fin. Ag't.

The Campaign Opens.

Dr. Morris started August 1 for Montana, Washington and Oregon. I leave to-day for Colorado and adjacent regions. We crave the prayers of all our people, and the co-operation of both preachers and laymen.

Forty thousand dollars, to be used in donations, are needed to meet obligations heretofore assumed. Let every charge pay only its assessment for the current Conference year, and this demand will be met.

Then twice forty thousand dollars more can be used by the General Board to profit in entering open and inviting fields. To provide at the ensuing Annual Conference sessions for raising this sum during next year is the important point to be attained in connection with our work.

Let vigorous measures be adopted and carried out for collecting the $100,000 asked of the church as our ninth assessment, and I believe it will be reported nearly, if not quite, in full to the Conference sessions beginning one year hence.

This will leave $50,000 in the Conferences, where it is collected, to build up waste places and meet all reasonable home demands without resort to individual appeals or local organizations.

Then $50,000 from the assessment will be at the disposal of the General Board, and if to this we can, by special appeal, add $30,000 more, we will be able to provide, in some measure, for the frontier and for Mexico, and set apart a round sum to be used as an emergency fund, on which we can draw in cases of fire, flood, storm, and other casualties. This is thoroughly practicable, and in every way desirable, and so becomes our duty. Let it be done.

From the Work.

BAY ST. LOUIS STATION.

Several months having elapsed since I last wrote to the ADVOCATE, a short synopsis of my work since may prove of interest to some of your readers. I spent nearly seven weeks in Natchez regaining health, after my long siege of typhoid, returning to my work on the Covington circuit, Friday before the fourth Sunday in June. After preaching in Covington Sunday morning, I went to Madisonville in the afternoon, and then out to Bedico, where I had planned to protract. I found Bro. Hervie Mellard, of Ponchatoula, there hard at work, preaching with power and spirit. We continued one meeting until Wednesday, having preaching twice a day, Bro. Mellard speaking boldly for the Master. Wednesday we had prayer meeting and preaching at eleven A. M., conducted by Bro. J. Boyse, of Ponchatoula; dinner on the ground; a grove prayer meeting for men, and one for women, at two o'clock; a stirring sermon by Bro. Mellard at three P. M., and at night closed by sermon and administration of the Lord's Supper by Bro. Boyse. Results: two accessions, and a general revival in the church.

The following week I went to Hattiesburg to see Bro. Cooper, my presiding elder. After a consultation with Bro. H. C. Brown and myself, Bro. Cooper decided to change our works, placing Bro. Brown on the Covington circuit and sending me here.

I arrived here two weeks ago to-day with my wife and little girl. We were met at the depot by Hon. E. J. Bowers and Dr. R. J. Turner, two of my stewards, and driven to the latter's residence, where we received a warm welcome from Sister Turner. There being no parsonage here, we made that our home till they could secure us a house. After a few days they were successful, and we feel as grand as a king in our lovely home.

The church is in a fine condition, spiritually, and we have earnest, zealous workers in Bros. E. J. Bowers, Dr. R. J. Turner, J. C. Grimes, M. L. Ansley, W. F. Hall, L. H. Hearin, and in those noble, consecrated women—Sisters Turner, Norris, Driver, Hall, Joyner, Jackson, Meek, and others too numerous to mention. All dwell together in Christian unity—no discord, no uncharitable conversation; but, as members of one body, fitly joined together, and with an eye single to the service of God, all are interested in whatever tends to the advancement of the interests of the church.

As we own a lot in the rear of the church, we propose building a parsonage, which the officials think can be completed in three months.

The Sunday-school, with Bro. W. F. Hall as superintendent, is in a fine condition. I gave the children a short talk on my first Sunday, and have taken charge of a class.

Had fine congregations last Sunday morning and night, and good attendance at prayer meeting.

This field is white to harvest; but, with such a noble band of workers, and the knowledge that God is with us, I feel assured of victory, and that many souls will be brought to Christ. Pray for us.

AUGUST 1, 1890.

COLUMBUS, MISS.

The Mississippi Baptist State Convention has just closed a very pleasant session in this town. Dr. W. S. Webb, of Clinton College, was elected president. About 200 delegates were present, representing every part of Mississippi, and some portions of Louisiana. Great stress was laid upon missions during the convention—sermons, speeches, reports, collections, etc.; and yet the Baptists of Mississippi only give eight cents per member to this cause, whereas the Methodists of the State contribute something over twenty cents. A prominent member of the convention said that Baptists must do more, or secure trumpets of less capacity. It transpired that only twenty-two churches in the bounds of the convention have preaching every Sunday (stations). We Methodists in the same territory have forty-six. The Baptists have only eighteen parsonages ("pastor's homes," or "pastoriums,") in the State. The North Mississippi Conference has eighty-nine. How many has the Mississippi? The convention claimed to represent 80,000 white members in Mississippi. Great prominence was given this statement. The convention includes not only the State of Mississippi, but all that part of Louisiana lying east of the Mississippi river, except New Orleans; hence the statement that there are 80,000 white Baptists in Mississippi is misleading. The Baptists are doing a great work, and we rejoice in their success. The next session of the convention will be held at Natchez.

The Methodist Church in Columbus is undergoing much-needed repairs. We expect to expend about $2,000.

Rev. George S. Inge is to pay us a visit in September. We are praying for great results. J. S. OAKLEY.

STARKVILLE CIRCUIT, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Bro. Joe Jones closed a series of meetings at Pearson's Chapel, Starkville circuit, on July 31. Many of our members gave their hands as a vow for a better life. Our church is much revived. Four gave their hands, confessing Christ, and will unite with the church. His preaching was clear, fervid and eloquent; preached with much power, and declared the whole counsel of God. He warned the people of eternal death and the judgment to come, and pointed them to Christ, who is able to save to the uttermost, clearing his skirts from the blood of all men. He was kind and loving in his delivery, showing his love for men by persuading them to "flee the wrath to come, and be saved from sin and death." He is not rough, but plain and practical, showing men the error of their ways, that they may repent before it is too late. He told of his wicked life with shame-facedness, warning others of the whisky devil which brought wretchedness and want to him and his loved ones. May God's blessings rest upon him and his, and crown his labor with success! Let us give him our hearts and hands in his work.

Obituaries of less than thirty-five lines of six words each, will be published free of charge. For all over thirty-five lines, two cents for each additional line will be charged, and the money must invariably accompany the manuscript. When parties desire extra copies of the ADVOCATE containing the obituaries of their friends, they must send with the order the sum of five cents for each extra copy ordered.

EALY—MRS. ELIZABETH EALY was born in the State of Georgia; came to Claiborne parish, La., about thirty years ago; died at the residence of her grandson-in-law, Wesley J. Reams, in Minden, La., August 1, 1890, in her eighty-seventh year.

Very early in life she became a member of the Methodist Church; was always devout and earnest in her religious profession, her place being seldom vacant in the house of God. She loved her church, was consistent in her walk, gave liberally of her means—making, only a few days before her death, a contribution to missions and one to the support of her pastor.

She was one who made much of her religion in life, and prayed earnestly its support and comfort in death. Her chamber was the frequent scene of religious conversation and devotion. She died in peace.

J. W. MEDLOCK.

MCREE—MRS. MAGGIE E. MCREE (nee Stroud) was born in Wilcox county, Ala., in 1848; was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1865; was married to Jas. R. McRee in 1870, and died July 8, 1890.

She was a great sufferer, but bore it with Christian patience. I visited her often during her illness. She always expressed herself as ready to depart and be with Christ. She leaves an affectionate husband, seven children, an aged mother and a host of relatives and friends to mourn; but, thank God! we know where she is. We expect to meet again!

J. W. TINNIN, Pastor.

ROBERTSON—DAVID CANNON, infant son of D. C. and G. O. Robertson, of Evergreen, La., came to brighten their home with his presence and make glad their hearts with his innocent prattle on March 25, 1889; but his stay was brief, for on April 3, 1890, angels came down and kissed away his pure spirit, bearing it to the bosom of him who said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not." J. E. DENSON.

Missionary.

The Spirit of Missions.

BY "GILDEROY."

One thing in the Woman's Missionary Meeting in Senatobia, Miss., impressed me deeply. The memory of it lingers in my mind and heart. It was this: In an experience meeting five of the good women testified that they did not find joy and perfect liberty in this work until they had, in agony and in bloody sweat, consented to give up their children to go as foreign missionaries, if God should call them to this work. Their glowing words and shining faces revealed the depth of feeling within. The very "skin of their faces did shine," as did the face of Moses when he came down from the mount, where he had been communing with God. The memory of this scene has made me happy and filled me brimful for more than a month. This was the spirit of Christ—the true spirit of missions and of missionary work.

Other women said then in whispers, and since in an undertone: "I am willing to give my time and my money, but not my children to missions. No, not my children; not if God were to call them!" All this set me a-thinking, and I am thinking yet.

Have we the spirit of Christ in fullness, the real spirit of missions, as long as anything—lands, houses, parents, husbands, wives or children—are held in reserve from God? What those good women who hold their children in reserve would do if God should call them to this work, I can not say. If brought to the test, faith might culminate and make the surrender. I do not know, and dare not say, that God always tries the faith of his people on a hypothesis—on a supposed issue. I do know that the faith of Abraham was accepted of God in lieu of the sacrifice of his son. God took the will for the deed—for the specific act commanded. In the case of these five women God may let them off from giving up their children on account of their faith. The score or more of others may yet be put to the test as a proof of their faith. God's methods look to the development and consummation of the faith of his children.

The late Conference of missionaries in China is, to my mind, one of the most wonderful and suggestive things that has occurred in the history of the church since the days of the apostles. The more I ponder it, the more it grows upon me. Such a meeting would have been impracticable, if not impossible, in any Christian country on the face of the globe. There was a largeness about it highly commendable to the Christian spirit of the missionaries engaged in it. In part, it makes one feel like Simeon of old when he folded the infant Savior in his bosom—only we pray, "Lord, let thy servant live to see what will come of these wonderful things." I'll declare to you, I have a greater desire to live now than at any time since I could remember. It never before seemed that "for me to live would be Christ"—would so advance the cause of Christ as it does now. I stand on tip-toe and try to look over the top of the next five years to see what will be, and while I am looking, lo! good news comes—better than I looked for in ten! That Missionary Conference! that Missionary Conference! I am glad I have lived to hear of it. Then, too, just to think!—they call for a thousand missionaries for China! That looks big. Really, I can hardly take it in. I have been so used to swelling over one and two and ten, that I can hardly get my mind and heart on the outside of a hundred—to say nothing of a thousand. There must be some mistake about it!

I've talked and preached and read about "the fields are white unto the harvest" until I have gotten used to it. Lately the words, "Lift up your eyes," have been ringing in my ears, and when I do lift them up I am dazed, bewildered and dumbfounded at the largeness and whiteness of the fields and the sparseness of the laborers.

"A thousand!" Oh, my father, what are they in a field so wide and so white? We need to throw down our sickles and bring in our reapers if we are going to garner this grain for God.

Well, well, if the men and women of the Christian world had the child-giving spirit of these five women who attended the missionary meeting here, in less that two years we would send ten thousand—yea, one hundred thousand missionaries to China, and half as many more to other parts of the heathen world.

The littleness of the Christian spirit at home explains the largeness of the heathen world abroad. Nothing but the child-giving spirit will ever make the kingdoms of the world the heritage of our Lord. It was this spirit that sent the Son of God to redeem us. This spirit is of the very essence of the gospel of the Son of God. No wonder these women found great joy and great liberty when they piled their children on God's altar, and said, "Father, for the great gift of thine only Son take these my lambs and do with them as thou wilt, and send them where thou will."

Fire from heaven always falls on a sacrifice of faith like this, and it kindles such a blaze that the "skin" of the worshipers "face is made to shine." When I met these women coming from this holy place with thankfulness and deep humility, and knew that they "wist not their faces did shine," I felt like putting veils on them. Such unearthly glory is all too rare in our world. I thought: Well, now, when this child-giving spirit becomes common, then these shining faces will be common. We are stingy and stint with God until our features become cramped and hard. An open heart makes an open face.

AUGUST 2.

Letter from China.

To the North Mississippi Conference Missionary Societies—

Dear Sisters: My heart was gladdened by a letter from your president by the last mail, and by the assurance that you had not forgotten me, neither "intended to drop me." I do not forget you, and although I am no longer in the service of the Woman's Board, my interest in the Master's work is unabated. I came to China a missionary, and I remain here in the same spirit.

Our work has been in Sung Kiang this year. The Conference, which convened in December, returned us to our former post. Some changes have come into our work since last year. Then we lived in a Chinese house. Now we are comfortably settled in our new home—the Sung Kiang parsonage. Then my husband and myself toiled alone, excepting our native preacher and one teacher. Now Bro. H. L. Gray, from Georgia, is with us. Then our preaching-places were street chapels. These are still in use, but our new church, McLain Chapel, is in process of building, and in a few months will be ready for use. Then we were in closely packed Chinese quarters, with but patches of sky visible, a little sun, and not much fresh air; now we have an abundance of space, air and sunlight. Then a few Chinese women came to see me, and my heart was burdened with the question, "How shall I reach them?" Now my callers are numerous, and my hands rapidly filling with work. And so I suspect the "thens" and "nows" will continue to fill up your life and mine until we are ushered into the everlasting now of God's presence.

I can not complain of a lack of work now. I must rather regret a lack of faithfulness in doing with my whole heart all that has come to my hands.

Upon removing to our new quarters in January, crowds gathered day after day to see the new sight in their city—a foreign house. Although the house is built principally according to Chinese style of architecture outside, it is sufficiently unlike their houses to excite much attention. At that time only a bamboo fence kept them from nearly taking possession of us and the house during the daytime. Oftentimes we had to put out crowds that forced the gate. Our wall has been completed several weeks now; so that we enjoy more quiet.

Crowds of women have been to our house. Curiosity to see the inside of a foreign house is their ruling motive, I suppose; but I am thus afforded an opportunity of forming their acquaintance, and frequently they ask me to call upon them. They enjoy music; so I find our organ and my voice helps in entertaining. We are thus afforded opportunities to explain the hymns we sing to them.

Not long since I went to call at a neighbor's who had been to see me. I was received and entertained hospitably. The women of the household, which was a large one, and some of their neighbors, judging from the number present, came in. I had not been there long when some one said something about my "preaching" to them. My woman said, "She has not her book." "Yes, I have," I answered, and drew a red-bound book from my pocket. I read a chapter about the Savior. They listened attentively for the most part; some asking questions now and then.

Being able to read Chinese wins some respect from them. When I departed they asked me to come back again and "preach" some more. That was an encouraging experience. At another neighbor's I have been kindly received. In the early Spring we were wont to take evening walks into the country. Several times we were all invited into the farmers' homes, where tea and sweet-meats were served. We do not, therefore, anticipate difficult access to many homes.

Mr. Burke until quite recently has had an English school; but that is now closed. I have, under my charge, one day-school for boys. My custom has been to visit the school three times a week when I could.

Mr. Burke preaches several times per week, and sells books. These are the Gospels, or other books bearing upon our religion. We began regular itineration work this Spring after Bro. Gray relieved Mr. Burke of some of the school work. That was before the English school was closed. I find work opening to me in the places Mr. Burke visits. At one place I have charge of a day-school. At another place permission has just been obtained from the man who rents us a chapel for me to talk to the women at his house. This man is himself a probationer. At another town the women nearly always want me to come ashore into their houses.

Some time ago a Mohammedan woman began visiting me. She took quite a fancy to me, wrote me letters, and brought me fruits and flowers. A sister accompanied her at first, but she has not come for some time. My heart thrills upon coming in contact with Roman Catholics and Mohammedans. They are hard to work with. A part of the truth they have; yet they are not "full of light." I wondered what motive prompted this woman to come so persistently. At length I ceased trying to discover that, and determined to do what I could to show her the love of God in sending his Son to save us from our sins. She wanted to come once per week and study hymns. Already she has learned to read, "Jesus Loves Me," perfectly.

I have given you the bright side of our work. Sometimes a sombre side shows itself. Light and shade mingle. With opportunities comes a sense of insufficiency for these things. Questions so puzzling and perplexities beset us. The work is slow. Oftentimes sharp pain follows bright encouragement. However, we love most to dwell upon our encouragements, though oftentimes they are small.

In May the China General Conference met in Shanghai. I send you a copy of the minutes of that meeting. In the back part you will find an excellent summary of the whole, which I have marked. Over 400 representatives met. We were much refreshed by contact with such a grand body of the Master's workers.

Now go back to where I ended with telling you of our work in Sung Kiang. You will probably notice the dating of my letter—Shanghai. Owing to the great illness of Mr. Reid, he has been ordered home by the physician. I saw him yesterday. He is a wreck of his former self. We can poorly afford to lose him now, when our ranks are already so broken by sickness and absences. Our work must be almost dropped until Conference, at least, as Mr. Burke has been appointed pastor in charge at Shanghai. Our hearts were heavy at first. We have only made a beginning in Sung Kiang; but we must go where God sends us.

Miss Hamilton is very feeble. Miss Hughes is away by the doctor's command. Others are far from well. "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest" to send forth more laborers into his vineyard. Your sister in Christ,

ADDIE GORDON BURKE.

Peculiar

To itself in many important particulars, Hood's Sarsaparilla is different from and superior to any other medicine.

Peculiar in combination, proportion and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom.

Peculiar in strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "100 doses one dollar." Medicines in larger and smaller bottles require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Peculiar in its "good name at home"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers.

Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad, no other preparation has ever attained such popularity in so short a time. Do not be induced to take any other preparation. Be sure to get

PUBLIC SAFETY DEMANDS

That only honest and reliable medicines should be placed upon the market. It cannot, therefore, be stated too emphatically, nor repeated too often, that all who are in need of a genuine Blood-purifier should be sure and ask for

Ayer's

Sarsaparilla. Your life, or that of some one near and dear to you, may depend on the use of this well-approved remedy in preference to any other preparation of similar name. It is compounded of Honduras sarsaparilla (the variety most rich in curative properties), stillingia, mandrake, yellow dock, and the iodides. The process of manufacture is original, skilful, scrupulously clean, and such as to secure the very best medicinal qualities of each ingredient. This medicine is not boiled nor heated, and is, therefore, not a decoction; but it is a compound extract, obtained by a method exclusively our own, of the best and most powerful alteratives, tonics, and diuretics known to pharmacy. For the last forty years, Ayer's has been the standard blood-purifier of the world—no other approaching it in popular confidence or universal demand. Its formula is approved by the leading physicians and druggists. Being pure and highly concentrated, it is the most economical of any possible blood medicine. Every purchaser of Sarsaparilla should insist upon having this preparation and see that each bottle bears the well-known name of

J. C. Ayer & Co.,
Lowell, Mass.

In every quarter of the globe Ayer's Sarsaparilla is proved to be the best remedy for all diseases of the blood. Lowell druggists unite in testifying to the superior excellence of this medicine and to its great popularity in the city of its manufacture.

Notes.

The measure of our missionary liberality is thirty-three cents apiece yearly!

The way the farmers are swinging the political mowing machine "is a caution!" "Serried ranks" of politicians fall at every sweep!

"The fact is plain enough that no man has any claim upon the church that was not liquidated the day he was converted through her instrumentality!" That knocks the place-seeker sky-high!

The business manager, just in from a few days' visit to Vicksburg, Miss., reports having obtained in that city one hundred and four new subscribers to our paper! That shows what the people will do and what an agent can do!

From Ernst Kaufman, 330 Pearl St., New York, we have received specimens of beautiful marriage and baptismal certificates. They are as pretty and appropriately illustrated as any we have ever seen, executed in the finest chromo-lithograph. The marriage certificates will be sent postpaid for $5 a dozen; the baptismal certificates for $2 50 a dozen.

From an editorial in the Watchman we clip the following for our pastors:

The people are crying out all over the land, "Tell us what the Scriptures mean. Tell us what the Sermon on the Mount, the parables, the Gospel of John, the fifteenth of first Corinthians, and the eight of Romans mean." That is what people are hungry for. And the man who can tell folks what the Word of God means—what it means for them—is pretty sure, even in these closing years of the nineteenth century, of an interesting hearing. But it is harder to expound the Scriptnre than to expound evolution or agnosticism, or to show the gronads of Theism, or to preach a slashing review of "Robert Elsmere."

Prince Krapotkin, in the August number of the Forum, has written an article on "The Possibilities of Agriculture," which puts to flight all the fears which the Malthusian doctrine has aroused. That doctrine is that population may increase faster than the earth can supply food, and consequently the time may come when people will be so plentiful that there will be no possibility of supplying sustenance from the productions of the soil. The article in question shows how, by new and improved methods of agriculture, the productions of the earth may become practically unlimited. Examples are given to show what the soil is now made to do. For example, a district in East Flanders containing 37,000-acres supports 30,000 people, all living by agriculture, paying from $15 to $25 per acre rent, and on the same area these people keep 10,720 cattle, 3,800 sheep, 1,815 horses and 6,550 swine. Other examples equally striking show that when properly tilled the earth will always respond with more than enough for man's support.

In the issue of July 31 the Independent gave its annual review of the churches in this country. The figures show an increase over last year. There are now, according to these figures, 21,757,171 church members, 103 303 ministers and 151,261 churches. This is a gain over last year of 1,089,853 members, 4,867 ministers and 8,494 churches. In other words, the denominations have gained every day 2,986 members, 13 ministers and 23 new churches. The gain over last year is larger than the gain of last year was over the year before. The largest gain is among the Methodists. According to the Independent's figures the gain among the Methodists is 256,359, while last year it was only 24,352. That certainly is a prodigious rate of increase! The gain among the Baptists is 213,702, against 106,904 last year. The gain among the Presbyterians is 48,899, against 43,428 last year. The gain among Episcopalians is 9,466 against 12,857 last year. The gain among the Congregationalists is 16,377 against 18,024 last year. The Roman Catholic population is estimated at 8,277,039 and their communicants at 4,676,292; Methodist communicants, 4,980,240; Baptist, 4 292,291; Presbyterians, 1,229,012; Lutherans, 1,086,048; Congregationalists, 491,985; Episcopalians, 480,176. When we reflect that the population of the country does not exceed 65,000,000, this showing of 21,757,171 church members is pretty good! One out of every three is a member of some church! What an enormous power would be turned loose if every one of these had the aggressive spirit of Christ! No mind can conceive the results that would follow!

A Questionable Policy.

Since it began its career we believe the Methodist Church has done a larger, grander work than any other denomination in the world. It has given the "glorious gospel of the blessed God" to millions of people, and it has about corrected the hard theology that for centuries dominated the mind of the church. Its successful progress in the world has been phenomenal, for to-day Methodist preaching and Methodist songs girdle the earth. But our success should not overshadow our faults. If it does, then our faults will grow and our success diminish as the years go on.

At one point our policy is lame, and increasingly so every year. We are "limping on one leg," when we ought to be running on two good, sound legs! The policy of placing young and inexperienced men in full charge of circuits and stations has been growing amongst us for quite a while, and seems to be about "settled." After looking at the results of this policy for several years, we do not hesitate to say that it is a lame policy, and ought to be abandoned—a growing evil which ought to be abated. As a rule, our young ministers are pious, clever, earnest and devoted men; but these qualities do not qualify them for taking sole charge of two or three hundred church members. We frequently license a young man to preach, and in a few weeks or months after receive him on trial in the Annual Conference and place him in full charge of a circuit or station. We are told that one of our Conferences last year put a young man in charge of a large circuit who had not preached a single time! If this does not violate the express provisions of our law, it certainly does great violence to its spirit. This policy is extremely bad for the young preacher, for it lays upon him a burden which he is too weak to carry, and places upon him responsibilities, for the discharge of which he has not the requisite wisdom. Such policy is extremely bad for the church, for she must reap the results of the preacher's incapacity and want of experience. In proportion to the want of qualification in the preacher to meet the demands of the work does the church suffer loss. Weakness in leadership is disastrous to any cause.

The reason sometimes given for this lame policy is, that the work has so enlarged as to require more men to keep it going, and that even under this plan many circuits are left to be supplied. We have given this reason all the force that it can possibly have, and yet we do not see that it vindicates the policy or renders it necessary! The policy defeats its own purpose. To commit the spiritual interests of hundreds of men, women and children entirely to one just entering upon the rudiments of religion is to imperil those interests at every point. To place hundreds of church members under the ecclesiastical rulership of a young preacher who does not even know the A B C of church law and usage is certainly a thing to "provoke our special wonder." Spiritual guidance! Ecclesiastical rulership! Is there anything more onerous? Is there anything to which a graver responsibility attaches? Is there any position where we can conceive inexperience to be more out of place? Or where it is likely to do more damage? The damage has been done, is being done now; but we do not blame the young preachers. They did not ask for these positions. They are, doubtless, doing the best they can. We are to blame. We have put burdens upon these young men which they can not bear! We have dressed these young Davids in Saul's armor, and they are hampered and can not go!

We know that the Bishops must find a place for everyone received on trial, as well as for every member of a Conference; and that very fact has brought evil consequences many times. Couple this with the desire apparent in many places to get rid of the old preachers, and the Bishop has a complication to deal with that taxes his wisdom too severely. We can no more lay aside the veterans of the ministry than we can refuse to receive proper recruits for the ministry. To do either would work untold mischief. But it is the glory of Methodism that it has adapted itself to all conditions and circumstances. And so we believe this complication can be unraveled to the good of our Zion.

How would this plan do? Let the Bishop and his Cabinet arrange the works so as to bring the inexperience of the young preacher to work alongside the experience of the old one! Place youthful indiscretion where it can be toned down by the discretion of the man of age! Put the forceful energy of young manhood in a position to be directed by the wisdom of years! Arrange the works so as to put the young, inexperienced men under the charge of experienced men, and then send them forth "two and two." "But that will necessitate larger circuits." What if it does? Are the preachers of to-day less heroic, less inclined to self-denial and labor for the Master than our fathers? The thought is not to be entertained!

There are very few of our older men who would not like to have a helper, and but few of our young men who would not delight to work with a man of experience and wisdom. We believe this plan will work well. It will satisfy those circuits where the old men are not wanted, and allay the fears of those circuits where the young men are dreaded. It is a compromise that will save the old men from humiliation and despair; save the young men from indiscretions and mistakes, and save the circuits from loss and damage. We say, let the youthful Timothys be yoked with the aged Pauls, and our progress will be assured and accelerated.

Anti-Lottery Convention.

Such a convention as met in the city of Baton Rouge, on August 7, can only be possible when the citizens of a State are thoroughly aroused upon some all-important public issue. The question of the re-charter of the Louisiana Lottery Company has taken hold of the people of this State as has no other question since the war. The numbers who assembled on such short notice (the secretary reporting 962 delegates elected) and their high character and diversified occupations stamp the Anti-Lottery State Convention as probably the strongest, most honorable and representative body that ever met within our borders. In the words of that pure and true man from Shreveport, who was made president, Hon. T. F. Bell, it was unlike all other conventions in that it truly "represented the virtue and patriotism of the sons of Louisiana." A crisis having come in our history as a State like unto the time of 1861—for as then so now we are threatened with destruction—it is no wonder, though the call was made only a few weeks ago, that nearly one thousand of Louisiana's men of brains and character, and from all the walks of life, felt irresistibly impelled to serve their State in her second hour of distress and peril. So the ministry, the bar, the medical fraternity sat in that memorable body with the farmers, mechanics, merchants and honest toilers in the varied fields of useful labor and, without a dissenting voice, marked with the brand of infamy and as the foe of every man, woman and child, and to be fought to the death, the Louisiana Lottery Company.

The course of our patriotic governor was endorsed, and the true and brave in the late Legislature were heartily approved and many honors were heaped upon them, as they were cheered to the echo whenever they rose to speak. It is evident that Murphy J. Foster and his compatriots of the Legislature will never be forgotten by the people of Louisiana.

Not only were resolutions passed, declarative of the cause and fixed purpose of the Anti-Lotteryites, but a most exhaustive, luminous and eloquent address to the people of the United States was unanimously adopted. There was provision made for the issuance also of an address to the people of Louisiana. A strong State Executive Committee was appointed, and the cause will not be allowed to flag during the months until 1892.

A daily morning paper is to be established; over $30,000 having been subscribed at the convention, and some $50,000 more supposed to be in sight. The New Delta, as an evening paper, has done a good work; but the Lottery press can only be properly met by a large morning daily with facilities equal to those of the Times-Democrat and Picayune. It would not have been out of place if the convention had particularly recognized the very effective service rendered our cause by the religious papers, such as the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, the Southwestern Presbyterian and the two Roman Catholic papers, the Morning Star and Holy Family.

Beyond doubt, the Lottery is doomed; the oldest, the best, the true and the tried, the real people of Louisiana are rallying, men and women, all classes of her white population, to the struggle, which all say must end in one way—that of a glorious victory, forever banishing from our midst all lotteries.

And, pardon this writer a word more. When that blessed result is reached, and the smoke of the battle has rolled away, the name of Dr. Carradine and those of the numberless others who have spoken in pulpit and on every opportune occasion against the great iniquity, will be read out and clearly seen in the glorious day of our State's redemption. Some have supposed the pulpit of Louisiana laggard in this great cause. Not so; the men of God have not held back in the fight, and all through the years since this Lottery was put upon us have they been condemning it in unqualified terms. Let all continue the fight, and to the death. J. T. S.

Letter from Bro. Pipes.

MR. EDITOR: After a long absence I am glad to let our friends in Louisiana know that we still live.

Webster is not as green and inviting as it was in May, when you longed to lie and roll on its beautiful grasses and rest under the shade of its forest trees for a whole month. The grass has withered and died by reason of a protracted drouth in all this region, and which still continues.

For four days this week I was in attendance at the Marvin Camp Meeting. This annual encampment affords an opportunity for a delightful reunion of the preachers and people of the two adjacent districts. The two presiding elders, Finney and Mays, were present and in lead of the meeting, which consisted in some six services each day—preaching, prayer meetings, children's and young people's meeting and a woman's meeting. This kept the work to a degree of white-heat from day to day. There was a good attendance of preachers, and some of the knowing ones were disposed to mouth about "so many preachers will always spoil a meeting." I don't believe a word of it. It is time to down that theory, that there must be a very few preachers at a meeting; at any rate, a very few must do all the preaching. God has called a diversity of talents into the ministry, because there are a great diversity of talents among the people; and it must needs take every variety of preaching to meet the demands of the people. The late Bishop Parker once said he believed in the miller's plan: preach the man when his turn comes.

Camp Marvin is a beautiful and delightful retreat from the dust and heat of the city. Think of a forty-acre lot of ground, containing all its original forest trees in the midst of a vast country of farms stretching in every direction as far as you can see. The grounds are carpeted with native grass, and abound with good water. Three sides of the encampment are lined with cloth tents, besides an avenue, called "Marvin," running back with tents on either side. The pulpit is shaded with a large tabernacle of cloth. Considering the attractions of the place, and the outlay of preparations, the congregations were small. The reason, perhaps, is because it is not on any railway. For nineteen successive years they have had camp meetings at this place, and eternity alone can tell the amount of good they have accomplished. The songs, prayers and sermons which we heard during those four days will be to us like an oasis on life's journey.

We hope ere long to get back to the land of onions, leeks, jowls and turnip greens.

WEBSTER GROVE, MO., Aug. 2, 1890.

Encouragement.

In the fight against the Lottery the antis appreciate the sympathy and encouragement of friends abroad. Our friends in Crystal Springs, Miss., held a mass meeting, August 7, and sent the following telegram to the Anti-Lottery Convention, in session at Baton Rouge:

To the President of the Anti-Lottery Convention, Baton Rouge, La.:

The people of Crystal Springs, Miss., in mass meeting assembled, send greetings to the Anti-Lottery Convention of Louisiana. We join with you in expressing abhorrence of the degrading and debauching influence of the Lottery Company, and trust that in fighting the accursed monster you will acquit yourselves as true men and uphold in peaceful times that which in war was always nobly defended—the honor and fair fame of Louisiana.

J. M. NEWTON,
Chairman Citizens' Meeting.

Geo. A. Newton, chairman of committee; J. W. McNeill, W. C. Wilkinson, A. Lotterhas, R. E. Jones, Ira M. Eagan, V. L. Terrell, J. M. Newton.

The reception of such a telegram was refreshing as "good news from a far country;" and the convention responded as follows:

Whereas, The citizens of Crystal Springs, Miss., in mass meeting assembled, have sent greetings to this convention, with words of cheer and encouragement;

Resolved, That the president do return the fraternal sentiments expressed by the citizens of Crystal Springs to the mayor of the city, with the expression of the high appreciation of this convention for the interest of the citizens of our sister State in the struggle we are waging with the Lottery Company, and we assure them that this convention will "uphold the honor and fair fame of Louisiana."

Endowment.

The following note from Bishop Galloway explains itself. Millsaps College grows beautifully.

MR. EDITOR: At the Topisaw Camp Meeting, on yesterday, we had a large congregation and an offering of $1,318 for Millsaps College. The movement grows in favor. A good meeting is in progress. Fraternally,

Our Supplement.

We call special attention to the supplement which we send out this week. It is full of interest on what is now a subject of absorbing importance to the Christian world, viz: Christian education. It will be of special value to all Mississippi Methodists, inasmuch as it gives a detailed account of the origin and growth of Millsaps College, and shows that that institution is now on a genuine, yet healthy boom. Be sure and give the supplement a careful reading.

Personal and Otherwise.

A private note from W. M. Foster, Congress, Miss., August 6, informs us of the illness of Rev. T. W. Lewis, of Winona. He had gone to assist Bro. Bass, of Sparta circuit, in a protracted service, and after a successful meeting was prostrated with something like congestion of the stomach and bowels. At the date of the note he was seriously ill. We trust the Lord will spare this valuable servant to the church.

Several valuable communications are held over to give place to the ringing "Address to the People of the United States" by the Anti-Lottery Convention, which met in Baton Rouge, August 7. Be sure and read that document. It goes to the root of the Lottery abomination.

We are under obligations to President McVoy for a catalogue of his fine school at Mansfield, La. The past session was a successful one, and the signs are that the next will be more so. Let the Methodists in Louisiana remember that this is our school for young ladies, and patronize it handsomely.

Revival at Wesley, Houston and Wesley Charge, North Mississippi Conference.

We have just closed a meeting of nine days' duration at Wesley, which resulted in a great revival. Difficulties had long existed at this place, but through the plain and faithful preaching of the gospel these were overcome and a wonderful victory achieved for the Master. We are not able to give the number of conversions and the good accomplished in many directions; eternity alone will reveal the good done. There were eleven accessions: one by letter and ten from the world. On the last day of the meeting we called for the collections ordered by the Annual Conference and secured $11 50 more than the amount asked for. We are under obligations to the Rev. Amos Kendall, our faithful presiding elder, who preached powerful and irresistible sermons, and also to Rev. R. C. Morehead, of Pontotoc, who also preached with power and acceptability. Our predecessors have wrought faithfully in this field, and are factors in the result which we now realize. Houston and Wesley charge is in good condition. We give God all the glory.

HESLEP R. TUCKER.

HOUSTON, MISS., August 5, 1890.

Millsaps College.

A PROPOSITION.

Let the Methodists of Mississippi raise by self-denial between now and the meeting of the two Annual Conferences a fund sufficient to endow a chair in Millsaps College. The money spent for tobacco between now and then by the Methodists of Mississippi would do this. I would rather put my money to this good use, so that my boy would get the benefit of it, than for him to sit and look at me burn it and chew it up and spit it out on the ground. Those who do not use tobacco can find something else to practice self-denial upon. Four months of self-denial—what a fund it ought to bring in! T. CAMERON.

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. Wilson Mooro writes from Sugar Town, La.: "Since the first of June, 1890, we have had, at least, 12 or 13 accessions and, at least, 15 conversions."

—Rev. Thomas Carter, writing from Plaquemine Brulee, La., says: "We have just closed a meeting at this point; had 21 conversions and 18 accessions."

—Rev. P. Howard writes: "Please say to my friends elsewhere that I am still quite feeble—this the twenty-eighth day of my sickness, but am able to be up most of the time. Gaining strength very slowly. Pray for me, that this sickness may not be unto death, but for the glory of God."

—Rev. J. M. Pugh writes: "We have just closed an interesting meeting of six days at Tyler Town, Miss., which resulted in about ten conversions and seven accessions to the church. It is said to be the best meeting ever held here. We feel very grateful to God for this manifestation of his love, and to Bro. J. G. Sibley for his faithful and efficient services. We will be glad for him to visit us again."

Mansfield Female College
Conservatory of Music and Art.
MANSFIELD, LA.

One of the most popular and flourishing institutions of the South. The Sixty-seventh Session opens September 10, 1890, and the Spring Term begins January 28, 1891, with an able and experienced faculty. Curriculum comprehensive instruction thorough. Advantages in Music unsurpassed, as in the best conservatories. The pianos are new and of the best make. The Technicon and the Techniphone are used to facilitate the work in the music department, placing this department beyond competition. Departments of Fine Arts and Industrial Arts under specialists.

The location is unsurpassed for beauty and attractiveness, and the school is celebrated for the remarkable record for good health maintained. The climate is the best in which to educate, and the place is the safest for girls. The main building is of brick, massive and commodious, with a large and well-shaded campus. Rooms large, well furnished, warmed and ventilated. Ample provision for the table of the best the market affords. All necessary comfort secured. Expenses very low and the school very economical. A new building with a large audience hall is in contemplation, and extensive improvements are in progress to make this the grandest Institution in the State.

A SERIOUS MISTAKE.

Much mischief is done in the treatment of constipation. The common opinion is that all requiremen's are fulfilled if the medicine forces unloading of the bowels. A great error. Medicine simply purgative, corrects no morbid condition, consequently their use is followed by greater costiveness. A remedy, to be effectual and permanent, must be composed of tonic, alterative, corrective and cathartic properties. These are admirably combined in Dr. Tutt's Liver Pills. They will, in a short time, cure all the sufferings that result from inactive bowels. They give tone to the intestines, stimulate the secretions, and correct imperfect functional action of the stomach and liver.

GOING ON AN ERRAND.

A pound of tea at one and three,
And a pot of raspberry jam,
Two new-laid eggs, a dozen pegs,
And a pound of rashers of ham.

I'll say it over all the way,
And then I'm sure not to forget,
For if I chance to bring things wrong
My mother gets in such a pet.

A pound of tea at one and three,
And a pot of raspberry jam,
Two new-laid eggs, a dozen pegs,
And a pound of rashers of ham.

There in the hay the children play—
They're having such jolly fun;
I'll go there, too, that's what I'll do,
As soon as my errands are done.

A pound of tea at one and three,
A pot of—er—new-laid jam,
Two raspberry eggs, with a dozen pegs,
And a pound of rashers of ham.

There's Teddy White flying his kite,
He thinks himself grand, I declare;
I'd like to try to make it fly up sky high,
Ever so much higher
Than the old church spire,
And then—but there—

A pound of three and one at tea,
A pot of new-laid jam,
Two dozen eggs, some raspberry pegs,
And a pound of rashers of ham.

Now here's the shop, outside I'll stop,
And run my orders through again.
I haven't forgot—no, ne'er a jot—
It shows I'm pretty cute, that's plain.

A pound of three at one and tea,
A dozen of raspberry ham,
A pot of eggs, with a dozen pegs,
And a rasher of new-laid jam.

Five Boys and a Watermelon.

A CHARCOAL SKETCH FROM NATURE.

As we stepped to the back door of our office the other afternoon, looking out into the alley we spied five little urchins. They were huddled close together, evidently brooding, as boys will, over some difficult point that baffled their wits. They were all about the same age, not over ten, we suppose, and all equally ragged, dirty, barefoot and forlorn. They looked like newsboys off duty. By their side on the top of a short post, placed to keep wagons from running against the corner of a brick house, lay a good-sized, plump, striped, green and white watermelon. It was evidently the subject of profound but subdued interest by the crowd. One of the boys, a little red-headed, generous-looking fellow, was rubbing his red eyes with his knuckles, and all over his face grimy streaks of damp coal-dust lay in zebra style. We broke into the stillness of their meditations by asking:

"Boys, why don't you eat your watermelon?"

"Cause this feller's mother's going to lick him for buying it."

"Wasn't it his money?"

"Yes, he made it hisself, but she says he's got to give it to ur."

"Did he buy the melon for you boys to eat?"

"Yes, sir" (from all of them).

"How much did he pay for it?"

"Fifteen cents, sir."

"Well, if he got the money back, would his mother lick him?"

"S'pose not," said one; but the little rascal who had been crying, suddenly shot off and plunged through one of the back doors across the alley.

"He's gone to see, sir," they said.

"Well, boys, if he sells the melon, you won't get to eat it, will you?"

"Reckon not, sir."

"Then would you rather that he should get the licking, and you have the melon, or that he should sell it and get off from the licking?"

There was an ominous silence; then one of the smallest of the crowd, seized with a spasm of virtue, or sympathy, or perhaps suspecting a way out to the melon at last, spoke up, in a low dutiful tone:

"Rather have him get off from the licking, sir."

I knew in my heart it was a little black lie, but unconsciously spoken. They were all hoping that the boy would sacrifice himself for his country, take the licking like a man, and divide the spoils. That was what they were all waiting there for. Just then, as swiftly as he had disappeared, radiant with relief, the red-headed woodpecker boy flashed out of the gate opposite, and cried, "She says she won't lick me if she gets the money."

"Well," said I, "here are the nickles; bring the melon in the store and lay it on the counter." The owner, with a troubled look, slowly gathered the melon under his arm; the other boys filed in a melancholy sort of funeral procession behind him, and ranged themselves around the door, while he came in and laid the lost treasure on the counter.

"There," said I, handing him the money, "I guess our clerks will enjoy that feast; it is a hot day, and that looks like a pretty good melon."

The boys lingered near like Mary's little lamb, for a minute or two, but as no further notice was taken of them, they turned and gathered in a clump again waiting for Jimmy who had gone to settle accounts with his mother. When he returned they went into caucus again around the post, evidently on the merits of his action in the case, their sense of his patriotism and heroism not being rated very high. We were watching them through the window, and as I strolled carelessly toward the door one of the boys looking up, betrayed their feeble hope by faintly crying out, "Say, Mister, give us a piece!"

"All right," said I, "come forward and stand in a row, and we'll see what we can do." The little hungry ragamuffins didn't let the grass grow under their feet a minute, but leaped forward and crowded close with watering mouths, filling the doorway and pressing inside. Then as they held the big slices of the ripe, red, juicy melon, thrust into their faces till only eyes and chin of any of them were visible, they looked the happiest set of cubs imaginable. In about three minutes a round of "Thank you, sir," broke upon the air, they began pelting each other with the broken rinds, and leaping and cavorting like wild colts, they fled, yelling and shouting down the alley. They had solved in one instance the great universal problem, how to have the fun and at the same time to keep the money. But the poor bloated capitalist, what of his fifteen cents? He got it back in five dollars' worth of happiness in studying that rich crowd of boys in their various moods and in the final exhilaration of their frolicsome boyishness. Fifteen cents laid up in heaven, you say! Not a cent of it, you stingy fellow. He got the worth of the money over and over, then and there. This is a true story, every word of it.—T., in Mid-Continent.

A clergyman had a very bright boy whose fifth birth-day fell upon a Sunday, and in the morning the boy was told by his father that he would be asked to say grace at dinner. Accordingly after morning service, at the dinner table the little fellow was requested to ask a blessing. He proceeded immediately to screw up his eye, and imitating exactly his father's tone, said: "O thou Power and Glory, we thank thee for the evil spirit. Amen." The clergyman in question immediately withdrew from the table, perceiving at first only the humor of the situation, but perceiving later with great clearness the acuteness and point of the unconscious criticism of his own style.—Christian Union.

TOO PROMPT TO BE EFFECTIVE.—"I is —" began Tommy, when his teacher interrupted him.

"That is wrong; you should say 'I am.'"

Tommy accepted the rebuke with becoming docility, and continued "I am the ninth letter of the alphabet."—Harper's Bazar.

For over fifty years Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar has cured coughs, colds, asthma, bronchitis, throat and lung affections. It is the regular prescription of a physician of extensive practice, who, after prescribing it for twenty years, was induced by the gratifying results, to make it a proprietary medicine. Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar soon became known as the best remedy for all throat and lung troubles. Why? Because it has merit and will cure. A. C. Haffenger, Philadelphia, says: "I know a man suffering with his lungs who was in the hospital a year without benefit. I induced him to take Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar, and to-day he is well. I know it saved his life." Try it.

The only reliable vegetable substitute for calomel, which acts on the liver, blood, kidneys and stomach, and best anti-bilious purgative is Maguire's Cundurango. Endorsed by Archbishop Ryan, of Philadelphia; Rev. McNally, of St. Louis, and a host of prominent people.

The Secret of a Long Life.

You sometimes see a woman whose old age is as exquisite as was the perfect bloom of her youth. She seems condensed sweetness and grace. You wonder how this has come about; you wonder how it is her life has been a long and happy one. Here are some of the reasons:

She knew how to forget disagreeable things.

She understood the art of enjoyment.

She kept her nerves well in hand, and inflicted them on no one.

She believed in the goodness of her own daughters and in that of her neighbors.

She cultivated a good digestion.

She mastered the art of saying pleasant words.

She did not expect too much from her friends.

She made whatever work come to her congenial.

She retained her illusions, and did not believe that all the world was wicked and unkind.

She relieved the miserable, and sympathized with the sorrowful.

She retained an even disposition, and made the best of everything.

She did whatever came to her cheerfully and well.

She never forgot that kind words and a smile cost nothing, but are priceless treasures to the discouraged.

She did unto others as she would be done by, and now that old age has come to her and there is a halo of white hair about her head, she is loved and considered.

This is the secret of a long life and a happy one.—Ladies' Home Journal.

FINISH YOUR JOBS.—Many persons seem to be always in a hurry, and yet never accomplish much; others never seem to be hurried, and yet do a very great deal. If you have fifty letters to answer, don't waste too much time looking over to find which one should be noticed first; answer the one you first lay hands on, and then go on through the whole pile as fast as possible.

Some begin a thing and leave it partially completed and hurry off to something else. A better plan is to complete whatever you undertake before you leave it, and be thorough in everything. The going back and forth from one thing to another wastes valuable time.

Another thing: deliberate workers are those who accomplish the most work in a given time, and are less tired at the end than many who have accomplished half as much. The hurried worker has often to do his work twice over; and, even then, it is seldom done in the best manner either for neatness or durability. It is the deliberate and measured expenditure of strength which invigorates the constitution and builds up the health. Multitudes of firemen have found an early death; while the plough-boy lives healthy and lives long, going down to his grave beyond threescore and ten.

GIRLS AND WOMEN.—A New York paper recently offered a prize of $25 for the best brief answer to the old, yet ever-new question, "What shall we do with our girls?" Madame Albani-Gye was judge, and awarded the prize to the writer of a short essay which proved to be from Ella Wheeler Wilcox. This is the essential part:

"The foundation of society rests on its homes. The success of our homes rests on the wives. Therefore, first of all, teach our girls how to be successful wives. Begin in their infancy to develop their characters. Teach them that jealousy is an immorality and gossip a vice. Train them to keep the smallest promise as sacredly as an oath, and to speak of people only as they would speak to them. Teach them to look for the best quality in every one they meet, and to notice other people's faults only to avoid them. Train them to do small things well, and to delight in helping others, and instill constantly into their minds the necessity for sacrifice for others' pleasure as a means of soul development. Once given a firm foundation of character like this, which the poorest as well as the richest parents can give to their girls, and no matter what necessity arises they will be able to rise above it."

That tired feeling is entirely overcome by Hood's Sarsaparilla, which creates an appetite, rouses the liver, cures headache, and gives renewed strength and vigor to the whole body. Be sure to get Hood's Sarsaparilla, which is peculiar to itself. Sold by all druggists.

The Latest Discoveries in Hypnotism.

THE PRESENT STATE OF THE SUBJECT.

BY DR. J. LUYS.

The history of hypnotism forms part of the history of the marvelous in human existence. In reality it is found under different names at all periods of history, from the incantations of the ancient Egyptian magicians, down to the fascinations of Mesmer, and the investigations of Braid, to whom modern hypnotism owes its name and its appearance in the realm of science. Braid mastered all the leading characteristics of the several hypnotic stages, and had a profound conviction of its utility as a remedial agent in all diseases in which the nerves play a more or less visible part.

Hypnotism is an experimental extra-physiological condition of the nervous system, a pseudo-sleep into which a patient with an aptitude for it can be made fall and during which he loses, for the time being, all consciousness of his individual existence and of the external world.

In the sequence of hypnotic states there is a descending and ascending movement, downwards to lethargy, and upwards to restored consciousness. From a slight drowsiness he passes to the somnambulistic stage, preserving at first his faculty of hearing and speech. Next his faculties are overwhelmed, the power of sight only remaining. At last in the third stage, the patient falls into a complete lethargy; the life of the brain is withdrawn, and he lives merely by the automatic activities of his spinal marrow. In the return journey or second half of the circle, the hypnotised person goes through the opposite phases, recovering at each halting-place the faculties which have been temporarily suspended, passing from complete lethargy, through catalepsy and somnambulism, which are only different degrees of intensity of partial somnolence.

Several processes are employed to produce the hypnotic state, the most effective being revolving mirrors on which the patient fixes his eyes; but the sensitiveness of other special nerves, as well as of the optic nerves, can be utilized; in fact, with persons readily susceptible, suggestion suffices. The experimenter says to the patient, "You and I will count together up to six, and when we reach four you will be asleep."

To awaken the patient, it is generally sufficient to say, "You will be awake in a minute," but it is important to be sure that he is thoroughly awake; for if a patient only half-awaken is sent back to his daily life, he may collide with and knock down persons, steal articles exposed in shops, or commit other offenses, while giving the impression that he is in full possession of his senses. The cataleptic stage is attended with well-defined manifestations. The muscles maintain the poses given to them, and display a force far beyond what they are capable of in the waking state. The faculty of balancing is raised to an extraordinary pitch of exaltation. Stand him on one leg, bend his body forward or backward, bend his spinal column while making him throw his head back, and he will maintain his equilibrium. Lift the patient horizontally, and lay his head on the back of one chair, and his heels on the back of another, and he will remain as stiff as a board, supported by his extremities. In this cataleptic stage the emotions can be brought into play in a perfectly methodical manner. He can be made glad without a word by simply putting in his line of vision a sketch of happy faces, his features expand, and by degree he breaks out into a loud laugh.

Conversely, a sketch of gloomy persons will fill him with sadness. Music wakes emotions proper to the time, and every color excites a special emotion; blue raises emotion of sorrow, yellow or red, joy and delight. Emotional states are also kindled by making the patient go through the gestures, with which any given emotion is habitually associated. For example, the patient's fist being closed and placed in a threatening posture, the face assumes an angry expression, but put his hand in the attitude of throwing a kiss and his face expresses delight and pleasure.

Somnambulism is the last stage of hypnotism before awaking. In this stage the patient's mind is a thoroughly prepared soil, in which we call up hallucinations and illusions of the senses, crazy fancies and fixed ideas which become irresistible. If you tell him it is cold, he wants a fur cloak; if you tell him it is warm, he wants to put on summer clothing. If you say, "Here is a glass of wine," and ask him to drink, he accepts it, and makes pretense to drink it. The word credivite has been invented to characterize the extraordinary credulity of this stage.—Fortnightly.

Sunday-School Lesson.

(Treasury for Pastor and People. E. B. Treat, New York.)

LESSON VIII.—August 24.

PREVAILING PRAYER.

Luke xviii, 1-14.

1. The judge and the widow. Vs. 1-8. The theme of these eight verses is importunity in prayer. (1) The first verse states the subject in these words: "And he spake a parable unto them to the end that men ought always to pray and not to faint." Every word here teaches perseverance in prayer—"ought to pray;" "ought always to pray," "and not to faint," grow weary, give up, get discouraged. The verse is full of the strongest expressions, setting forth how we should commune with God. It tells us that we must put into our petitions force, energy, determination, great anxiety, incessant solicitation. (2) All the great prayers of the Bible are full of the profoundest urgency, e. g., Abraham's prayer for Sodom (Gen. xviii, 23-33); Jacob at the Ford Jabbok (Gen. xxxii, 24-32); Nehemiah for the Jews (Neh. i, 4-11); David because of his great sin (Ps. li); our Lord in the garden (Matt. xxvi, 36-46). In these remarkable cases the suppliants all felt the force of the great truth involved in the strong words of this first verse: "Men ought always to pray and not to faint." (3) As nothing is secured in this world without perseverance, so we may easily conclude the reason for Jesus urging it in the case of prayer. (4) The story told of the widow and the judge is like all our Lord's parables, simple, easy of comprehension, yet profound, holding in keeping for the souls of men one of the most important truths in the Holy Scriptures: viz., that the Lord God will hear the earnest cry of his afflicted people. (5) In expounding the parable we must not take note of the unjust judge's motive in avenging the poor widow, as there is no connection here between him and the great Hearer and Answerer of prayer. The ground of comparison is in the fact that our heavenly Father, like the judge, will hear importunate cries. (6) The seventh verse is emphatic: And shall not God avenge his elect, which cry to him day and night, because he is long-suffering over them, full of love towards them and ever desirous of helping them, seeing that the unjust judge, who was only selfish, did avenge the widow who troubled him. (7) I say unto you that he will avenge them speedily, promptly, ere they pray long, if only they pray in real earnest. (8) "Howbeit when the Son of man cometh shall he find faith on the earth?" (v. 8.) The first part of this verse states God's faithfulness, but the question is raised as to the faithfulness of those who profess his holy name. It is common to ask: "Will God hear and answer?" It would be far better if we would think more of our own responsibility in this matter of prayer, and ask ourselves the question: Have we faith, are we believing, are our prayers of the right quality? This is the truth which our blessed Lord would have us learn. We shall be avenged specdily if only our faith is firm.

2. The Pharisee and the publican. Vs. 9-14. As the first part of this lesson teaches perseverance in prayer, so these remaining verses teach humiliation in prayer. This we see from verse ninth: "And he spake also this parable unto certain which trusted in themselves that they were righteous and set all others at nought." The sin of the human heart is pride. It belongs to man as man, and is his greatest curse. The race by natural proclivity is pharisaical. When touched by the Spirit of God, men feel as did the poor publican in the narrative. Observe, (1) both these men believed in God, in prayer and in a special house of prayer, while both actually prayed so far as the outward form was concerned. Learn that it is one thing to be orthodox in creed, and quite another thing to have the true spirit of religion in the heart, which is a personal sense of condemnation on account of sin; hope of deliverance therefrom through the grace of God, and profound humility in asking for that grace. (2) The Pharisee's prayer is a form of words prompted by a self-righteous heart; the publican's prayer shows a humility equally marked. The one feels himself too good to ask anything from God; the other feels himself too bad to come near the temple, to lift up his eyes unto heaven, or do anything save to smite upon his breast and cry: "God, be merciful to me a sinner." (3) This prayer of verse 13 is most remarkable, as setting forth man's lost condition and his only hope through the mercy of God. These half dozen words are the heart of the Bible! (4) The conclusion, "for every one that exalteth himself shall be humbled; but he that humbleth himself shall be exalted," is a far-reaching truth, involving the eternal destiny of each individual of the race. We exalt ourselves when we shut out Jesus Christ, we humble ourselves when we take him into our hearts as our only hope.

Temperance.

Report on Temperance.

UNANIMOUSLY ADOPTED BY THE MISSISSIPPI BAPTIST STATE CONVENTION AT COLUMBUS, MISS., JULY 26, 1890.

Conviction against the drink habit and traffic has never been so near in accord with the teachings of science and God's Word as to-day. Upon this joyous fact we congratulate the citizenship of our great country.

In our own State, of the seventy-five counties composing it, forty have put the seal of disapprobation and execration upon the debauching drink traffic, and the saloon has been driven from their borders, it is hoped, to never be returned.

In the religious world, all non-Catholic denominations, save perhaps one, has in its great convocations outlawed, in unmeasured terms, the sale and use of all intoxicants as a beverage. The deliverances of these great religious bodies are planting convictions in the hearts of the people and quickening the public conscience to a gratifying degree.

Mr. Claiborne, our own State historian, has well said that no "cause espoused by the ministry of any country has ever failed." We gratefully record the God-honoring fact that the ministry of Mississippi is practically a unit in condemning the drink habit and the drink traffic. We also rejoice over the fact that those ministers who apologize for or silently consent to the sale and use of intoxicants have lost their influence with the great moral masses and are repudiated by God's hosts as by the philanthropic patriotism of the country.

To the sympathetic Christian heart it is a blessed truth that where the Christian womanhood of any country gets on its knees before the Lord of victories, it is answered in answers of peace. We rejoice that the Christian womanhood of this Christian republic is organizing to secure the safety of its homes against the invasion of the drink traffic and its influences.

We bid our mothers, sisters, wives and daughters hearty God-speed in their Christly work. We believe, under God, they are a mighty factor in the redemption of humanity from the drink curse.

We pledge our influence and persistent efforts to the accomplishment of the following:

1st. The protection by legal enactment of all schools from the presence and influence of the liquor traffic. We heartily participate in the wide-spread regret that the only woman's school under the patronage of the State has been denied immunity from the open saloon. Our girls in our peerless girls' school must have the protection accorded our boys.

2nd. Scientific temperance instruction in all our schools, State and private.

3rd. Bible temperance; instructions among the negroes, especially the young of that dependent race.

4th. The complete abrogation of the iniquitous license system, high or low, the partnership between the saloon and State.

5th. The suppression by all honorable methods of the soul-and-body-destroying drink habit.

6th. The constitutional prohibition of the drink traffic.

7th. And, finally, we recommend and earnestly plead for the constant agitation of the temperance and prohibition question throughout our State. In our judgment, no greater mistake can be made by temperance people than to cease to hold temperance meetings in saloon or prohibition territory.

BOOKS.

SANITARY AND ECONOMIC COOKING. By Mrs. Mary H. Abel. Published by the American Public Health Association, Rochester, New York. Single copy, cloth, 40 cents; paper, 35 cents.

This is a prize essay, and, we judge, a valuable contribution to the health and, therefore, happiness of the household. The author tells us of the different kinds of food, and their adaptation to the needs of the human body; then how to prepare them best, and at the cheapest figure, and closes by giving bills of fare, ranging in price from thirteen cents to twenty-three cents a day per person. We are sure this book will win its way among housekeepers.

APOSTOLIC ORGANISM. By J. C. Magee, D. D. Introduction by J. C. W. Coxe, Ph.D., D. D. Cranston & Stowe, Cincinnati. Price, $1.

This book is a plain, fair, strong discussion of apostolical succession, and is addressed to the young people of the Methodist Church. We agree to this passage from the introduction as to the merits of the work: "It is written in an attractive style; the argument is conducted in a candid and judicial spirit, as free from bigotry as it is from cant; the historical data adduced are ample and valid; and the conclusions reached abundantly indicate the apostolicity of our church organism." If any of our readers are not settled as to the dogma of apostolical succession, let them read this book, and they will be settled.

GIRLS AND WOMEN. By E. Chester. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston and New York. For sale by G. F. Wharton & Bro., New Orleans. Price, 75 cents.

Taking it altogether, this is a fine book for girls and women, young girls and old women. It treats on a variety of subjects in an easy style, and amply illustrates the various positions taken by apt examples from every-day life. Health, Self-support, Culture, The Problem of Charity, The Essentials of a Home, Hospitality, Society, Occupations for the Rich, Narrow Lives, are among the subjects treated. To read it will do you good. To have your daughters read it will do both them and you good. We commend it heartily.

DORIS CHEYNE: The Story of a Noble Life. By Annie S. Swan. Cranston & Stowe, Cincinnati. Price, $1.

ACROSS HER PATH. By Annie S. Swan. Cranston & Stowe, Cincinnati. Price, 50 cents.

THE SILENT LAND: A Study. By Minnie Willis Raines. Cranston & Stowe, Cincinnati. Price, 75 cents.

These are all pleasantly told stories, elucidating correct principles and inculcating good morals, and will beguile many otherwise weary hours.

J. B. CASSITY, P. E.

The Clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders.

The Episcopal Diocese, of New York, has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and the Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

Our friends desiring jobs printed will do much better to patronize the printing offices in their respective cities or towns. The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE has no job office.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The New York murderer, who was sentenced to be executed by electricity, finally met his fate on August 6, according to the method prescribed by the laws of New York. His death was not instantaneous, as was expected; it having taken many minutes and several shocks to kill him.

The Convention of the Anti-Lottery League was opened in Baton Rouge on August 7. Nine hundred and fifty-nine delegates, representing fifty-three parishes, were present on the opening day. An address to the people of the United States was read and adopted.

The President is expected to send a message shortly to Congress setting forth his views on the reciprocity policy, and recommending that the sugar industry of the country be sacrificed in the interests of trade development.

Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Spalding says the department has decided that a Chinaman who is the proprietor of a laundry will not, under the act of October 1, 1888, be allowed to re-land in the United States after visiting his native country.

The day for the consideration of the Anti-Lottery bill in the House has not yet been fixed, but a petition of one-fourth of the House was submitted several days ago to the Committee on Rules asking that a day be fixed for taking up the bill. It is probable the bill will be amended before finally passing either House, as there is objection on the part of many members to the stringency of the provisions, on the ground that too much power would be given to the postal authorities.

The Senate has passed Senator Plumb's concurrent resolution, providing for the transfer, with Mrs. Grant's consent, of the remains of General Grant from New York to Arlington Cemetery.

The employees of the New York Central railroad struck on August 8. The strike was ordered on account of the discharge of certain employees. Travel is not only blocked on the Central road, but also on the New England and Harlem roads, whose tracks are the Central road for a distance.

The State Farmers' Union, in session in Baton Rouge, on August 8, elected Thomas S. Adams, of East Feliciana, president.

The Farmer's Alliance, which met in Baton Rouge, last week, before adjournment adopted resolutions denouncing the Alliance men in the Legislature who voted in favor of re-chartering the Louisiana Lottery Company as traitors to the cause and principles of the union, and recommending that the subordinate unions expel them.

The Louisiana Baptists opened their forty-second annual convention in Ruston, on August 9. The Executive Board made the following showing: Beginning with 1886, they report total collections $3,500, while in 1890 it will be $18,000; that in 1886 they employed only six home missionaries, while this year it has thirty-two. In 1886 there were no Sunday-schools organized, while this year there were fifty-five organized.

It is estimated that the wheat crop of the Dakotas and Minnesota will be 91,000,000 bushels.

The Constitutional Convention of Mississippi met in Jackson on August 12.

Owing to the fact that members have gone to Boston to attend the Grand Army encampment, it is probable that little or no business will be transacted in the House of Representatives before the latter part of the week.

The sub-committee of the Senate committee has considered the Lottery bill favorably, and it has been ordered to be reported favorably to the Senate.

FOREIGN.

The mayor of Limerick and several other municipal officers have been expelled from the National League for their recent voting against John Dillon.

There are revolutions against the governments in both San Salvador and Guatemala.

The Queen gave a grand banquet at Osborne House, on August 7, in honor of Emperor William. Forty six guests sat at the tables. Among them were Count Von Hatzfeldt, the German embassador, and General Lord Wolseley.

A body of 180 prisoners on foot for Siberia, escorted by fifty-three soldiers, on arriving at Teumen, demanded carts for their conveyance. Their demand being refused, their attacked the soldiers of the escort with ferocity and smashed the rifles of four of the soldiers. The escort made use of their bayonets and wounded ten of the prisoners before the disturbance was quieted.

Much significance is attached to the recent visit of the Emperor of Germany to England. It is said that the reports circulating in the official world point to a project of the Emperor to obtain the assent of the Czar of Russia to a congress, aiming at a general European policy or peace compact, implying disarmaments.

A strong movement is on foot in England to petition Parliament to revoke the pensions granted to foreign princes who have married into the royal family, and who are largely dependent upon their English pensions for support.

The Berne police having received information that the nihilists were holding meetings in a house situated at the foot of Mont Blanc, made a raid on the place and arrested twenty nihilists.

Forty thousand persons took part in a socialistic demonstration in behalf of universal suffrage in Brussels, August 10. A large number of people came from the provinces to participate in the parade. There were many women on the line. The troops were confined to their barracks all day. The police patrolled the street, but everything was orderly.

In confidential circulars sent to commanders in the French army, the government states that dueling in the army will henceforth cease to be obligatory, even in cases where personal violence has been used.

Cardinal John Henry Newman died in Birmingham, England, on August 11, aged eighty-nine years.

THE WARMTH OF A WORD.

'Twas a day in the dead of winter,
And echo of hurried feet
Struck sharp from the icy pavement
Of the pitiless city street.

Each passer was loath to linger,
Though wrapped in a fur-clad fold;
For the air was a tingle with frost-flakes,
And the sky was benumbed with cold.

The cimeter wind in its fury,
Bore down like a sweeping foe;
The tempest was waiting the onset,
And abroad were its scouts of snow.

Yet, 'midst it all, with his tatters
A-flap in the whirling blast,
A child who seemed born of the winter—
A creature of penury—passed.

So tremulous were his accents,
As he shivered and crouched and sung,
That the names of the mumbled papers
Seemed frozen upon his tongue.

He paused for a bitter moment,
As a wondrously genial face
Arrested his voice and held him
With a pity that warmed the place.

"Have a paper?" The kind eye glistened
As the stranger took the sheet,
And glanced at the stiffened fingers,
And thought of the icy feet.

Then dropped in his hand the value
Of his fifty papers sold;
"Ah, poor little friend!" he faltered,
"Don't you shiver and ache with cold?"

The boy, with a gulp of gladness,
Sobbed out, as he raised his eye
To the warmth of the face above him,
"I did, sir—till you passed by!"

Letter No. 7.

LOCH KATRINE—STIRLING CASTLE—BATTLEFIELD OF BANNOCKBURN—EDINBURGH CASTLE—HOLYROOD PALACE.

Loch Katrine lies at right angles with Loch Lomond—the latter running north and south, the former east and west. The traveler stages it five miles to go from one to the other. Loch Katrine is about nine miles in length, and the loveliest scenery is at the eastern end. Here, like an emerald gem upon the bosom of the lake, is Ellen's Isle. Ben Venue towers up on the south bank, and Ben Aan on the north shore. The island is between the two, and not sixty yards from the north shore. It is about two acres in extent, and covered with trees. You get a glimpse, as you pass, of the "silver strand" where Ellen's boat landed at the Fitz-James' interview.

The Trosachs is a wild, beautiful valley, running from Loch Katrine to Loch Achray. Let the reader turn to Scott's "Lady of the Lake" to obtain a description of that beautiful glen. The tourist passes over twelve or fifteen miles of the deer chase so graphically presented in the above-mentioned poem. And it added greatly to the charm of the stage ride, after leaving Loch Katrine, to identify the various points, with the guide-book in one hand and Walter Scott's "Lady of the Lake" in the other.

I was shown the battlefield of Stirling, where Wallace, with ten thousand men, defeated the Earl of Surrey with a much larger army. The windings of the river Forth helped the noble Scotch leader to obtain the victory. From the east wall the prospect is simply glorious in its breadth and length, and in the panorama of fields, rivers, hills, and mountains in the far distance. Stirling Castle is a landmark that can be seen for thirty or forty miles around. I was not surprised now at recalling what was told me on Ben Lomond, that on a fair day this castle could be plainly seen. From the south wall you can see in the distance, two or three miles away, the battlefield of Bannockburn. I could not help thinking how these castle walls, and the tops of the houses in the town of Stirling, were crowded with anxious observers of those two famous battles. What straining eyes, and white cheeks, and fervent prayers for son and husband and brother and father, who were in the conflict in the field beneath; and, beside this, the liberty of Scotland, and their own lives, were at stake. Yonder they could see the men falling to rise no more. Whose loved one was it? From the east wall you see near by the Grey Friars Cathedral, where Mary, Queen of Scots, was crowned. The castle is garrisoned by three or four hundred young Highlanders. They are dressed in the military Highland costume, bare knees and all. With quite a redundancy of color, they look like animated rainbows as they pace their beats, or move about the court-yard. Viewed from a distance with kirtle, plaid, armor, and an immense black shako on their heads, they present an alarming appearance; but when you get nearer the fierce-looking warrior and give a furtive look up under the nodding helmet, you encounter the smooth face and beardless lip and cheek of a boy of eighteen or twenty. There he was, trying to look fierce, and holding his gun as if the castle was in a state of siege. I could scarcely restrain my smiles as I looked at the soldier-boy guard and at his three hundred companions. They are all boys and youths just enlisted, and they feel their importance, and have donned the war-look in absence of war-paint. I thought of the children at home who, in their games, try to frighten their parents with sundry terrible faces, and blood-curdling cries. I thought of the farmers quietly reaping in the fields in sight of Stirling. I had a vision of Peace and Plenty, with their beautiful arms resting on the hills, and, with cheek on arm, smilingly looking down upon the sheltered land. And I thought of these fierce boys in the castle of Stirling, keeping watch over some old gray walls and towers that everybody has forgotten but the traveler and the reader of history. Hold fast to your guns, ye sons of Mars! Bayonet every rat that attempts to come in under the portcullis. Look out some rainy, windy night for the ghost of James Douglass, who was murdered by James II. in yonder room, and flung from the window into the court-yard. Or maybe when the moon shines faintly through thin white clouds, you will see Mary, Queen of Scots, standing on the castle wall, wringing her hands over Scotland. Or, perhaps, you will hear chattering voices coming up from yonder grated dungeon. If you hear or see anything, shoot your gun and fall back into the inner tower. Bar and bolt every gate, and, at all events, hold the castle! But hear me, my young Highlander: Long before you will ever have the opportunity of sheathing your bayonet in human flesh, the gospel of our blessed Lord will have so spread, and will have such a grip on men's hearts and consciences and judgments, that war will cease, and that sword of thine will become a pruning-hook.

Taking a cab, I drove out to the field of Bannockburn. An iron grating and a large flag-staff mark the spot where the Scottish standard was planted. By the spot I stood and took in the features of the battle-plain. Here is the gentle eminence upon which Bruce extended the line of his troops for half a mile. At the base of it, two hundred yards away, is still flowing the little stream of Bannockburn. It flows water to-day; but it ran blood on that day. It is only about ten or twelve feet wide. I went down and examined it. Just beyond the stream was the marsh in which the English horse became entangled; and to the right of that, as we stand looking south, is the field that Bruce had filled with pits, and that completed the confusion of the invading army. The marsh and field are now well-cultivated wheat fields, and where the English fell and died in great numbers I now see a score of reapers at work on the identical spot. What a sight that English army of one hundred thousand men, spread out on the plains and hillsides yonder, must have presented! Far to the left and south was pointed out to me the place where Edward's tent was pitched, and where he viewed the battle. To the right is the hill over which the camp-followers suddenly appeared, to the final discouragement of the invaders. Then memory brought back the remarkable scene when thirty thousand men knelt in prayer in one long line on this eminence, while the good abbot extended his hands and blessed them. Could such men fail? Would God leave such an army to defeat? Then I recalled Robert Bruce's address to his soldiers. And then I sang the beautiful and stirring song written by Burns:

"Scots who hae with Wallace bled,
Scots whom Bruce has often led,
Welcome to your gory bed,
Or to glorious victory."

One of the loveliest pictures I saw while in Scotland met my gaze in the suburbs of Stirling, in the person of a little boy of about four years of age, standing on a fence blowing soap bubbles, and watching them float away and burst. As I passed in the cab I smiled upon him, and the little fellow smiled back, and turned to look after another bubble that he had just cast off. How interested he was, and what a bright, eager little face he had! He little thought or cared that the stranger who had just passed him prayed God to bless his future life. As I looked back at him I thought: Well, the world is doing just what the little boy is doing—blowing bubbles; there being this one difference—that the world cries when its bubbles burst and vanish, but the boy smiled.

Over the immense bridge that spans the Firth of Forth we next sped on our way to the ancient capital of Scotland. The Brooklyn Bridge is 3,475 feet long and 135 feet high; the Bridge of Forth is 7,295 feet long and 370 feet above the water level.

In Edinburgh we first visited the castle. This is built on an eminence even higher than that of Stirling Castle, being, as we were informed, five hundred feet above the level of the sea. There are seven gates to be passed before you get admittance into the castle proper. As I counted them, looked at the huge portcullis arrangement beside, and then glanced down from the lofty walls that crown the rocky and perpendicular crag to the street, over four hundred feet below me, I again said, Here was another impregnable fortress. The guide told me it always had to be starved into surrender. History speaks of one exception, and the case is told very thrillingly in one of Grace Aguilar's books, called "The Days of Bruce." How I paused over that book when a boy! Randolph, a gallant follower of Bruce, one dark night, with thirty men, scaled these heights that previously, on account of their loftiness and perpendicularity, had been regarded as unscaleable. It was accomplished by the leadership of a young man who had formerly dwelt in the castle, and who, from the ardent desire to visit his sweetheart every night in the town, found a way down the face of the precipice to the ground below. What will not love make a man attempt and achieve! He it was that guided Randolph and his small band up the face of the cliff, to the surprise and capture of the garrison. Here I found another regiment of young Highlanders, looking, if possible, more bloodthirsty than the Stirling battalion. England seems to be having some difficulty in finding recruits for her army. The walls and street corners abound in flaming placards, offering great inducements to young men to enlist in the service. Pictures of gorgeously arrayed grenadiers, and helmeted and plumed dragoons, fill up the sides of the placard to assist the youth in coming to a decision. The promise of being taken into the civil service after so many years is added by way of lagniappe. The pay per annum, while serving, is three pounds, or fifteen dollars.

High street, in Edinburgh, is interesting from one end to the other. I question whether another street in the world can group together as many historic places and objects of note. The Heart of Mid-Lothian is here, the Church of John Knox, the residence of the same apostolic man, the place where the coronation of kings was publicly announced, the house where the first Bible was printed in Scotland, the houses of illustrious men, and, not least in interest, the stone pillar where scolding wives were once chained for a certain number of hours. I accepted the last piece of information with a certain amount of mental reservation. The guide spoke with some feeling on the subject. He regarded it as a good custom, and, in a word, I gathered from the little he said that there was an agitated family history at home.

Holyrood Palace and Abbey made a profound impression upon me. The palace faces west, and, with its four-story front and four towers in a line, is a most imposing building. Although a number of the kings and queens of Scotland have dwelt here, yet the mind singles out one above all, and keeps that one in memory all the time of the visit. I refer to Mary, Queen of Scots. Her rooms were on the third floor, as we say in America; but in the second story, as they call it in Great Britain. She had four apartments. One was her audience-room; back of that, and looking out of the front window of the palace, was her sleeping chamber. Two of the towers in front afforded her two other small apartments, eight by ten in dimension. Both of these small rooms opened into her sleeping chamber. One she used as her dressing-room; the other, which was in the northwest corner of the palace, she kept as her private supping-room. This last room has no outlet except through the sleeping apartment of the queen. In this room occurred that famous supper scene which was so violently and suddenly interrupted by her husband, Lord Darnley, and a few other Scotch noblemen rushing in and murdering her favorite secretary, Rizzio, before her eyes. They dragged his body through her sleeping-room (stabbing the dying wretch as they went), through the audience-room, and left him, with fifty wounds, dead at the head of the staircase. In her bed-room, and a few feet from the door of the small supper-room, I was shown another door opening upon a private staircase used by Mary, and up which the murderers came. What great people they were in those days for private stairways, and secret postern doors, and underground passages! The other end of this private stairway I afterward saw in a corner of the abbey, nearly a hundred yards away. Where else it wandered in the thick walls of the palace I could not tell. I doubt not that the queen returned from her religious devotions in the abbey thus privately to her room. I was shown her bed in her sleeping-room. I wouldn't have it if it was given to me. And the mirror in which her beautiful face was reflected still hangs upon the wall. What a sad, careworn face it became afterwards! Her beauty was a snare to her and others, and led to the death of a number. Chastelard, the nephew of Chevalier Bayard, became infatuated, and secreted himself behind the tapestry of her room. Her maid attendants discovered him, and on his repeating the offense, he was tried and beheaded. Bothwell blew her husband up with gunpowder, in order to marry her; and still others, on her account, came to an untimely grave. In the audience-room the stormy interviews between herself and John Knox took place. Every time he denounced her worldly, or Catholic, course she would send for him, and there would be bitter upbraiding, ending with a shower of tears. Knox stood like the Eddystone Lighthouse; the water dashed in vain, and he shone on. On one occasion Queen Mary, in her indignation, sent him out in the ante-room to await her good pleasure. There he found himself in the presence of the "four Maries," her attendants and maids of honor. Without a moment's delay he turned to the simpering, bedizened girls of the court, and gave them a solemn exhortation and warning. How differently some of us would have acted! If we ever had screwed up sufficient courage to have rebuked the sins of the wealthy or of royalty; if even then we had been dismissed to cool the blood in an ante-room, and there found these giggling maidens, we would have said: "Fine weather we are having, ladies. I hope to see you out to our evening service at St. Giles. We will not keep you long, and, beside, there is a lovely song service preceding the sermon. Do come." And so, graciously smiling, we would have bowed ourselves out, and left four immortal souls unwarned. This is just where comes in the difference between our spinality and the vertebral column of John Knox. And the principle of life barely touched upon, but applied to both, explains exactly why the Scottish preacher has a great monument, and is known to the world, while some of us have none, and are not known or felt anywhere.

The Mississippi State Sunday-School Convention

Met in Vicksburg, August 6 and 7. Chancellor W. R. Trigg, of Greenville, was unanimously chosen president, as were the following officers: Vice-president, J. G. McGuire; secretary, Rev. L. W. Curtis; assistant secretary, Miss May Paxton; statistical secretary, J. M. Sessions, and treasurer, Capt. R. H. Smith.

S. M. Shelton, Esq., superintendent of the Presbyterian Sunday-school at Vicksburg, welcomed the convention in an interesting and eloquent address.

The next place of meeting is Greenville, Miss.

Rev. Dr. C. K. Marshall addressed the convention, as did other eminent Mississippians, showing practically how to meet the difficulties of training the children and youth of the church, so that they shall be saved through Christ. Dr. Marshall urged mothers to see to it that their children were converted before the world's attractions drew them into sin. He said the problem of the church was how to lead the members of the Sunday-school into the church, and induce them to participate in its work and worship. He advocated short Sunday-school sessions, followed by ten or fifteen minutes' recess; teachers and scholars to take definite part in the eleven o'clock service, and that the preacher prepare special parts of his discourse each Sabbath for the young members of his congregation. Other speakers emphasized these ideas, and showed the great lack and importance of parental instruction; showing that few mothers or fathers habitually teach their children the truth as it is in the Bible. The indifference of parents and inefficiency of superintendents and teachers were stated to be main causes of want of success in Sunday-school work. The remedy was prayerful study of the lesson by parents and superintendents and teachers, and their continuous faithful efforts for the salvation of souls.

REPORT OF INTERNATIONAL COMMITTEE.

Mr. Reynolds, of the above committee, and a resident of Peoria, Ill., having been specially invited to attend this convention, stated that the recent meeting of the International Sunday-school Committee was the most remarkable of any religious body held in this country. Over 1,500 delegates from Sunday-schools of all denominations sat for days discussing, with perfect harmony, the one theme, "How to save the children and young people of this country." Mr. Reynolds said every Sunday, in 125,000 Sunday-schools, over 10,000,000 children are taught by 1,250,000 unpaid teachers, moved to this labor and sacrifice by the most powerful force in the world—"love of God and for souls;" but there were over 8,000,000 children in this land who were not reached by this or any other Christian agency. What is to become of this large number of depraved, wretched human beings? If not saved in the next few years, they will be added to the millions who are now among us who are on their way to hell, and endangering the welfare of our government. All of the 1,500 delegates of the International Committee returned to their homes encouraged and blessed with greater consecration of soul, body and pocket-book.

HOW TO STUDY AND TEACH THE LESSON

was one of the special subjects discussed at the convention. Mr. Reynolds said: "The proper way to prepare the lesson was to pray about it, read the chapter carefully, read the context and parallel passages; thus get the lesson fully in mind. Next study the boys and girls of the class; what are they—saints or sinners? Then divide the lesson, so as to fit each one in the class. In studying the lesson note the place, the persons, the acts, the periods, the doctrine and the duties that are mentioned in the lesson; get all these fully into your heads and hearts; then tell the scholars what you have found in the lesson, and get them to tell you in their own language what they have seen in the lesson. Always prepare more ideas than you can use; let your class feel that you are well supplied, that you are never empty. Get the attention of your class and keep it, by exciting their curiosity by apt illustrations; put yourself down to the level of your scholars, be boys or girls with them, let them realize you are in full sympathy with them, that you love them and want them saved."

SUNDAY-SCHOOL JOTTINGS.

During the convention many important subjects pertinent to Sunday-school work were ably discussed. The essential points were noted for our readers, as follows:

The best Christian workers gave themselves to God in their youth.

A Sunday-school superintendent now doing good work, and a delegate to this convention, is only seventeen years old.

There is some pleasure in making money; but there is no pleasure so great as that of bringing a soul to Christ.

During forty years in the Sunday-schools at Edwards, Miss., every member of the same has been converted.

When the little child turns its heart to Jesus, the gentle Savior stoops to teach it himself, and makes his truth clear to the mind and heart of very young children.

Churches are God's workshops. Those who come into them will either work, or fossilize and become worthless religious tramps. Such a Christian life is a failure.

Sunday-school success is obtained by work through systematic, persevering, prayerful efforts of organized workers. No efficient workers, no work; hence no results.

A father of a large family who had been out of the church for many years, together with his entire family, was brought to Christ this year by starting a Sunday-school near his home.

Mr. Reynolds, of Illinois, said "one godly man or woman in any community could give it life and keep it alive if they would let the power of God that is working in them be felt."

Why are not 150,000 more Sunday-schools started? It is because Christians are so dead and blind. They have the talent, time and means, but are too selfish to devote themselves to this work.

There is no better way to reach anarchists and other sinners but through their children. But little can be done with an old sinner, and if we fail to reach the young of this period, the future of this country is very dark.

A church and Sunday-school organized in an old tank, which had been used as a whisky shop, resulted in the conversion of numbers of old and young—some of whom have gone home to heaven, dying shouting happy.

This convention must be taken to the workers in the field—just as Christ took his words and power down to the workmen. He did not say to his apostles, Build up a big church for me in Jerusalem; but, Go out into all the world.

State schools and colleges do not profess to teach morality. What is to be done for the Christian training of millions of young people who get no religious instruction anywhere? The Sunday-school is the only agency that is striving to reach them.

Neither politics nor education are the paramount questions of to-day. It is Christianity that can save the world from financial, political or intellectual wreck. No morality that is worth anything is to be found outside the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ.

The Sunday-school at Yokena, began in 1878, has had a fitful life. It has finally blossomed and fruited into a successful Presbyterian Church. Many of its scholars have been converted. All this mainly through the perseverance of Mrs. Grove, the sister of Rev. Hyland, of New Orleans.

County organizations are greatly needed in Sunday-school work. Political and commercial plans teach much in this line we should follow. Let the whole church be organized for Sunday-school work in each county, and great and glorious results will follow. The indifference of Christians is doing more to damage the cause of Christ than all the infidels in the world. Intense earnestness is the great need of Christian laborers. This is the cause of the great success of D. L. Moody and other noted evangelists. The source of this earnestness is the Holy Spirit shedding abroad the love of God in our hearts.

AT NIGHT.

At night, when work is done, 'mid shadows gray that darken
And cling about the window, where once the sun was bright,
Sweet sounds come back again, to which we used to hearken.
At night!

At night, though we are old, and the gray shadows clinging,
Presage to us that shore where there is no more light;
Sometimes there come again sweet airs of childhood's singing.
At night!

At night we two may sit in shadow open-hearted;
Long since the time has passed when hope was all in sight!
Softly we sing the songs of happy days departed.
At night!

At night the cricket's voice sounds through the shadows dreary;
Our songs, alas! like his, have neither charm nor weight;
We only rest and sing, hushed hopes and voices weary.
At night!

From the Work.

WOODVILLE DISTRICT.

At home after an absence of eleven days in the southern part of the district. During that time I held four Quarterly Conferences, as follows:

July 26, 27 was with J. H. Woodward at Pipkin. He is moving out to Zachary, on the L., N. O. and T. R. R. They expect to have the new church-house to be ready for the fourth quarterly meeting, and the parsonage to be ready for an occupant by the Annual Conference. We expect this will be one of the cozy stations. They delight in first-class preaching. There is, however, some friction about the move.

On Tuesday, July 29, held the New River Quarterly Conference at Big Swamp as the preacher in charge had changed the place from New River Church. Trevilion has stirring times with the Adventists, or they may also be called Seventh-Day Baptists. They have made some headway in Ascension parish and at Hammond, in Tangipahoa parish, and have book agents at Clinton, La., and Woodville, Miss. Their principal book is called "Bible Readings," but why thus called is strange when it has quotations from a number of authors. It gives the Adventists' doctrine. This is a sect lately introduced here from the North. I do not think they will have many followers except persons from the North. It was previously announced that I would preach on Monday night (at Big Swamp) on the "Christian Sabbath," and on Tuesday on "Baptism." There were large congregations to hear both, and some Adventists to take notes on the sermons. On Tuesday night preached at Antioch, another of Trevilion's churches, where Norton was carrying on a protracted meeting while we were south of Manshac holding the quarterly meeting. A postal card on my return home gives the good news of sixteen accessions at Antioch. Trevilion and New River charges are both growing rapidly.

On July 31 I held the Livingston Quarterly Conference at French Settlement. Had a pleasant and, I trust, a profitable time. The water is down; so Bro. Huff can go overland again.

August 2, 3 was with Mellard at Ebenezer, east of the I. C. R. R. There was a good attendance both of officials and to hear preaching. We need a new and large church-house here, and a building committee was appointed. They are preparing to build a church near Wilson's Store, on Tickfaw river, eight miles west of Amite City. This is a new appointment established this year. There is a gratifying development in Springfield charge. In the early part of the year Bro. Mellard received a Frenchman, a converted Catholic, who is now preparing for the ministry in our church. He is single and liberally educated in the mother tongue. He is learning the English language and is anxious to begin to preach. We hope he is the man we need to preach to the Creole French in our bounds, as they are not very accessible through the English language.

During these eleven days we preached eleven times, baptized twenty infants and four adults. On returning home found wife nursing eight cases of whooping cough. C. McDONALD.

JACKSON, La.

HEBRON, MISS.

The Rev. Joe J. Jones has been with us at Hebron, preaching altogether ten days. His preaching was of the style Paul commended to Timothy—"Rebuke, reprove." This he did in the most thorough and scathing manner. The people were greatly stirred. Many promised to amend their ways and live better lives. The church seems in a far better state. He came among us an entire stranger; he left many warm friends behind. He is denounced by a few—very few—whose wounds were too deep to be healed by ordinary methods.

J. D. NEWSOM.

LAKE CHARLES, LA.

I was appointed a "committee of one" to write you something of Lake Charles Methodism. But little has appeared in your columns in the last four years relative to this little queen by the lake. "I now take my pen in hand," etc., "hoping these few lines," etc.

Last Saturday and Sunday, August 2 and 3, was the time of our third quarterly meeting. Bro. Miller magnifies his office. He is growing in popularity and usefulness, if not younger in years. He has a great opportunity; he seems to know it, and is making the most of it. The love-feast, Sunday afternoon, was a wonderful season, full of power of the Holy Ghost.

The present pastor is closing his fourth year. Perfect harmony and good fellowship has reigned throughout his pastorate. There have been some notable revival work in the course of his time here. Nothing much in that way has happened this year so far. But the indications are now all favorable for a gracious revival before the year closes.

It was of "church improvements" more particularly that I was to write. These are always signs of prosperity in a given way, and prophecies of good things in the time to come. The old house has been changed as to position, remodeled, and added to and thoroughly finished inside and out. It will seat between four and five hundred people. It is a beautiful room, acoustics perfect, well ventilated, and comfortable. The inside is finished in wainscoting and paper; walls and ceiling, color subdued and softened. It has been newly furnished. The new pews are of hard wood patent seats—if not elegant, comfortable—ministering to sleep without snoring. We have beautiful, not comfortable (who ever saw one such?), pulpit chairs. The builders of all such have a patent on the uncomfortable. I suppose it was not intended that the occupants should sleep during service; or if so, the modern—and ancient, too, for that matter—pulpit chairs thwart the design. They remind one of a funeral; or worse, of a solemn-faced formal worshiper in a spiritual straight-jacket. But, for all this, you will not find a pulpit in all the land ahead of ours in pulpit chairs. The Brussels on the floor, the beautiful altar table, the hand-painted pulpit drapery, the fine communton set, the elegant organ, the new lamps, etc., thoroughly and handsomely furnishes this clean, blessed place of worship. Paint and brush of recent date finishes the outside, and makes it clean-looking and inviting. The last work is a substantial new fence enclosing the entire premises. The outside lines are finished in extra style. The grounds are to be graded and planted in shade trees and shrubbery. The parsonage is in good condition, and will be furnished in all things needful, and will be ready for the new preacher.

A friend, passing one day, was overheard to say to one of our live stewards, who was finishing up the fencing: "You Lake Charles Methodists must be written up in the ADVOCATE, and make some good preacher hungry to come to Lake Charles."

"Yes," replied the brother, "he will be apt to be hungry before he gets away."

So all big preachers—all ambitious for big places, if any such there be—may look out.

The presiding elder congratulated the brethren, largely and officially, on their good deeds. In all such work there is always some one leading—to whom all look, upon whose shoulders rests the load, whose hand is always on the work. We have such an one in Bro. O. M. Marsh. He has stood in this place, at the head of this line, in the Sunday-school and in all church work in Lake Charles, for nearly a score of years. His example, his work, his influence for good, his care of the preacher, his love for God and the church, is one of the big factors in Lake Charles Methodism. In many of these things he is without a peer. God bless him and prolong his life! He has noble helpers.

If I had space, I could say some of the best of things for Lake Charles Methodist womanhood—especially of our young women; but must close. What was intended as a bare mention has grown into a long letter.

One thing more: The pastor had a birthday on the fifth—last Tuesday. I suppose all pastors have such a day, if not the same day. But all do not have a birthday party—a "surprise party." Ours had the birthday and the party, too. It was given at the church. You will hear fully about it from a "committee of one"—a good Baptist sister—who was appointed by a unanimous vote to write you about it. This party was a grand affair of its kind. The character of the friends forming it, the bright faces and happy hearts, the big speech of Bro. Wells, the big failure of the reply; the spirit of prayer, of song, of praise; the delightful social intercourse; the substantial, unique, material things, and all together made it a big thing.

But you will hear from me specially, and maybe something more from Lake Charles Methodism, before the year is out. Respectfully,

COMMITTEE OF ONE.

PERCY'S CREEK, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

On last Tuesday night, at this place (Percy's Creek station, Woodville district, Mississippi Conference) I closed a very interesting meeting of eleven days' continuance. From beginning to end the presence and power of God was manifested in the conviction and conversion of souls. In this revival there was but little outward demonstration visible; but a deep spiritual solemnity overshadowed the congregations and seemed to permeate all hearts. It was frequently remarked by the brethren, they never saw so little excitement in a meeting with so many conversions. Rev. F. M. Featherstun, D. D., of Woodville, and Rev. H. Walter Featherstun, president of Edward McGehee College for Girls, came to my assistance and preached with an unction and zeal that will long be remembered by the good people of my charge.

This revival was not conducted on the cranky and doubtful methods that are so frequently resorted to by the imitators of modern evangelists, whose peculiar slang and vulgarisms have been so highly offensive to the educated consciences of some of our best Christian men and women. The preaching throughout was simple, plain and powerful, and sinners were made to feel and tremble under the influence of the gospel thus preached.

I sincerely pray and hope that the time will soon come when the cranky imitators of these evangelists will realize that the power and sweet spirit of the gospel of the Son of God does not consist in these pretexts for saving souls, but in imitating him from whose chaste lips no such communications ever proceeded.

Our meeting was a grand success, and the difficulties overcome during the year evidence the power of God in the use of means and instrumentalities. During the meeting there were eight accessions to our membership and thirty-three bright conversions, and the church wonderfully aroused and revived.

The Woodville district, over which Bro. C. McDonald presides, is moving forward aggressively and progressively in all the interests and enterprises of the church. The financial and spiritual aspects of the district are being developed under his faithful administration, and he has grown each year in favor with the preachers and people of each charge in his district. He is faithful in all his duties, and has the interests of the church at heart.

Rev. H. Walter Featherstun will, on the third of September, next, open the Edward McGehee College for Girls, at Woodville, Miss., which promises to be a first-class institution for the education of young ladies. With an experience of six successful years as an educator and principal of Kavanaugh College, we are prepared to say that Bro. Featherstun and faithful corps of teachers will spare no pains or labor to make Edward McGehee a first-class institution of learning for the girls of Mississippi and Louisiana.

W. W. HURST.

CAMPBELLSVILLE, MISS.

I rejoice to be able to send forth from Bethel Church good tidings. Bethel Church is a new church on my charge, near Nitta Yuma, Miss. This church was dedicated by Bro. Ira B. Robertson, Sunday, July 27. There was a large and an attentive congregation to hear Bro. Robertson. Many thanks to Bro. Robertson for his able spiritual help till Tuesday, at noon, when he was compelled to leave us to meet previous appointments.

Our meeting at Bethel Church lasted nine days; only eight accessions and three children baptized. But, thank God! nearly all the male members will pray in public when called upon. Brethren who never had led in prayer will not refuse to do their duty. While I was not able to meet the large congregation congregated Friday night, thank God they had a good meeting! I had a chill and fever Friday morning; I did not know when night came. I do not know how many conversions; but there were several. I learn that there will be others to join our church, and some are to join the Baptist Church. God only knows the result. I was so sorry I was sick the last of the meeting, and not able to do my duty. I am not well now. I think Bethel Church will be in the near future one of the best churches in the Delta region, as there are many yet to join, and those who are members are doing their duty. Some sickness; crops are fine. Pray for us.

J. C. ELLIS.

CHERRY HILL AND BROOKLYN STATION.

We give you a brief report of Cherry Hill and Brooklyn station. We have received twenty-seven into the church since Conference on this charge. Had a gracious revival at both appointments, and expect to continue the good work till December. Preacher's salary well up and all the assessments will be paid in full. We have some of "the salt of the earth" on this work. You will hear from us again before the year closes.

R. H. B. GLADNEY, P. C.

DUBLIN, Miss.

SATARTIA, MISS.

I have just closed two very successful meetings. The first at Fletcher's Chapel, in which there were about twenty-five conversions and sixteen additions to the church; the last at Mt. Olivet, which was also a meeting of great power. About twenty conversions and five additions to the church. In both of these meetings my cousin, Rev. J. O. Shanks, of Tahlequah, Ind. Ter. (grandson of Rev. James Shanks, late of the Mississippi Conference, and of precious memory), did most of the preaching in both meetings. He is a good, earnest, faithful preacher, and my people were completely captured by him.

I have been out to the Indian Territory recently myself, and it is, indeed, a fine country, rich in soil and mineral. They raise fine corn, wheat and cotton. Besides these are many coal, copper and lead mines. The occasion of my visit was the meeting of the Cherokee District Conference, which met at Tahlequah. There I met many of the "advance guards" of our beloved Methodism. Bishop Hendrix was with us, and showed, both in the chair and in the pulpit, that he was the master of assemblies. I was, indeed, surprised to find so many "pale faces" out there. Indeed, there are, I am told, in many places ten white to one Indian. I was, indeed, surprised at the great interest they take in education. They have got a better system of education than we have in the great State of Mississippi, and it is not kept up by the United States government, either. They have ten months free school all over the Cherokee Nation, and they have a male and female seminary at Tahlequah. The building of each, with the fixtures, cost about $80,000; and they are free, except $8 per month board.

They have just completed a fine brick Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in Tahlequah, which was dedicated by Bishop Hendrix while I was there, and not a cent of help did they get from the Board of Church Extension. Most of the money was contributed by the Indians.

Nearly all the Indians are learning the English language; all their schools are taught in English, and nearly all the preaching is done in English.

Bro. Shanks and I protracted the meeting for more than a week after adjournment of the District Conference, which resulted in several conversions and seven additions to the church.

J. J. LOVETT.

HATTIESBURG CIRCUIT.

Glad to report that circuit is improving. Some bright conversions and some advancement among the members. We have built a parsonage worth eight hundred dollars. The presiding elder has greatly improved the district parsonage, and the two houses, being side by side, make it appear that the Methodists are here to stay. The ladies here deserve great credit for the interest taken in the Master's cause. This district is developing very fast, as was shown at our District Conference. Let me say, in reference to our District Conference, that it was one of the best that I have ever witnessed. It was a revival from beginning to end. It has always been astonishing to me that a dozen preachers could spend three or four days together without a revival. Bro. Adams continued the meeting for several days, which resulted in a sweeping revival.

Delegates to Annual Conference: T. S. Ford, J. S. Otis, T. C. Simmons and R. J. Collins. Alternates: Rev. H. J. Harris, C. H. Moore. Trustees Seashore Camp Ground: T. S. Ford, J. P. Carter, E. J. Bowers and E. F. Griffin.

NEW HOPE.

Our meeting at New Hope, Benton circuit, near Donaldsonville, closed on the seventh instant. We run it eight days. The good Lord was with us from the first in convicting, converting and reclaiming power. Congregations large; house full to overflowing at times. The best of order prevailed throughout. Bros. Holloman, Regan and B. W. Lewis were with us part of the time, doing good work, and endeared themselves to our people. We are especially indebted to Bro. Holloman for fine good, sweet sermons, which were delivered with telling effect. Nineteen young people joined the church, and seemed to be in real earnest. Fifty persons were added to the church at this place last year.

H. P. LEWIS.

DYKESVILLE, LA.

We are now in the midst of a glorious meeting at White Hall. Forty or fifty souls at the altar to-day. The feeling ran so high in the prayer meeting that we had no preaching to-day. God is wonderfully blessing this circuit. I closed a powerful meeting at Colquit, Thursday; some conversions, some accessions, and the church stirred to its greatest depth.

HARRY W. MAY.

COFFEEVILLE CIRCUIT.

The Lord is reviving his work on Coffeeville circuit. Have held two meetings, resulting in about forty conversions and thirty-nine accessions. Three more meetings to hold. We are praying for and expecting glorious results.

THIBODEAUX MISSION.

Our work at Thibodeaux has not been in vain. We have never had such a hold on that town and community as we have at this time. We were fortunate in getting Bro. Henry there last year. He laid the foundation upon which we are building this year. He sowed the seeds in good ground, and they are bringing forth an "hundredfold." The Holy Spirit has sanctioned and given efficacy to the work from the beginning. No doubt, he prompted Bros. Grant, Thompson and others to give so liberally when an appeal was made to send a missionary there.

Our last Conference failed to return Bro. Henry, and left the work without a preacher, though the people had sent a petition, with many names, asking for his return. After Conference we held a "caucus." It was decided by the caucus (Bro. Henry and the writer) that Bro. Henry would preach there once a week until we could get a man. We failed to secure the services of a preacher until about six weeks ago, when we persuaded Bro. J. W. Rowlett—a graduate of Vanderbilt University—to take charge of the mission. Bro. Rowlett has taken hold with great zeal and unfailing faith. A complete victory for Methodism and the cause of Christ is now in sight if we hold Bro. Rowlett there one year. Through his preaching a glorious and abundant effusion of the Divine Spirit will rest on that people. The Holy Spirit is now giving energy and unction to the preaching of the "glorious gospel of Christ," putting to silence the bigotry of the superstitious and ignorant, and causing the most skeptical to realize and confess "that of a truth God is with us." From Sabbath to Sabbath the gospel is given to the people with the power of the Holy Spirit, resulting in a number of conversions.

This missionary movement is full of power and blessing to that place, which the church will feel, provided we can hold our position for a few months. What do we need? Answer: Money! Who will give it? Answer: I think the same men who subscribed last year will do so again. Brethren, your money was not thrown away; salvation of many souls is the result. This is a glorious compensation. Help us again, and you will never have to do any more for Thibodeaux. Write me at Plaquemine, or Bro. Henry, at Morgan City.

Obituaries.

DOLLAR—JESSE LEE DOLLAR, infant son of Rev. W. A. Dollar, of the North Mississippi Conference, was born at Weir's, Miss., August 11, 1889, and died at the same place, August 4, 1890, at ten o'clock P. M., and was laid to rest in the cemetery at Sallis, Miss., August 6. Kind friends followed their former pastor to the church and grave, and mingled their tears with those of the bereaved. Rev. W. M. Bass preached a very appropriate sermon from, "Comfort ye my people." The parents gave no demonstration of wretched despair, but calm resignation of hope and trust. During the funeral the mother sat quiet, with occasionally a deep sigh or an unbidden tear. The father listened to the sermon with no demonstration except a hearty Amen! as the preacher would round a period or speak of the promises to the children of God; and as we walked to the grave, he said": Oh, how this hurts!" Yes, indeed, it does hurt; but they sorrow not as those who have no hope. I thought: Yes, with two in the graveyard at Sallis, and one in the Mississippi bottom; and who knows where the others will be buried? But, blessed be his name, there is coming a glad day to the finally faithful; and born full of gladness will that day be when heaven sings "Harvest Home" to the itinerant preacher, when he shall go, carrying his sheaves with him; and scattered loved ones are gathered to the reunion in the home above, and the great company of the redeemed who have gone up through great tribulation shall sing: "To him that loved us and gave himself for us, to him be glory, honor, dominion and power for ever and ever."

J. H. SMITH.

EATON—OLIVIA C. EATON was born August 29, 1853; married to J. S. Eaton, February 11, 1874; died, July 28, 1890. She was an exemplary member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and a devoted Christian.

In her conversations with the family and relatives some weeks before her death, she told them that she must die, but that the way was clear, and a merciful Savior awaited to receive her. Her desire to live was to raise her children under Christian influences, so that they would be prepared, as she was, to meet death in triumphant faith. She advised her husband to join the church—the one of his choice, as it made no difference with her so he led a Christian life, and urged upon him the necessity of securing to himself the confidence of the children, now to be left entirely to his care, admonishing him to incline their young minds in the way of salvation.

Although she seemed willing at all times to comply with the advice of the physician, and take any medicine that might prolong her life, nevertheless after giving this last advice to her husband and children, she cheerfully submitted to the summons of death.

Her death is a sad bereavement to the neighborhood and church, but more especially to the relatives and family of deceased. May a kind and merciful heavenly Father bless and comfort them and enable them to bear it!

RAGAN—HARRIET G. ESTES, widow of Judge A. Vanhook Ragan (deceased), was born in Halifax county, Va., November 2, 1825, and departed this life at Montgomery, La., June 25, 1890. Sister Ragan was raised near Nashville, Tenn., having removed to that State when seven years of age. At the age of thirteen she was happily converted to God and loved to tell of the wonderful change so early in life all through her earthly pilgrimage. She often spoke of the now sainted Pitts, McFerrin, Hughes, and others, who won hundreds of souls to Christ, and under whose ministry her own soul often rejoiced in a Savior's love. I was her pastor for four years just after the war, and found her a sweet-spirited Christian woman. After an absence of sixteen years I found her still faithful in the Master's service. She always greeted her pastor with a pleasant smile, and the visit, which closed with an humble prayer, seemed beneficial to all who were present.

Her faithful husband with whom she lived happily for nearly forty years preceded her about six months to their eternal home. I knew when her husband passed away that Sister Ragan would soon follow. She was unconscious during her last illness; but from her every-day Christian life for more than fifty years her children and friends know where to find her.

JONES—Died, at the residence of his sister, Mrs. Josephine Hicks, near Hermanville, Claiborne county, Miss., July 22, 1890, HUGH BYRD W. JONES, a native of Copiah county, Miss., aged thirty-one years, five months and seven days.

Bro. Jones was born in Copiah county, Miss., February 15, 1859, and was the only son of Wm. and Mary A. Jones. He united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in October, 1887, being received at Wesley Chapel, Natchez, by Rev. N. B. Harmon.

Contracting typhoid fever, his constitution never strong, he knew this sickness was the beginning of the end; but the way was not dark nor lonely, for Christ was with him, and he knew in whom he believed. The end came without a struggle, and angels bore his spirit to that land where the weary are at rest. Besides a young wife and little babe, he leaves an aged mother and five married sisters and a host of relatives to mourn his absence. But not for long, as we will soon be at rest over there—meet to part no more forever.

Letter from Monteagle.

The Monteagle Assembly is at mid-season. Looking backward, we have a vista of four privileged weeks. We have traveled through the wonderland of the Alps, and among the storied places of England and Italy without fatigue or expense; we have sat morning after morning at the feet of that rare and reverent Bible teacher, Dr. Carlisle, making new and real acquaintance with each of the twelve apostles in turn, and discerning, as never before, rich meanings in all that our Lord began both to do and teach as recorded by Luke; we have been moved to laughter and to tears by the voices of music and eloquence; we have felt our thoughts expand while listening to profound discussions of the great social, moral and scientific questions of the day; we have been delighted with the scintillations of wit and wisdom at the round-table gatherings under Chautauquan auspices; we have roamed along the mountain off-looks, and listened to the chanting of the winds among forest aisles, worshiped together in the great congregation and gathered for evening prayers as one family, exclaiming oftentimes in very fullness of heart:

"If God hath made this world so fair,
Where sin and death abound,
How beautiful, beyond compare,
Must paradise be found!"

Four perfect weeks have they been

"Of showers and sunny weather,
Of wild-wood tryst together."

And the glad feast is but half done.

The Summer Schools are unusually well patronized and helpful. For the first time in the history of this enterprise they are fully self-sustaining, and never before has the teaching area represented been so large. A great proportion of the learners being themselves teachers from public and private schools all over the country, and the aggregate benefit thus transmitted into the general circulation is something pleasant to contemplate.

Without pausing to speak of the individual men and women composing the faculty of the Monteagle Summer Schools, I wish to make special note of Chancellor W. H. Payne, the head and director of all, as an acquisition to the educational forces of the South. Dr. Payne is fifty-four years of age, though not looking more than forty-five, of average size and stature, dark complexion and reticent manner, with soft, full beard, short cropped, and a scholarly stoop in his shoulders. In his own study, wearing his skull cap and study gown, he looks an absorbed student; but give him a lecture-room filled with earnest teachers as his pupils, with a blackboard and a bit of chalk in his nervous fingers; note his kindling eye, his magnetic sympathy, crisp questionings and clear definitions—there you have a teacher of teachers, a master of the theory and practice of pedagogics. He has, indeed, the honor of being the first and only occupant (for over eight years) of the first chair of pedagogy established in this country—that of Ann Arbor University, Michigan. Called from a remarkably successful work there to the presidency of the Peabody Normal College, at Nashville, he has in three years' time doubled the attendance and given strong impulse to the upward trend of professional teacher-training in our Southern States. The one hundred and fourteen scholarships of $200 each provided for by the Peabody Board bring under his hand the flower of youth and intellect and purpose in this and neighboring States, and he is a master equal to the grand opportunity. Himself a product up to the age of seventeen of the common schools of New York, and in the earlier years of his professional career a superintendent of public schools in Michigan—a State remarkable for its thoroughly organized and complete system of public instruction—he regards the public school as the hope of the nation, the basal rock on which all higher grades of learning must rest, and is in full and active sympathy with the common-school teacher. His accession to the head of the Monteagle Summer Schools brings him immediately in touch with the rank and file as well as with the leaders in our Southern educational army, everyone of whom will descend from this mount of observation better equipped in methods and material, with a finer enthusiasm and new sense of the dignity and demands of his vocation.

Dr. Payne's course of fifteen free lectures on pedagogics ended this week. To those hearing him his playful announcement of his text at the close was unnecessary, for they had already found it out: "Teaching is the noblest of professions; but the sorriest of trades."

On strictly Chautauquan lines, good progress has been made. The last round-table conversazione was devoted to the geology and topography of the great Cumberland plateau, led by Dr. Lyon, of Presbyterian University, at Clarksville, Tenn., a topic of immediate and popular interest.

"Recognition Day," Friday, August 1, was observed with usual ceremonies, after which the class poem for 1890 was read by Miss Sally Battaile, of Yazoo City, Miss.; Bishop Fitzgerald delivering the annual address—an inspiring one—and Dr. Carlisle conferring the diplomas.

Texans here, of whom there is a large and choice selection, held a conference on the fifth instant, the outcome of which was a resolution to proceed at once to the erection of a Texas teachers' home, to cost $4,000 to $5,000, and fitted up for all domestic needs. The plan contemplates a structure surpassing any of the "teachers' homes" already here. Nashville, Memphis, Mississippi and Alabama, even Georgia will be distanced by the Lone Star State unless she revises and enlarges her present plan.

The lecture course for week just closing has been rich and varied. Dr. DeWitt, of Nashville, gave us a delightful "Hour with the Poets," Monday night, and Dr. W. C. Black, of Jackson, Miss., who had shared with him in ministering to the people of spiritual things on the Sabbath, discussed "Geology and Religion," the following evening.

At 11 A. M., Wednesday, Prof. J. I. D. Hinds, of Cumberland University, lectured to a charmed audience on "How? What? and Why?"—an inquiry into the origin and causes of things which those acquainted with the speaker will know was both biblical and scientific.

Dr. Henson, of Chicago, made the hit of the week in his two lectures—that on "Fools," bringing to bear all his artillery of argument, humor and appeal on the drinking fool, the rich fool, the solemn fool, the simpering fool, the part-his-hair-in-the-middle fool, and so on, not forgetting a keen rap at national and class crazes; and that on "Our Bosses," discussing the woman question in a serio-comic view that, while exceedingly witty and amusing, was strictly common-sense and orthodox.

Prof. French, of Chicago Art Institute, gave three enjoyable and instructive lectures on Art, illustrating the text rapidly and effectively with chalk and blackboard; so ending the week's feast—except the wine, which came last, at the usual grand concert, Saturday night.

Next week begins, of course, with Sabbath worship in the amphitheatre, with sermons by Rev. Dr. Burkhead, of Montgomery, Ala. Monday we will have a matinee concert by Lohman's Orchestra—one of the finest in the United States—and an old folks' "Singing School" at night. Tuesday, Dr. Lofton, of Nashville, begins his morning talks, illustrated—"The Big and Little End of Life's Horn," "On the Fence," etc.; and Prof. DeMotte, a series of evening lectures, also illustrated, on scientific themes—"Steam," "Light," etc., and yet we expect to find time to digest "Spiritual Spoonment," by Hon. J. Soule Smith, of Lexington, Ky.; attend general sociable of the 1,000 guests here, and join enthusiastically in the good times of Children's Day, the fifteenth instant, when ex-President Reppard, a great Sunday-school worker, will come to the front to welcome train-loads of Sunday-school children from far and near and organize a day's exercises to delight all their young souls and bodies.

The annual business meeting of members of this Assembly developed a prosperous state of affairs generally. Major R. W. Millsaps, of Jackson, Miss., was unanimously re-elected president of the Assembly—a responsibility he did not covet, but a trust which, as a good and faithful servant, he could not refuse.

The air is so exhilarating, the nights so cool and restful, and the social environment so free and cordial that exercise of body and mind is here a continual joy rather than a fatigue.

To the Friends of Ministerial Education.

Dear Friends and Brethren: At an informal meeting of the Ministerial Educational Aid Association of the Mississippi Conference, held a few days ago, the secretary and president were requested to prepare and publish a short statement of our work and present needs, with the hope and earnest prayer that God might move upon the hearts of his people to help us in our grand work.

Omitting details, this association is a band of ministers and laymen united for the purpose of assisting young men preparing for the ministry secure a literary and theological education. The church of to-day demands an educated ministry. In so doing she does well, and we must answer to the call. Many young men who feel called of God to preach the unsearchable riches of his gospel, are not able, financially, to equip themselves for their life-work, and we give to them, as far as lies in our power, the needed help. The funds of this association are raised by each member giving his or her note for a specified sum, payable in annual installments. These notes do not bear interest and are not collectable at the death of the signer.

Before a young man can receive aid from this fund, we require that he have a license to preach, and that he forward to the secretary a recommendation from the Quarterly Conference of which he is a member. His name is then, and not till then, passed upon by the association, at its annual meeting, or by the Board of Managers in the interim.

We had last year at Centenary College, Jackson, La., four young ministers, requiring the expenditure of forty dollars per month. One of these graduated, and will pursue his studies in the Theological Department, Vanderbilt University, next year. In addition to the three remaining young men, there are now on file in the secretary's hands five applications, with notification of more to follow. These are all worthy young men, with promise of usefulness in the ministry, if we can give them the right start. The last three or four years have found as many applicants as in all the years preceding, and to-day we have at school, and applying for aid, nearly one-half as many as the association has helped in nearly twenty years. We need this year for our work fully one thousand dollars, and not more than half that amount is in sight. Will not the sympathizers of Christian education come to our relief?

That all who will feel inclined to lend a helping hand may be assured of the proper use of their donation, we give a list of the officers for the present year: Rev. A. F. Watkins, Jackson, Miss., president; Major R. W. Millsaps, Jackson, Miss., 1st vice-president; Rev. John A. Ellis, Vicksburg, Miss., 2nd vice-president; Rev. B. F. Lewis, Jackson, Miss., secretary; Rev. C. G. Andrews, D. D., Meridian, Miss., treasurer; T. B. Holloman, Canton, Miss., and Rev. W. B. Lewis, Crystal Springs, Miss., managers. These seven constitute the Executive Committee. Any contributions our friends feel willing to make or anyone wishing notes should communicate with the secretary, West Capital St., Jackson, Miss.

Letter from Mexico.

A great sorrow has come upon our brother and co-laborer in the Central Mexican Mission—the Rev. D. F. Watkins. A little more than a year ago he asked and obtained from the Board of Missions a leave of absence to return to Wales and visit his father, who was aged and infirm, and desired to see the face of his son once more before he went hence. But just as he had all things in readiness for the journey, his family physician informed him that a change of climate was an absolute necessity for Miss Lizzie, his only child. This was a great and unexpected expense, and more than the missionary could afford and pay his own way on so long and expensive a journey. He, therefore, discharged the first duty, with the hope that it might be the will of a merciful Providence that the way would open to meet the other. But to-day the sad news reached him that his father was dead. Such an experience, under the most favorable circumstances, would be hard to bear; but to be deprived of Christian sympathy, and the loving words and mingled tears of wife and daughter, make it doubly so to him. The brethren at home will not fail nor cease to offer prayers to "our Father" for the full consolations of the abiding presence of the Holy Spirit with him in this deep affliction.

Yours truly, J. M. Weems.

Dyspepsia

Makes many lives miserable, and often leads to self destruction. Distress after eating, sick headache, heartburn, sour stomach, mental depression, etc., are caused by this very common and increasing disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla tones the stomach, creates an appetite, promotes healthy digestion, relieves sick headache, clears the mind, and cures the most obstinate cases of dyspepsia. Read the following:

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. In an hour after eating I would experience a faintness or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. Hood's Sarsaparilla did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced. It relieved me of that faint, tired, all-gone feeling. I have felt so much better since I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, that I am happy to recommend it." G. A. Page, Watertown, Mass.

Wonders

Are wrought by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor in restoring gray hair to its original color, promoting a new growth, preventing the hair from falling, keeping it soft, silky, and abundant, and the scalp cool, healthy, and free from dandruff or humors. The universal testimony is that this preparation has no equal as a dressing, and is, therefore, indispensable to every well-furnished toilet.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for some time and it has worked wonders for me. I was troubled with dandruff and was rapidly becoming bald; but since using the Vigor my head is perfectly clear of dandruff, the hair has ceased coming out, and I now have a good growth, of the same color as when I was a young woman. I can heartily recommend any one suffering from dandruff or loss of hair to use Ayer's Hair Vigor as a dressing."—Mrs. Lydia O. Moody, East Pittston, Me.

"Some time ago my wife's hair began to come out quite freely.

Ayer's Hair Vigor

not only prevented my wife from becoming bald, but it also caused an entirely new growth of hair. I am ready to certify to this statement before a justice of the peace."—H. Huisebus, Lewisburgh, Iowa.

"Some years ago, after a severe attack of brain fever, my hair all came out. I used such preparations for restoring it as my physicians ordered, but failed to produce a growth of hair. I then tried, successively, several articles recommended by druggists, and all alike fell short of accomplishing the desired result. The last remedy I applied was Ayer's Hair Vigor, which brought a growth of hair in a few weeks. I think I used eight bottles in two years; more than was necessary as a restorative, but I liked it as a dressing, and have continued to use it for that purpose. I believe Ayer's Hair Vigor possesses virtues far above those of any similar preparation now on the market."—Vincent Jones, Richmond, Ind.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 21, 1890.

Personal and Otherwise.

When a church contributes more to sustain the choir than the missionary, what sort of a religion has it?

A presiding elder writes: "Your editorial, 'A Questionable Policy,' hits the nail on the head. Many thanks."

Bro. B. F. Phillips, of Black Hawk, Miss., carries the colors. He has sent this year 23 renewals and 60 new subscribers! That shows what can be done!

The most densely populated spot on earth is said to be in New York City. One square mile in that city contains 270,000 inhabitants, which is 420 to each acre. They are mostly Italians.

"The great want of Methodism is good-tempered tolerance of endless varieties of men and methods. We can not limit ourselves to one pattern of mind or teaching or agency."

The number of subscribers to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE as reported by the publisher, November 9, 1887, was 4,500; the number reported by the publisher to-day is 7,300! We are growing somewhat!

During the months of October and November the Methodist Episcopal Church will vote on the question of admitting women as lay delegates in the councils of the church. The preacher in charge is required to give public notice of such election twice during the thirty days prior to the election.

For a long time Meridian, Miss., has stood at the head of the list in our office in regard to the number of subscribers; but Vicksburg has "spurted ahead," and now bears the colors. What's the matter with Jackson, Natchez, Shreveport and Baton Rouge? Stir around, brothers, and win the colors from the historic city.

We call special attention to the action of the Board of Trustees of Millsaps College, appointing October 12 as "College Day." This is a good move, and should enlist the hearty co-operation of every pastor and member of the Methodist Church in Mississippi. We expect to see good results follow the keeping of that day in the interests of Christian education.

The business manager of this paper tenders his sincere thanks to Rev. R. J. Jones and Rev. N. B. Harmon, of Vicksburg, for their earnest and zealous aid in securing the one hundred and four new subscribers obtained there in four days' hard work; also to Rev. Dr. C. K. Marshall and family for their elegant hospitality during his week's stay in the charming city of Vicksburg.

The Chinese Sunday-school, of New Orleans, established ten years ago, has resulted in the conversion of over thirty Chinese, some of whom have gone back to China as missionaries at their own expense, and others have established Chinese Sunday-schools in the cities of this country, maintaining same at their own cost. What an opportunity for our church to utilize these schools for training native missionaries for China!

Mr. Wm. Reynolds, of Illinois, the noted Sunday-school worker, and member of the International Sunday-school Committee, was the life of the late Mississippi State Sunday-school Convention. It was also attended by Mrs. Rebecca Folkes, who had taught in a Sunday-school in Vicksburg for over fifty-five years. The Rev. E. G. Cook and Rev. Dr. C. K. Marshall, who have been interested in Sunday-school work in the States of Louisiana and Mississippi for nearly sixty years, attended almost every session of the convention, aiding by timely suggestions in making the discussions helpful and interesting.

On August 12, Bro. Edward Welch, postmaster of Pearl River Station, La., met with an accident that caused his death in New Orleans, August 15. He was coming to the train for the mail when a heifer was thrown by the locomotive from the track, striking Bro. Welch on his left temple, though he was seventy feet distant. He did not recover consciousness but once, when he said, "Hallelujah!" Bro. Welch was a consistent member of our church and was beloved by a large circle of relatives and friends. His bereaved widow and daughter, accompanied by Bro. Tally, left with the corpse on Saturday last, to meet eight sad children at Pearl River Station.

A True Yokefellow.

The first ministers of the gospel were in pairs, both those who were commissioned by the Lord of the harvest and those who were sent forth by the college of the apostles at Jerusalem. The seventy went forth two and two, and the twelve seem to have been organized in this duplicate form for emergencies, as James and John, and Simon and Andrew, and Thomas and Bartholomew. St. Paul had Barnabas first for a yokefellow, and later Silas, or Silvanus, which was the vernacular or Roman form. It is probably the latter whom he addresses in the epistle to the Philippians, calling him "true yokefellow," and there is something not only touching, but most pathetic in this endearing characterization of the one apostle by the other if we consider all the circumstances: as the fact that they had grown old in the gospel harness together; that they were now separated by long distance; and that the one was a prisoner in a heathen city offering a tribute to the fidelity of the other, who was filling a patrician's station in the church in a Christian metropolis. But it was here in Philippi where Silas was now a Christian bishop, and where a mighty harvest of souls had followed the conversion of the jailer, that Paul and Silas had been yoked together in such fashion to the gospel car that neither could ever fail to remember it as an incident of mighty import in their ministry, and that to the latest ages the name of neither could be mentioned without calling up Philippi and its historic "inner prison."

At midnight, when Paul and Silas were chained together, and their feet were made fast in the stocks, "as they prayed and sang praises to God," suddenly there was a great earthquake, which shook not only the jail, but the city, with such energy that the apostles were liberated with honor, and the gospel itself was suffered to go free and, perhaps, secured as many fruits from the great tree of heathendom in an incredibly short time, as at Pentecost. In close connection with this miracle at Philippi, affecting Paul and Silas as "true yokefellows," and worthy, indeed, to be mentioned in comparison with the irruption which tore the prison in sunder and shattered the manacles of the prisoners, was the earthquake which opened Lydia's heart and made her the first fruits of the gospel on the continent of Europe, and her home of affluence where Paul and Silas slept on down both before and after the prison incident—the harbinger of a welcome to their gospel successors as regal as that which Rome gave to her victorious consuls, and as wide as the world.

Then there was the street preaching to which ancient cities and customs were thoroughly adapted, including the testimony of Satan through his soothsaying dupes to the divinity of their mission, and many other incidents, perhaps, of a similar character which have not gone to record that, as precious memories, would naturally constrain the apostles when addressing each other to use such tender nomenclature. Here was affection exceeding that of the two princes of the house of Israel, and which no gloom of old age could obscure and no fires of persecution quench. That common bond of suffering, welded by such affection as the Savior had for John and, perhaps, for each of the disciples, no blow of earthly calamity could ever break. Silas had never deserted Paul as did the false brethren who forsook him in the Neronian inquisition, and as did John Mark and, presumably, also Barnabas at a critical time; he had never through default suffered the whole burden or the bulk of it to fall upon the faithful shoulders of his plodding mate; he "had not thrust him with side and shoulder" when the advantage was his; nor had he eaten up all the good pasture; but when Paul was safely out of the way in a Roman prison had sought him out very diligently through the good offices of Epathroditus, and "had ministered once and again to his necessities."

A sweet-smelling savor was Silas' gift to Paul when Paul was old and bereft and endungeoned in the far capital of heathendom; but more aromatic than the richest incense and more valued "than gold—yea, than much fine gold"—was the legacy of Silas' friendship. Never had the apostle's ministry been so fruitful as when Silas had shared it in the great European circuit, including the awakenings at Philippi, at Thessalonica, at Berea, at Corinth; and when he turned the eye of recollection upon those scenes it rested first and most fondly upon the form of brave, trustful, laborious Silas. When the fury of the mob fell upon him, brawny Silas was there, like another Ajax, inviting its lightning; when fierce persecutions, which, like a great inundation, nothing could quell, arose, faithful Silas was the companion of his night-time flight into darker regions of heathendom; when the apostle was urgently called away from the scene of his labors, and the cause was imperilled by his departure, it was trusty Silas who "abode there still;" at Athens he was disconsolate without Silas; and in horror of thick darkness which fell upon him at profligate Corinth he would not be comforted until Silas had risen upon his horizon with beams of affectionate counsel.

If Paul had grown lean as well as aged under the yoke, so had Silas; if Paul's back had been lacerated with the scourge, so had Silas'; if Paul's shoulder had been galled by the yoke, Silas' "withers were not unwrung;" if Paul had the marks of the goad upon his body, Silas could exhibit "honorable scars;" if Paul had hungered, Silas had endured many famines; and now of all the objects which the false world contains the eye of the great apostle pathetically seeks out Silas, and in a voice, broken by quavers, he salutes him with a title as honorable as that which Christ bestowed upon rugged Peter, in the appellation of "true yokefellow."

Nobody had enjoyed as fine opportunities for shirking, as the companion of the man who had the care of all the churches, and yet the apostle could not remember that he had ever felt an ounce of Silas' weight against the preternatural burden which they had been commissioned jointly to propel. Nobody ever had such an opportunity of enriching himself at the expense of his patron; but Silas' hands were clean, and he was ready at a moment's notice to render up the unincumbered estate. Perhaps the saddest affliction which could have fallen upon Paul in old age and infirmity was to be separated from the companion of his toils and sufferings; and if there was any poignancy of grief in Silas' closing days it must have been that his aged mate was afar and dying beyond the hope of rescue in an inhospitable and pastureless region.

Rome had many eloquent men like Cicero, and many great statesmen like Brutus, and many redoubtable warriors like Scipio and Manlius; but posterity will reverse the false judgment of the sentimentalists of another age and write that Silvanus, the true yokefellow of Paulus, the apostle to the Gentiles, was "the noblest Roman of them all."

"Observed duties maintain our credit, but secret duties maintain our life."

Letter from Little Rock.

Adam Smith was not far wrong when he defined man to be an animal who made bargains. No dog was ever known to exchange bones with another dog; to trade is the natural tendency of mankind. President White, of the Cornell University, says that this trading instinct is the special bane of our American life. He argues that every great nation has failed to be stable because of its development in one direction, and that the American people will likewise come to grief because they are developing the commercial idea to the exclusion of everything else.

Whether or not the principle be true as applied to national history, it is certainly true that we are a nation of tradesmen, and that one of the most serious difficulties in our church work is to get our people to see that the business and work of the church are as important as their personal affairs. That pastor is sure to succeed who can enlist his flock in sub-pastoral work, and make them feel that their work is of equal importance with his. I think it was Napoleon who used to say that he was the greatest commander who got the most work out of his men, and I am sure that he is the most successful pastor who enlists the whole church in active Christian work. The reflex influence of such work is as valuable as the actual objective results, and a working church makes a spiritual church. Our enjoyment in the truths and duties and privileges of the Christian life is made dependent, in the plan of God, on our making use of them for others. It is in our praying and trusting for some one else that we find the fullest gain of prayer and faith for ourselves. We get a new hold on every Bible promise or inspired word of cheer that we press on our needy fellows. It is only when our religious activities are in generous self-forgetfulness that we experience their highest personal benefits. "There is that scattereth and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty."

To some extent, we are trying here in Arkansas to develop our churches along this line, and our growth in this State is certainly very gratifying. For several weeks about one hundred conversions and accessions to the church have been reported weekly to the Arkansas Methodist, which indicates a very healthy increase. The District Conference season is about over, and all these meetings have been well attended and of much interest. While most of them were held by the presiding elders, Bishops Hendrix, Key and Galloway held several. Bishop Fitzgerald also paid our State a flying visit, week before last, dedicating our First Church, at Pine Bluff, and looking in on us at Little Rock for a few hours.

On the first of September, the various townships and counties of Arkansas are to vote on the question of local option. There are already 32 prohibition counties in the State, and of the remaining 43 there are only about 15 in which whisky is sold. Going west from Little Rock, and traveling all day to Van Buren, Plummersville is the only place on the Little Rock and Fort Smith road where any whisky can be bought. Going north on the Iron Mountain road, there are only two whisky towns until the Missouri line is reached, and going south on the same road, the thirsty traveler must go beyond Hope and within thirty miles of the Texas line before he can get a drink of liquor. So that on the temperance question, Arkansas is in advance of every other Southern State. A determined effort on the part of the temperance men of the State at the approaching election could banish it from every county except those in which Little Rock and Fort Smith are situated, and an organization is being effected to push the campaign. A union convention of all the temperance bodies of the State was held in Little Rock, this week, which, it is hoped, will result in great good.

The "original-package" business is giving some trouble in prohibition towns, but not so much as was anticipated. If all these towns would follow the example of Conway, where Hendrix College has been located, it would soon put an end to this outrage. One evening an "original-package house" was opened, and by next morning the grand jury, which was in session, had plastered the saloon keeper all over with indictments. He could not get a man in town to go on his bond nor a lawyer to take his case. Before night he began to plead for mercy, and agreed, if he would be given bail, to ship all his whisky out of the town. Some of the best prohibitionists in the community went on his bond, and so his case was disposed of. A few evenings later, on the call of the mayor, a prohibition mass meeting was held, attended by many former whisky men as well as the prohibitionists, at which resolutions were passed warning any and all parties that if the "original-package" business was again undertaken there, it would be suppressed at all hazards, by law if possible—by other means, if necessary.

Our preacher candidates for governor are stumping the State and making a vigorous canvass. What a pity it is that some men will so far forget their high calling as to leave the pulpit for the hustings! Perhaps, like John Randolph's politician, they have seven principles—five loaves and two fishes.

Like nearly every other city in the country, Little Rock is far from satisfied with the result of the census, though the showing is a very fair one, giving her a population of about 30,000. But our fair City of Roses is growing very fast, and our Southern Methodism is keeping pace with its advance. We have about a thousand members in the city—an increase of some two hundred this year. We are hoping and praying for a sweeping revival before the year closes.

M. B. CHAPMAN.

AUGUST 8, 1890.

"Millsaps College Day"—October 12, 1890.

At the last meeting of the Board of Trustees it was agreed that a day be designated for observance throughout the State in the interest of Christian education, and especially of Millsaps College. In pursuance thereof we appoint Sunday, October 12, 1890, as Millsaps College Day, and respectfully request that a sermon be preached on Christian education in each pastoral charge in the two Mississippi Conferences and collections be taken for the college endowment fund. We suggest also that appropriate exercises be held in each Sunday-school on that day, and that offerings be solicited. Let this day be observed without reference to past educational meetings, and, in addition to notes secured, give us a cash collection in each congregation. By this united and uniform effort the endowment fund will be largely increased, and every Methodist in Mississippi have an opportunity of contributing thereto.

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY,
Pres. Board of Trustees.

A. F. WATKINS,
Agent.

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 16, 1890.

The New York Christian Advocate shows its ignorance of the affairs of our church when it speaks of the appointment by our Bishops of Rev. W. M. Hayes, Commissioner of Education for Paine and Lane Institutes, as a "new and important step." "New!" That's good!

Call for Missionaries.

Since the annual meeting of the Board of Missions, in May, nine new missionaries have been accredited for the foreign field—five for China, one for Japan, and three for Brazil. Nearly all are on their way to the work. The others will sail in a few weeks.

We are seeking for three men for Mexico. The call is urgent. Bishop Haygood will need these when he visits the Mexican Conferences in October and November. Let our young preachers who are equipped for mission work consider this call. We still need for China a single man, and also a lady missionary qualified for important school work. One who can teach both instrumental and vocal music is desired. We need for Japan four men; also two ladies who are qualified as teachers, and who can give instruction in music.

I. G. JOHN,
Sec. B'd of Missions.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Aug. 14, 1890.

Notes from the Canvass.

Port Gibson, with a very small audience, on last Sunday (August 10), added $235 to the endowment fund of Millsaps College, and Fayette, on the following Wednesday night, subscribed nearly two hundred dollars. Neither of these collections represented the ability and liberality of these towns, and, doubtless, the amount will be largely increased.

Two or three pastors have reported collections taken this week, and since our last report nearly $1,800 have been added to the endowment. This includes Bishop Galloway's handsome collection at Topisaw.

A south Mississippi circuit rider, in his second year, subscribed $100 each for himself and his wife, and $50 each for his two bright baby-boys. One of his friends said he was "crazy on the subject of education." It would be well for Mississippi Methodism if that sort of mania should become epidemic.

A. F. WATKINS.

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. J. G. Cammack writes from Union, Miss., August 15: "We have just closed a very gracious revival here; 12 accessions and 16 infants baptized. The results of this meeting for good will be lasting. We have a new house to worship in this year. The people have worked hard, and the Lord has abundantly blessed them. We have built one other church this year, at Mt. Hebron. I never saw a church built in so little time, and with as much earnestness, in my life, to be as neatly and comfortably done. Our Conference collections are up, and twenty-five per cent. in advance of the assessment. To God be all the praise. Brethren, pray for us."

—Rev. A. W. Moore writes from Wilnshoro, La., August 15: "The much-talked-of and long-looked-for railroad has at last reached here. Track laying on the main track was completed yesterday, about 5 o'clock P. M., from Natchez, Miss., through this place to Rayville, La. In some places the switches, or side tracks, are yet to be laid; in others they are laid. The next thing in order is building depot-houses; but we now have communication with the world. No trouble to come to and get from our town now. Health of the country is good; cotton crop, pretty good; corn crop, light."

—Rev. H. Mellard writes us from Ponchatoula, La., August 16, as follows: "Held a meeting at James' Chapel, August 10 and 13, assisted by Bro. John Boyes. Results: Church greatly awakened and 13 accessions. Praise the Lord!"

Apropos of plainness in preaching, this paragraph from a contributor to the Mid-Continent is good:

It is not philosophy, but the gospel that the world needs. It is not the tread of pompous sentences, but the breathing of the Holy Spirit in words which the Holy Ghost teaches which we ought to seek in our preachers. I can easier understand how some foolish shepherd could put his hay too high for the lambs, than I can understand how the foolish lambs could stand and admire the shepherd and starve while they stared.

One-ninth of all merchants fail, but not one of God's servants need fail in Christ's business. Do not get discouraged. God has planned the work; we are simply executors of his plans. Christ is our Great Captain; his commands we must obey. Victory is sure. His last marching order was, "Go ye into all the world and teach all nations."

DON'T DO IT.

From the "Medical Review." "Upon the first symptoms of Liver Complaint the misguided sufferer applies blue pill, calomel and other mineral poisons, in the delusive hope of obtaining relief, whereas these powerful purgatives but aggravate the disease and debilitate the constitution. Dr. Tutt has had the courage to ignore this killing practice of the old school. His remedies, drawn from the vegetable kingdom, are almost miraculous in renovating the broken down body. The letters of cured patients in the Doctor's possession are a tribute of gratitude to his genius and skill which but few can exhibit. His Liver Pills are sent all over the world. Kentucky Correspondence.

BY JOSEPH B. COTTRELL, D. D.

"For me to live is Christ, and to die is gain." Would it not be interesting to hear a number of first-class men essay explanation of what Paul meant, precisely, by the above? It has come to me as text for next Sunday, growing in upon my mind, or, rather, it smites and vibrates my intellectual being, as if authoritative for the time, compelling me to search after the full significance it had in utterance of the faith of him who was, par excellence, the apostle of the New Dispensation. Paul was the only apostle chosen after the descent of the Holy Ghost. The eleven, who had been told by the Master to wait for the Spirit, that they might be infallibly guided, at the instance of Peter, who seems to have become impatient, undertook to settle so vital a matter, indirectly. "The lot is cast into the lap, but the disposing of it is of the Lord." Of this, which he reads in the Scripture, he predicates his proposition to determine who should take the place of the apostate. The lot fell on Matthias, "and he was numbered with the apostles." By whom? Evidently not by the Master; for of Matthias we have no farther mention. When Christ got ready he chose Paul, and Paul became the one of the twelve. As through Moses came revelation of former economy and policy, through Paul came that which is predicated of spiritual conditions, independently of "the law of commandments contained in ordinances."

In former contributions to our Advocates I have claimed that there is nothing modal, ordinal, ritualistic or sacramental that is of the essence of the Christian religion; that the kingdom is predicated wholly of spiritual conditions, such as each individual of us may fulfill for himself, independently of any manipulation by priestly or ministerial hands. In this is the affranchisement of each, so that we are "kings and priests" immediately "unto God," and not mediately through what some other mortal may do to us. What is ordinal, modal, ceremonial, then, is in respect of my faith what my clothes are to my person—no part of it whatever. "Do we make void the law" of ceremonial service and ordinal observance by such claim of freedom? "Nay, we establish it." According to this rendering any exigency may be met; words merely, in the absence of even a drop of water, may suffice in baptismal dedication; bread and wine are not essential to commemoration of the Eucharist. It is only according to this the church—the kingdom—is catholic. Its catholicity consists in, or is conditional upon, its universal adaptiveness. "Upon this rock I build my church: and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. Whatsoever thou bindest on earth shall be bound in heaven; whatsoever thou loosest on earth shall be loosed in heaven." So the paradox discovers itself in this "law of the Spirit of life," whereby "the mountain of the Lord's house is to be established above the mountains and over the hills." That authority which is canceled as legalistic becomes more surely regnant after a spiritual manner, operating such a membering and unifying as is described by the apostle so graphically in that picture of a body "compacted by that which every joint supplies, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, making increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love."

I've been led off into this disquisition at such length as to hinder from presenting what I purposed, regarding the co-incidence of Paul's life with Christ's, so that his living was Christ-living. The Master himself had declared identically this when he said to his disciples, "I am the vine, ye are the branches." And what he declared of the necessity of eating his flesh and drinking his blood, in order to spiritual nurture, is confluent with these and like Scriptures, which give us the cumulative tide that bears into deepest experiences of love-life, enabling us to apprehend what Paul meant in saying of it that it was "far more exceeding and abundantly above all we can ask or think?" Such as are at pains, reverently, studiously, deliberately and persistently, to come into conformity with such life will come into experience of it, and say with Paul, "For me to live is Christ." Such will radiate the one life had in common with the Lord, verifying unconsciously to themselves the truth of what Christ declared in respect of genuine discipleship: "Ye are the light of the world. Ye are the salt of the earth." What a wonderful fact is this organic, corporate union with him, "who of God is made unto us wisdom; that is, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption!" May we each, individually, become wise? Then are we, as God is, wisdom; and to become wisdom is to reach ultimate felicity.

As the smallest circle is comprehensive of every mathematical feature blent in the rainbow or in circle of the universe, even so is it in respect to this fact and experience of God-life—of Christ-life—into which we come through regenerating and sanctifying faith. And this faith is the most available to each human soul of all that may be appropriated; "in our mouths and in our hearts; the Word of faith"—in belief of which, in belief of whom—in confession of which, and of whom—we are saved from the guilt, power and pollution of sin. "To die is gain;" and to "die daily"—"rising upon stepping-stones of our dead selves"—is to have death subject unto us. Baptism into death is the order of development into life, as life evolves our being through exhaustless experiences of love and wonder.

FRANKLIN, Ky.

Woman's Missionary Society, North Mississippi Conference.

Editor New Orleans Advocate:

It is said that an "honest confession is good for the soul." Believing that it would relieve me from an embarrassing condition, I have determined to throw myself on the tender mercies of the ADVOCATE, and make an open confession of a mistake committed. At the recent session of the Woman's Missionary Society of the North Mississippi Conference I was given the privilege of "writing up" the meeting for the encouragement of those not present, and for the purpose of showing what great things God had wrought through this body for the past year. As I had been a contributor to the "great central" organ at Nashville during Dr. Fitzgerald's administration, I proposed sending the contribution to that organ, although Bro. Porter—our own "Gilderoy"—insisted that the NEW ORLEANS was our Conference organ, and should take precedence in Conference reports. Being rather "heady," however, as is characteristic of my sex, I carried my point, wrote what I considered an elegant article and sent it to the "great central." Behold the result! "Pride goeth before a fall." Week after week has passed by in ignominious silence, and the columns of the "grand central" are guiltless of any mention of the annual meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of the North Mississippi Conference. Either the correspondent was too diffusive or the "grand central" grows exclusive. I offer this as an apology to Bro. Porter, to the ladies of the Conference, who have so anxiously expected the promised notice, and to the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE. We learn by experience. I shall not commit a similar blunder again. "Home institutions first," shall be my motto hereafter.

The meeting was delightful in every way. Senatobia, though taken by surprise as to the entertaining of the Conference, rose to the occasion grandly. Train after train halted with visitors and delegates, and still the cry of the preacher was heard, "Always room for one more." The traditional omnibus has not half the expansive power of a Methodist town bent on entertaining an ecclesiastical body. We all thought we knew Bro. "Gilderoy" when we went there; but we found out before we left that his is a many-sided character, and that we only knew him as preacher and moralist, whereas his qualities as host, friend, counselor, executive business adviser, husband and father, all came out, making the grand sum total of a Christian gentleman—that highest type of a man. The body grows in size. Some say at this rate it will become unwieldy; but we trust that the economy of Methodism will take care of that. The president, Mrs. Hargrove, is young, aggressive, energetic and enthusiastic. She marshals her forces well, and her administration meets with the approval of the older heads. We missed the good face of our former president, Mrs. C. N. Terry, who was providentially detained at home. All of the Conference officers were re-elected. Mrs. Tom Strong, of Aberdeen, vice-president; Mrs. J. B. Stone, of Verona, corresponding secretary; Mrs. W. H. Wall, of Sardis, recording secretary; Miss Mollie Clark, of Pickens, treasurer, and Mrs. Margaret Sullivan, of Starkville, auditor. I could fill many pages with the efficiency of these officers; but, remembering the fate of my former article, I refrain. The district secretaries—answering, I believe, to the office of presiding elder among our brethren, and in most cases the wives of presiding elders—are a fine body of women, and their patient work and talent for organization is developing fine results.

New societies were reported by the score—not confined to towns and fashionable circles either, though they are by no means unrepresented; but from away back in the hills and backwoods they come from places where but for the genius of Methodism the Word had never been preached; and all receive a hearty welcome.

Decidedly the most encouraging feature of the entire session was the report from "Work among the juveniles." "Give me the children of the nation," said a famous Catholic prelate, "and I care not what else you keep from me." Our church has awakened to the importance of training these young minds, so that they may have proper conceptions of their duty in the great work of sending the gospel to heathen lands, and we see in the Woman's Missionary Society a vast training-school with well-equipped teachers and a curriculum which may be summed up in the command given to Christ's weeping disciples—"Go ye into all the world and preach my gospel to every creature." It was encouraging to hear the reports read by the lisping tongues of these little ones, telling of work performed and sacrifices made in the Master's service.

Contrary to the usual practice, the Conference opened on Saturday night. The annual sermon by Rev. S. M. Thames, of the Sardis district, was preached on Sunday morning, and was accompanied with great power. The address of welcome by Miss Annie Slaton was responded to by Mrs. Nannie Fant, of Holly Springs. Both breathed the spirit of Christian love and consecration. The president's address was a ringing call for more laborers in the vineyard of the Lord. The figures showing the work accomplished since the last annual meeting are in the hands of the secretary, Mrs. W. H. Wall, and, we doubt not, that ere this the Minutes are ready for publication. They show a zeal, an energy, a consecration to divine service that proves that the church is awake and alert.

Again asking pardon of the Conference for the delay which has caused this report to lose so much of its interest, I am, with sisterly feelings for all who love our Lord,

MARY V. DUVAL.

SARDIS, Miss., Aug. 11, 1890.

Corinth District Conference.

The Sunday-school Conference of the Corinth district, North Mississippi Conference, met in the Methodist Church at Ripley, Miss., July 25, Bishop Galloway in the chair. The day was spent discussing the subjects on the published programme. The speakers showed careful preparation, and the discussions were instructive and entertaining. The present year shows a decided advance in Sunday-school work. The best talent and consecrated piety are vigorously engaged in this branch of the service. More than seventy-five per cent. of the members of the Sunday-schools are members of the church.

On Friday morning Bishop Galloway called the District Conference to order. All the pastors in the district but one were present, and a large lay delegation. The reports of the pastors showed a decided improvement over last year on nearly all of the interests of the church. The vigorous, aggressive policy of our presiding elder, Rev. W. S. Lagrone, is already bearing fruit. The preachers are a consecrated band, and are working faithfully to bring up every charge. The promise is for better things than ever before.

The Conference sermon by Rev. T. L. Foster, was able and edifying. The Spirit of the Lord came down, and we had a genuine season of refreshing from his presence.

Dr. Morton was on hand and talked church extension to the delight of the Conference. Friday night Bishop Galloway and Rev. T. J. Newell, of Grenada Collegiate Institute, presented Millsaps College, and received $287 in subscriptions. On Saturday, Bishop Galloway delivered a masterly address on prohibition to an immense audience, and at night talked charmingly about Mexico. The Bishop, after a powerful sermon on Sunday morning, dedicated the beautiful new church at Ripley.

A committee was appointed to solicit funds to build a district parsonage. Our presiding elder will see that the work is done

B. F. McRae, R. B. Henderson, F. E. Ray and T. J. Kiningham were elected delegates to the Annual Conference; L. W. Worsham and N. Hamlin, alternates.

Next District Conference goes to Iuka. T. Y. RAMSEY, JR., Sec.

CORINTH, Miss., Aug 8.

Timothy Davis, postmaster at Pattersonville La., says: "Some years ago, while living in Algiers, I contracted a cough that everyone thought would cause my death. I was unable to sleep, had night-sweats, and soon became too weak to work. I had several doctors and tried many remedies, but with no improvement. An old friend hearing of my condition recommended Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar. It had cured him of a serious lung trouble, and he had great confidence in Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar. Before three bottles had been taken I was up and about, a well man. It saved my life. I always recommend it for consumption, asthma, bronchitis, any lung or throat trouble." One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as a 50c. bottle.

Our Young People.

Casilda Andrade.

I wish to write a notice for the ADVOCATE of this little Mexican girl, who died in this city yesterday morning. On a bright Sabbath morning in 1889, at the close of the sermon in San Andres Church, in the City of Mexico, a little Mexican girl, about ten years of age, came to the front and asked our pastor, the Rev. D. F. Watkins, if she might join the church. I sat just in front of her as she stood at the altar awaiting the answer that meant so much to her, and could see from the expression on the child's face and the earnestness of her large black eyes that the inspiration of this act was from the Holy Spirit. Bro. Watkins came down out of the pulpit and, placing his hand on her head, said to her, "Casilda, do you know what it is to be a Christian and to join the church?" She raised her eyes until they met his, and replied "Si, senor," which means, "Yes, sir." To still further test the child's firmness, he said to her: "Casilda, the Lord wishes people to join the church that he may use them for whatever work he finds them fitted for. He wanted me to come to Mexico and preach the gospel to you, that you might know Jesus, and I have left all my people—father, mother and all—and have come. Now, suppose he wanted you to leave Mexico and your father and mother, and go to Africa and tell the people there of Jesus, will you go?" This was a hard question for the poor child, and evidently presented difficulties to her mind and heart at the very door of the church she was not expecting. Everyone leaned forward to catch the answer that was soon to fall from lips that had just asked to be admitted into the fold of the Great Shepherd. She stood motionless for a few moments, with her eyes cast down, and then raised, and they looked as if they were melting into tears, and said in a low, calm, clear voice, "If the Lord wants me to go, I will go." There were, indeed, few dry eyes in the church after the answer came; for we all felt the force of the words, "And a little child shall lead them."

From that hour she was called "the little missionary girl." And never was life more fully consecrated to Christ. Consumption had taken deep hold upon her body; but the Holy Spirit had taken a firmer grip upon her gentle spirit. As long as she was able to go she was at her place in all the services in the church, and never missed a day from school. Even after she could no longer study she would come and take her place at her desk and spend the day in meditation. Ah! who can tell the blessed thoughts the Holy Spirit whispered into her heart as she sat and longed for the strength that would only be given in "our Father's house above."

At last the day came when Casilda could not rise from her bed, and she sent her mother to tell Miss Roldan of her condition.

Then, as with the wings of a bird, the faithful teacher who had led her to Christ, flew to her side, and, emptying her pocket-book, gave orders to do everything possible for her. The child replied: "Only God can cure me, and I think it is his will I should not get well." And it was so! When she died my wife and Sister Grimes wanted to buy a white dress in which to bury her, and the poor little children of the school said, "No, we must be allowed to do that; for she was so good, and we loved her so much." And little ones contributed of their scanty means and bought the dress and beautiful white flowers as a token of love for the little missionary, who so often opened school with prayer, and prayed so earnestly for them all. And still it is true—"And a little child shall lead them."

Amid tears and a deep-felt sorrow we laid the body of faithful little Casilda Andrade to rest, with a perfect confidence that we shall meet her again by and by. I feel a deep personal loss, and am anxiously looking for the one who shall take her place in church and school.

J. M. WEEMS.

MEXICO CITY, August 2, 1890.

NOW the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect in every good work, to do his will, working in you that which is well-pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ; to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen.—Hebrews xiii, 20, 21.

LESSON IX.—August 31.

ENTERING THE KINGDOM.

Luke xviii, 15 30.

GOLDEN TEXT—Whosever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child shall in no case enter therein.—Luke xviii, 17.

TIME.—A. D. 80.

PLACE.—This scene took place on our Lord's last journey to Jerusalem, and at his definite departure from Galilee.

15. They brought unto him also infants—Rather, their babes. It seems to have been a custom of Jewish mothers to carry their babes to eminent rabbis for their blessing; naturally, therefore, these mothers would bring their children and babes to Jesus.

16. Called them—St. Mark adds that Jesus was much displeased with the officious interference of the disciples who so little understood his tenderness. For of such is the kingdom of God—Because children are meek, humble, trustful, guileless, unsophisticated, pure. It was a lesson which Jesus often taught.

18. And a certain ruler asked him—Luke alone describes the inquirer as a "ruler." He was probably a member of the Sanhedrin. He was conspicuously rich, and of high and ardent character.

19. The questioner lightly applies the word "good" to one whom he as yet regards only as a human teacher; to an act which, it seemed to him, was in his own power to perform. What he needed, therefore, was to be taught to deepen and widen his thoughts of goodness until they rose to him in whom alone it was absolute and infinite, through fellowship with whom only could any teacher rightly be called good, and from whom alone could come the power to do any good thing.

20. Thou knowest the commandments—The questioner is answered as from his own point of view. If eternal life was to be won by doing, there was no need to come to a new teacher for a new precept. It was enough to keep the commandments, the great moral laws of God, as distinct from ordinances and traditions, with which every Israelite was familiar. Matthew says that our Lord first answered, "Keep the commandments," and when the young man asked, "What kind of commandments?" expecting, probably, some recondite points of casuistry—minute rules out of the oral law—our Lord, to his surprise, mentions the broadest and most obvious commandments of the Decalogue. Do not kill, etc.—Our Lord seems purposely to have mentioned only the plainest commandments of the second table, to show the young man that he had fallen short even of these in their true interpretation; much more of that love to God which is the epitome of the first table. Thus does Christ "send the proud to the law, and invite the humble to the gospel."

21. All these have I kept—There seems to have been an accent of extreme surprise in his reply. "You bid me not be a thief, adulterer, murderer! For whom do you take me? I am no criminal. These I kept since I was a child." And then he added, "What lack I yet!" (Matt. xix, 20.) Here again, the gospel is true to the letter in its picture of a Pharisaic rabbi. Ignorant as the young ruler was of his own spiritual state, his condition was not that of the self-satisfied Pharisee. The question implied a dissatisfaction with himself, a sense of incompleteness, a hungering and thirsting after a higher righteousness. And this accounts for the way in which our Lord dealt with him.

22. When Jesus heard these things, he said unto him—There was something in the young seeker after holiness which drew to him, in a measure altogether exceptional, the affection of the great Teacher. There was the fervor, the longing after a higher life, the personal trust, which made him a not unworthy object of the love of Jesus, and, therefore, he would not spare the discipline which the questioner needed, the test which, being such as he was, was required for the completeness of his life. Yet lackest thou one thing—The youth had asked for some great thing to do, and Jesus, by thus revealing to him his own self-deception, shows him that in spite of his spiritual pride and profession of magnanimity he is but trying to serve two masters. Sell all that thou hast—It would be altogether a mistake to see in this either an obligation binding on all seekers after eternal life, or even what has been called a "counsel of perfection," a precept laying down an indispensable condition for all who aim at its higher forms and powers. It was strictly a remedy for the special evil which hindered the young ruler's progress to perfection, applicable to others so far only as their cases are analogous. It would be idle to deny that there have been and are many such analogous types of character, and so far as any one is conscious of being under the power of wealth and its temptations so far there is a call to some act asserting his victory over those temptations, in the spirit, if not in the letter, of the command thus given. But it is, we must remember, the spirit, and not the letter, which is binding. Distribution to the poor was then almost the only form of charity. A wider range of action is presented by the organization of modern Christian societies, and the same sacrifice may be made in ways more productive of true and permanent good; in the foundation, that is, of schools or hospitals, in the erection of churches, in the maintenance of home or foreign missions. And, come, follow me—Here again St. Mark adds words that are pregnant with meaning, "Take up thy cross, and follow me." The seeker could not then understand all their significance. To the Teacher that cross was now coming day by day nearer, and he saw that each true disciple must be prepared to follow him in that path of suffering which was also the path of glory. Treasure in heaven—The "treasure" is the "eternal life" which the young ruler was seeking, the memory of good deeds, the character formed and perfected, the vision of the presence of God.

23. He was very sorrowful—St Matthew says, "He went away grieving;" St. Mark adds that "his brow grew gloomy and cloudy at the command." And thus at the time he made, through cowardice or meanness of mind, what Dante (Inf. 10, 27) calls "the great refusal;" and the poet sees his shade among the whirling throng of the useless and the facing-both-ways on the confines of the Inferno. Nothing, however, forbids us to hope that the words of Jesus, who "loved him," sank into his soul and brought him to a humbler and holier frame of mind. But meanwhile he lost for his earthly dross that eternal blessedness of self-sacrifice which Christ had offered him.

24. How hardly shall they that have riches—The Greek adverb is somewhat stronger than the colloquial meaning of the English, and may be rendered "with what trouble." The words imply not so much the mere difficulty as the painfulness of the process. Here, as elsewhere, the "kingdom of heaven" is not the state of happiness after death, but the spiritual life and the society of those in whom it is realized even upon earth. Into that kingdom those only can enter who become as little children, as in other things, so in their unconsciousness of the cares of wealth.

25. For a camel to go through a needle's eye—To soften the apparent harshness of this expression, some have conjectured kamilon, "a rope," and some have explained "the needle's eye" as the small side-gate for passengers (at the side of the large city gates), through which a camel might press its way if it were first unladen. But (1) the conjecture kamilon is wholly without authority. (2) The name of the "needle's eye" applied to small gates is probably a modern one which has actually originated from an attempt to soften this verse; at any rate there is no ancient trace of it. (3) The rabbinic parallels are decisive to prove that a camel is meant because the Babylonian Jews, using the same proverb, substitute "an elephant" for "a camel." (4) It is the object of the proverb to express human impossibility. In the human sphere—apart from the special grace of God—it would be certain that those who have riches would be led to trust in them, and so would fail to enter into the kingdom of God, which requires absolute humility, ungrudging liberality, and constant self-denial.

26. Who then can be saved.—There is an almost child-like naivete in the question thus asked. They, whether among their own people or strangers, had found the desire of wealth to be the universal passion. Even they themselves, when they had forsaken their earthly goods, had done so (as Peter's question showed but too plainly, Matt. xix, 27) as with a far-sighted calculation. They were counting on outward riches in the kingdom as well as outward glory. And now they heard what seemed to them a sweeping condemnation, excluding all who possessed, and by implication all who sought after, riches, from the kingdom.

27. And he said—We can surely conceive something of the expression of the look that accompanied the words. He had gazed thus on the ruler, and read his inner weakness. Now, in like manner, he reads that of the disciples; and the look, we believe, tells of wonder, sorrow, tenderness, anxiety. Those feelings utter themselves in the words that follow, partly in direct teaching, partly in symbolic promises, partly in the parable of Matt. xx, 1-16. Impossible with men...possible with God—Wealth, though bringing with it many temptations, may be so used, through God's grace, as to be a help, not a hinderance, in that deliverance from evil which is implied in the word "salvation."

28. Then Peter said—The feeling which dictated his remark is uncertain; perhaps it was a passing touch of self-congratulation; perhaps a plea for pity in the hard task of salvation. Lo, we have left all—The question betrayed the thoughts that had been working in the minds of the disciples, and of which, as was his wont, St. Peter made himself the spokesman. They had complied with their Master's commands. What were they to have as the special reward to which they were thus entitled? It is obvious that in asking for that reward they showed that they had complied with the letter only, not with the spirit of the command. They had not, in the true sense of the word, denied themselves, though they had forsaken the earthly calling and the comforts of their home; and they were dwelling on what they had done as in itself giving them a right to compensation.

30. Manifold more—Matthew and Mark say "a hundredfold," and Matthew adds that in the restoration of all things they shall sit on twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. Luke naturally omits the more purely Hebraic conceptions. Mark adds the two striking words, "with persecution." Of course, the promise of "the hundredfold" is neither literal nor quantitative, but qualitative and spiritual. In this present time—Not only in this present aeon, but at this very season.

LAW AND GRACE.—The law came by Moses; grace and truth came by Jesus Christ.

The law says, this do and thou shalt live; grace says, live and then thou shalt do.

The law says, pay me that thou owest; grace says, I frankly forgive thee all.

The law says, the wages of sin is death; grace says, the gift of God is eternal life.

The law says, the soul that sinneth it shall die; grace says, whosoever believeth in Jesus, though he were dead yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in him shall never die.

The law declares that as many as have sinned in the law shall be judged by the law; grace brings eternal peace to the troubled soul of every child of God, and proclaims God's truth in defiance of the accusation of the calumniator. "He that heareth my word and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into judgment (condemnation); but is passed out of death unto life." "By grace are ye saved."—Evangelical Recorder.

LOW PRICES

are the order of the day, and I propose to sell strictly reliable goods at a lower price than has ever before been quoted in the South. My store has long been known as "The Cheapest Furniture House in New Orleans," and this season I intend to add to the reputation it has gained in this respect. I only ask a chance to save you money.

HANDSOME BEDROOM SUITS.

A very extensive assortment of these goods in every style; and whether you wish to pay $40 for a Complete Suit of twelve pieces, or from that price anywhere up to $1,000, I can sell you what you require. I have these goods in Black Walnut, Natural and Dark Cherry, and Natural and Dark Mahogany, or in imitation of any of these woods, and can furnish the very latest, neatest and most artistic designs. I have also a large and carefully selected stock of Hall, Library, Dining-room and Kitchen Furniture; Reed, Rattan and Wicker Chairs, Rockers, Lounges and Cribs; Brackets, What-nots, Easels, Music Stands and Fancy Top Tables; Carpets, Carpet Strips, Matting, Shades, Curtains, Curtain Poles, and everything necessary to furnish a house completely throughout.

LARGE SALES.

I have a large city trade, and am shipping goods extensively to every Southern State. My country trade has increased very rapidly during the past year, and the facilities which my new store affords me for carrying a larger and better stock will enable me to still further extend it, and to give complete satisfaction to my customers.

Monteagle Assembly and Summer Schools.

EIGHTH ANNUAL SESSION, JULY 1 to AUGUST 25, 1890.

Assembly Park open to Summer Residents from June 1.

MONTEAGLE, TENN., widely known as the "Southern Chautauqua," is on a mountain plateau or spur of the lower Cumberlands, reached by mountain railway, one hour from Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis R. R. at Cowan, Tenn.

Rising 2,000 feet above the sea level, dry, pure air, no malaria, no mosquitos, magnificent scenery and abundance of pure spring water, it is the great natural sanitarium of the Southwest.

With 100 acres of picturesque, wooded heights enclosed; with improved water-works, sewerage, daily mails, telegraph, public buildings, and near 100 cottages; with the annual Assembly Platform and Summer Schools, affording a continual feast, it is a quiet "lodge in the wilderness," having all the world within call.

Parties desiring cottages for the summer should make early application.

For full particulars as to rates, advantages, etc., or any information desired, address,

F. H. PEEBLES, Gen'l M'g'r,
Monteagle, Tenn.

The Clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders.

The Episcopal Diocese, of New York, has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and the Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

At the second day's proceedings of the annual encampment of the G. A. R., in Boston, the reports of the staff officers showed the order nearly half a million strong, and still increasing.

On September 1 the law passed by the New York Legislature prohibiting boys under sixteen years of age from smoking in public places will go into effect.

The Texas Democratic Convention, in session at San Antonio, nominated James S. Hogg as candidate for governor.

Twenty-five thousand barrels of whisky were burned at a distillery in Louisville, Ky., on August 13. An estimate places the loss at $800,000.

Shippers throughout the United States have gained a victory over the railroads in securing a modification of the uniform bill of lading. The concession made by the carriers consists in striking out the words "not negotiable," against which the chief complaint was made.

The Anti-Lottery bill came before the National House of Representatives on August 16, and was passed without division. The measure will be brought up in the Senate whenever Senator Sawyer can get a time fixed for its consideration.

The Senate passed the River and Harbor bill without detention on the sixteenth instant. There was no objection to the appropriation of $3,500,000 for the Mississippi river. The bill will now go to the conference committees, which may be some time in passing it finally, as the House and Senate are not in harmony on certain appropriations.

The strike on the New York Central road was further complicated on August 16, as the switchmen on the Central and West Shore systems joined the Knights of Labor in their strike.

The Census Office has practically computed the amount of population of the United States. The count up to the sixteenth instant showed an aggregate of 62,695,955, and when the entire count is finished the population of the country will be about 64,000,000, an increase of about 30 per cent. during the decade.

A train on the Missouri Pacific, seven miles from Sedalia, was captured by bandits on August 17. The express car was entered, and the safe of the Pacific Express Company was robbed of its contents, amounting to about $75,000. The robbers escaped.

Armed Pinkerton men and the strikers on the New York Central railroad came into collision in Albany, on August 17. The Pinkerton police, who have the property of the railroad under their care, were stoned by the strikers and hoodlums, and retaliated by firing into their assailants, wounding several.

At the convention of the Democrats of the Fourth Congressional District at Alexandria, La., on August 18, Hon. Newton C. Blanchard was nominated for his sixth term as congressmen of the district.

FOREIGN.

The leader of the Mormon colony in Alberta has written to an Ottawa paper about the Mormons in the northwest. He ignores the question of polygamy altogether, but pleads that his people are peaceable and industrious, and that no obstacles should be thrown in the way of their efforts to develop the resources of the Canadian northwest.

The railway employees throughout Wales, without regard to class or occupation, have intimated through chosen representatives their willingness to submit to a weekly levy upon their wages for the support of the men on strike.

A plague of worms has extended over the forests in the north and west of Germany. The Bavarian forests have been devastated by the pests, and the government is paying the people a half-penny for every worm caught and killed.

A flood prevails in the Ganges. The river has overflowed its banks, and the surrounding country is inundated to an extent never before known. There has been great loss of life.

Horrible accounts are received of the slave labor traffic by British planters in the South Seas. The Presbyterian Mission Synod in the New Hebrides has passed a resolution to the effect that "Kanska labor traffic had, to a large extent, depopulated the New Hebrides and adjoining islands, upset family relations among the natives, and has been and is the cause of much sorrow, suffering and bloodshed." This slave trade is carried on under the protection of the British flag for the benefit of planters in Queenland and the Fiji Islands.

The McKinley Tariff bill still excites commercial circles in France. The recent consular conference held in Paris received complaints from nearly thirty Chambers of Commerce, pointing out the difficulty of complying with the provisions of the bill without almost destroying the trade.

It is said that the natives of East Africa, who are well armed with repeating rifles, are preparing to attack the German settlements. A lively reception will be given them.

The Emperor of Germany arrived in Russia on a visit, August 17. He was given a cordial reception at the landing, and great enthusiasm was manifested by immense crowds in the streets.

A cyclone and hailstorm in the department of Aube, France, has destroyed the harvested and growing crops. The loss is estimated at nearly 25,000,000 francs.

The British Parliament was prorogued on August 18.

Blood Poison

is very liable to follow contact of the hands or face with what is known as poison ivy, especially in hot weather or if the body is perspiring freely. The trouble may subside for a time, only to appear in aggravated form when opportunity offers. The great purifying powers of Hood's Sarsaparilla thoroughly eradicate every trace of poison from the blood, as the cures it has accomplished conclusively show. It also cures scrofula, salt rheum and all other affections arising from impure or poisoned blood.

THE ANGEL OF PATIENCE.

[A free paraphrase of the German.]

BY J. G. WHITTIER.

To weary hearts, to mourning homes,
God's meekest angel gently comes;
No power has he to banish pain
Or give us back our lost again:
And yet in tenderest love, our dear
And heavenly Father sends him here.

There's a quiet in that angel's glance,
There's rest in his still countenance!
He mocks no grief with idle cheer,
Nor wounds with words the mourner's ear,
But ills and woes he may not cure
He kindly trains us to endure.

Angel of patience! sent to calm
Our feverish brows with cooling palm;
To lay the storms of hope and fear,
And recognize life's smile and tear;
The throbs of wounded pride to still,
And make our own our Father's will?

O thou who mournest on thy way,
With longings for the close of day;
He walks with ther, that angel kind,
And gently whispers, "Be resigned;
Bear up, bear on, the end shall tell
The dear Lord ordereth all things well!"

Letter No. 10.

LONDON—SPURGEON—CANON FARRAR—DR. PARKER—ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL—THE WHISPERING GALLERY—ON TOP OF THE DOME.

My letter describing my visit to Melrose, Abbotsford and Kenilworth has been sent to the Nashville Advocate. While my trip to Stratford-on-Avon and to Oxford will reach you in letter form later on, or as the horizon enlarges and the objects and subjects multiply, I may withhold it altogether.

I arrived in London late on a Saturday afternoon. An arrival in London has always been and will always be an event in a human life, from the child of genius coming up as a poor, unknown lad to the metropolis to achieve fame, to the traveler with no ambitions intent, but who has heard all his life of the wonderful city. These poor lads were much in my thoughts as I drew near the great capital. How many went up and failed! Chatterton, the most brilliant of them all, died heart-broken or starved. Shakespeare, after staying awhile, went back to Stratford-on-Avon, the home of his boyhood. He thought he had failed. Some few succeeded and remained. But they all felt the thrill of entering London. As the poet laureate puts it, while afar off upon the fields or roads, they > "Saw in heaven the light of London

> Flaring like a dreary dawn."

Sunday morning dawned beautifully fair, and I sat down, so to speak, to a spiritual bill of fare not to be had every day, or in every place, by any manner of means. I listened to the three great lights of London at 11 A. M., 3 P. M., and 7 P. M.

At eleven I directed my steps to Mr. Spurgeon's church, which I found was twice as large as Dr. Beecher's. I was escorted into the prayer meeting, held in a room back of the pulpit, just before preaching. One of the brethren, in the midst of a long prayer, called the center of power in the church. I had only been in the room a short while, and felt he was mistaken. Each succeeding prayer convinced me more than ever that the brother was incorrect. The center of power always means a glorious death to circumlocutory and mechanical prayers. In a few minutes more I noticed that Mr. Spurgeon was not present. An half-hour later I was listening to him as he poured a rich and unctuous gospel into the hearts of five thousand people. I knew then that the center of power was in Spurgeon. A man has to pray himself, and to pray much, and to pray mightily and importunately, to have power over the hearts and consciences of men. Nothing else will bring it. Mr. Spurgeon commented on the chapter he read for thirty minutes, and after that preached forty minutes. But no one wearied. What a feast he gave us in Christ's first miracle in Cana of Galilee! Christ filled the discourse; was felt in every accent of that man, and looked out of every expression. The man drew the rich provisions for us as if, like Joseph, he had been filling the store-houses of his mind for years, and there was no stint nor limit. And yet in the midst of the feast I looked down and saw two of his prominent members asleep! I was comforted for myself and my brethren in the ministry. The great orator shows signs of physical feebleness. He moved stiffly in the pulpit, as if he feared the awakening of slumbering pain. But his square English face was lighted up with God's own love and peace, and his intellect was as lordly as ever. After the sermon he took up a special collection. An hundred wooden boxes were instantly passed down the aisles, and the rain of the pennies sounded like hail on the roof. I am convinced that the "collection" is an institution, universal and permanent.

At three P. M., I listened to Canon Farrar at Westminster Abbey. The subject was, "Saul Forsaken of God." It was a polished sermon, like the statues around him; but the power was not there. Perhaps it may be difficult to preach among marble statues, tombstones, and cold gray walls. To hear the organ in Westminster constitutes an experience. The strain rises up into the lofty ceiling, one hundred and thirty or forty feet above you, wanders away from you down the long nave, comes sweeping back up the transepts, gets lost among the many stone arches and pillars, and finally you hear it sobbing and dying among the tombs of dead kings and queens and warriors and statesmen and poets and preachers in the far distant parts of the building.

At seven P. M., I heard Dr. Joseph Parker, of the City Temple. He is a Congregationalist. He preached that night to fully four thousand people. Dr. Parker wears his hair rather long and flung back. He has a grand leonine face that, in the distance, reminds you of Dr. C. K. Marshall. His subject was, "The Boy Samuel," his ministering before the Lord, and yet "not yet knowing the Lord." He held up the words, "not yet," and drew forth thought after thought until the hearer was amazed at their number and appropriateness. Dr. Parker is fresh, original, forcible, and, at times, dramatic in tone and gesture.

My card secured me here, as elsewhere, immediate attention. Perhaps it was because of the "D. D." attached to the name. These lay brethren in England don't know how cheap a degree it is in America, and has got really to mean next to nothing. While in Mr. Spurgeon's church I happened, in speaking to one of the ushers, to say Doctor Spurgeon. He quickly replied, "He is not a doctor; he is only a teacher!" Here was rebuke, and here was food for reflection. Is a "D. D." one thing and a teacher of God another? Do we cease to become a teacher when we attain unto this title? "He is only a teacher!" May the Lord grant us to be teachers, though we never have half the alphabet swinging, like a comet-tail, to our names!

Monday morning I ascended the dome of St. Paul's Cathedral to get my bearings and map London in my mind forever. On our way up we are stopped in the dome to hear a whisper one hundred and fifty feet away. As I stepped in the gallery that runs around the inside of the dome I noticed five gentlemen, on the opposite side, with their ears to the wall, while the guide, standing near me, was whispering the following information: "St. Paul's Cathedral was built by Sir Christopher Wren. It required over thirty years for its completion. The paintings on the ceiling were executed by Joshua Reynolds. The height is four hundred and four feet. The diameter of this dome is one hundred and twelve," etc. The gentlemen left, and I took their place, whereupon the guide bowed himself against the stone wall, and, in a whisper, which I heard distinctly over one hundred feet, said: "St. Paul's Cathedral was built by Sir Christopher Wren," etc. As I left three gentlemen took my place, and I saw the guide go down for the third time against the wall, and import the thrilling information that "St. Paul's Cathedral," etc. My heart melted for the man. He spends his life going over about a half-dozen sentences, telling people that this cathedral was built by Sir Christopher Wren, and that, too, in a whisper, with his mouth against a wall. Over and over he tells it. He told it the day I was there, doubtless, a thousand times. He is still telling it, and will continue to affirm and asseverate that matter about Sir Christopher Wren to the traveling multitudes through the years. If he is a man of much nervous sensibility, there are, doubtless, days that he heartily wishes that Sir Christopher Wren had never been born. Suppose a book should be written of the sayings of this guide?

I remember a colored man who kept a coffee-stand in Jackson, Miss., by the depot. I was passing through the place when I had just entered the ministry sixteen years ago. It was then I first heard his voice crying out, "Hot coffee and cold cakes!" Four years after I passed through again, and he was still calling, with the exception that he had left off the cold cakes. Either he had met with business reverses, or was growing more sententious. Eight years passed away, and, as my train stopped at Jackson for a few minutes one night, the first voice I recognized was that of my colored friend, with his unwearied statement of "hot coffee." This spring, in going up to deliver an address at Oxford, a midnight stoppage of a few moments at Jackson was rewarded with the sound of the voice of my old friend still insisting that he had "hot coffee." These two words constituted the man's vocabulary. He was never heard to say anything else. To my knowledge he has kept it up for sixteen years. There have been wars and revolutions in distant States; great have been the changes in the business and political world; but he has not changed. Suppose a book should be written containing the sayings of this man, as a companion volume of the biography and speeches of the guide of St. Paul's Cathedral?

In a little while I stood upon the golden gallery that runs around the spire above the vast dome of St. Paul's. Byron alludes to the dome in one of his poems, where, after painting the wilderness of houses and forests of masts, said above it all:

> "——A foolscap's crown,
> And that is London town."

We are close by the ponderous bell that has been likened to conscience by some writer. It sends forth, at times, its deep, solemn boom; but London, in the rush and roar of the daytime, hears and heeds it not. But at night, when the streets grow quiet, all hear it then. I can testify to both facts, and especially to the solemnity of its stroke at the hour of midnight. Writing in my room several nights after midnight, and only three blocks away, I have come to know the iron voice of London's great cathedral. Standing on the golden gallery, I observed that the river Thames, bending like a bow, divides London into two sections, north and south. Looking southward, I saw the Tower of London on my left hand, on the east bank of the Thames, fully a mile away. To my right, two miles distant, was Westminster Abbey and the Houses of Parliament. Still looking south, I counted seven large bridges over the Thames. Facing north, many noted places come into view. Just beneath us is the Bank of England; a little to the left is the famous Newgate Prison; before us is the church on Cripplegate street, from which Mr. Wesley's father was ejected, and in whose walls Cromwell was married and Milton lies buried; farther out still is the place where William Wallace was executed, and the martyrs burned; away to the left are the palaces of Queen Victoria and the Prince of Wales. The fog and smoke prevent our seeing more than two or three miles in any direction; but as far as we can see there are houses by thousands and multiplied thousands.

Descending to the street, we find rushing through hundreds of channels, with impetuous force, great living streams of humanity. Streams mightier and more awful than Niagara and the Mississippi, in that they are living streams, shall live forever, and are rushing on to God and eternity. May the Savior guide these streams, and bring them to swell the volume and add to the gladness of the river of life that is to refresh and bless this world, and glorify, by and by, the universe of God forever!

"A Questionable Policy."

MR. EDITOR: What does all this mean?—these numerous and varied attacks upon the young ministry of our church? Are we going wild, or the church being abused, injured or disgraced by our labors? Is it possible that there is growing up a spirit of jealousy and rivalry between the older and younger members of our Conference? I have noted several articles of late reflecting gravely upon the capacity and work of our young men, all of which have fallen unpleasantly on my ear; but I could have borne with them all had not two of our chief editors (NEW ORLEANS and Nashville Advocates) come out in issues of even dates with articles of strong endorsement for our older brethren. The aged men of our Conference have my highest regards, my highest love, for many of them have conferred upon me favors for which I shall never be able to repay them; but above these high regards and all selfish interests do I prize the church of my choice. Whenever the interests of self and those of my church have conflicted, I have closed my eyes upon self and looked only to the interests of the church. As a minister, I belong to the church, and not the church to me. The ministry is the property of the church, and not the church of the ministry. "Whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come, all are yours." If the church or the ministry must suffer loss, let it be the latter. This being true, let us examine the facts and see if the church is the sufferer by this "questionable policy."

In your article you say: "At one point our policy is lame, and increasingly so every year." . . . "The policy of placing young and inexperienced men in full charge of circuits and stations has been growing amongst us for quite a while, and seems about 'settled.' After looking at the results of this policy for several years, we do not hesitate to say it is a lame policy, and ought to be abandoned—a growing evil which ought to be abated." Now, let us look fairly and impartially at this policy for a while—look at its fruits; for "by their fruits shall ye know them." If you will examine the Minutes of our Conferences for the several years just passed, you will find that the increase of membership reported is largely due to the work of our young men. They have built more churches, founded more parsonages, established more camp grounds, collected more moneys, harvested more sheaves, and done more work along every line than have our old men. The first year of my ministry, though I had but four months' previous experience, resulted in a larger number of conversions, and a better work generally, than I can show for the next two succeeding years combined. Another of my class makes a similar showing; and still another reported at the close of his first year two hundred and fifty conversions under his own ministry. It was only to-day I was talking with an old preacher of this Conference, when he said, "The first year of my ministry was the most successful of my life." Three years ago Bishop Keener stated, in his observations on the report of a young brother of the first year, that it was a remarkable fact that the fruits of the first few years of the itinerant's work were the richest and most abundant of his life. It is true, I know, that we are frequently censurable for the use of new and untried means in our work; but among the multiplicity of experiments made we are apt to fall upon something to fit the case, reach the conscience of some backslidden soul, or touch the heart of some obdurate sinner and bring him back to Christ.

Again, you say: "The damage has been done, is being done now; but we do not blame the young preachers. They did not ask for these positions. They are, doubtless, doing the best they can. We are to blame." Of course, we "did not ask for these positions." They could not be had for the simple asking. It was the voice of the people, the church and our Bishops, and merit on the part of the "young preachers" which has placed them where they are. Besides, why blame yourselves for this state of affairs? Why blame anybody? Who has been damaged? Is the church complaining? We can show many places where the clamor of the church is and has ever been for, "Young men! young men!" Are the young preachers smarting under the burdens they bear? You are in the right when you say, "They do the best they can;" and they do it cheerfully. Then from what source, and why, does the complaint come up that our young men are placed in positions too responsible for them? Sad is the answer: it is from those laborers who were hired about the "third hour," and have "borne the heat and burden of the day," who are now complaining because the Lord of the vineyard is giving to the eleventh-hour men as much as to them. "Is it not lawful for me to do what I will with mine own? Is thine eye evil, because I am good?"

The real cause of the apparent indifference of the church toward our older ministers is correctly given by the Nashville Advocate in an editorial of the sixteenth instant: "We fear that many old men invite dissatisfaction with their work by indulging themselves in habits of mental slothfulness. The number of preachers who continue to grow in intellectual and spiritual power after they pass the age of forty-five is exceedingly small." This is a fast age, full of life and energy, and he who would entertain the masses, instruct the church, hold the public ear, and have himself in demand generally, must be fully abreast of the times, socially, morally and intellectually.

Your idea of senior and junior preachers would, most probably, not be acceptable in this age of the church. "Revolutions never go backward," but onward and upward. The better plan would be to guard the door of the Conference, and not let inefficient men slip in. We have at the door of our Conference the Rev. Dr. W. T. J. Sullivan, a man who is faithfully guarding its portals against all those who would enter not into the sheepfold by way of the door, but climb up some other way;" so that we have but little cause to complain of our shepherds. Some have been detained there for years, till they could enter schools and colleges, and prepare themselves for the work to which the Great Shepherd had called them. Some may thus be discouraged, and turn away from us; but this is all the better for us. It is better that they should be lost here than to enter the Conference, prove ineffectual laborers and a burden upon the church. All worthy men will wait and prepare themselves for the work; all unworthy men we do not want.

In conclusion, let me say I see no ground for the complaint that the "old men are being mercilessly crowded out to make room for the youngsters." (Nashville Advocate.) It is true that year by year the old men are retiring from the field, and their places being filled by younger men; but, since I have been in the Conference, not one single location has been made without the consent of the party to be located. For my part, I have committed myself, under God, to the hands of my presiding elder and the Bishop, and am willing to go where they may direct or locate at their command. I know it is hard not to receive what we justly deserve; but merit will not long go unrewarded. So let us bide our time, "for we shall reap in due season, if we faint not."

It is very unpleasant to us, who are young in the cause, and need the sympathy and help of our "elder brother," to be so frequently branded with the epithets, "fledgelings," "youngsters," "greens," and the like. Brethren, let us have no more of this. Do not open a gulf between you and us which can not be passed, for we be brethren and co-workers together with God. Do not bind us hand and foot by inviting public prejudice upon our work. Let us go free and untrammelled into the vineyard of the Lord.

S. S. S.

COLUMBUS, MISS.

The above article is from the pen of an esteemed young minister. We hold him in high regard; but we must say that he misrepresents us entirely. We made no "attack" upon the young ministers. Our article was written in their interests. There is not a reflection upon the character or work of the young men in our article. He ought not to hold us to an account for what others have said. We criticised the policy of putting inexperienced men in full charge of circuits and stations. We did not criticise the men or their methods of work. We still believe the policy is wrong, and our young brother has given us a fine point to prove our position, for which we give him thanks. He says: "The first year of my ministry resulted in a larger number of conversions, and a better work generally, than the next two succeeding years combined." He then gives the testimony of several others to the same fact. Now, what was the matter with those "succeeding years," that they don't show us good results as the first? If he had been working alongside of an experienced worker, the result would have been better. The examples he cites prove entirely too much. If it is true that the first-year men do the work that brings the best results, then the policy should be to have only first-year men. The last paragraph of the brother's article makes the impression that we have been calling the young preachers names, such as "fledgelings," "youngsters," "greens." The brother ought not to have written the paragraph so that it would make that impression, for it is contrary to the fact. Neither in the paper, nor in private, have we ever spoken of our young ministers in that way. We honor them too much, and our article was written to ease them of burdens they are not able to bear.

Millsaps College Notes.

BY REV. A. F. WATKINS.

Rev. S. M. Thames, presiding elder of the Sardis district, North Mississippi Conference, recently wrote a letter to Bishop Galloway, from which I take the following extracts:

It is encouraging to hear such favorable reports of our college. I heartily endorse the ADVOCATE supplement, and think you have struck the "key-note." The "Millsaps College Day," no doubt, will attract attention and bring the matter before the people more prominently. . . . I, for one, will do all in my power for her interest; will bring the matter before the people every time I preach, and urge the preachers to lend their hearty co-operation.

Rev. P. A. Johnston, presiding elder of the Brandon district, Mississippi Conference, writes as follows:

Enclosed I send you $65 in endowment notes, and have some more promised.

That presiding elder is showing his faith by his works. The influence of the presiding elder will largely determine the success or failure of the college enterprise in the district. This is not less true of a pastor and his charge.

Notes have come in from pastors in various directions this week. This is encouraging to every friend of our great work, and should inspire every preacher in Mississippi to make immediate and faithful effort to do something for the cause. With very little effort within the next ten days $50 from each pastoral charge in the State could be reported. Try it, brethren.

MILLSAPS COLLEGE DAY, OCTOBER 12, 1890.

Let all of our pastors and Sunday-school superintendents observe it. The thousands of dollars it will bring into the treasury of our great college will not approach in value to our people the knowledge, interest and energy that will follow. Let every congregation get the benefit, and the harvest of which this is the seed-time will be glorious. Whether the cause has been presented this year or not, let the day be observed.

"Millsaps College Day" in the Sunday-school will be especially productive of good in the years to come; for every child who contributes, every child who hears will be impressed. Interest will be awakened and ambitions stirred that only eternity can measure.

"To do good when I am gone," is what an old man said, when making a contribution to the college. We are working for the future. This is but the seed-time; how glorious will be the harvest! We are working for the boys of Mississippi. Who will help us?

PATHS

BY S. W. FOSS.

The path that leads to a Loaf of Bread
Wiggles through the Swamps of Toil.
And the path that leads to a Suit of Clothes
Goes through a flowerless soil.
And the path that lead to a Loaf of Bread
And the Suit of Clothes are hard to tread.

And the path that leads to a House of Your Own
Climbs over the hoodlered hills.
And the path that leads to a Bank Account
Is swept by the blast that kills;
But the men who start in the paths to-day
In the Lazy Hills may go astray.

In the Lazy Hills are trees of shade
By the dreamy Brooks of Sleep,
And the rollicking River of Pleasure laughs,
And gambols down the steep;
But when the blasts of the Winter come,
The brooks and the rivers are frozen dumb.

Then woe to those in the Lazy Hills
When the blasts of Winter moan,
Who strayed from the path to a Bank Account,
And the path to a House of Their Own;
These paths are hard in the Summer heat,
But in Winter they lead to a snug retreat.

The Sabbath Day: Its Sanctity, Its Duties, Its Privileges.

TEXT: Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work: but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy manservant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates: for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the Lord blessed the seventh day, and hallowed it.—Exodus xx, 8-11.

And he said unto them, The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath: therefore, the Son of man is Lord also of the Sabbath.—Mark ii, 27, 28.

These two texts present for our subject, "The Sabbath—Its Sanctity, Its Duties, and Its Privileges." There is a striking agreement between the two texts, the one being the complement of the other. Yet the one was perverted by the Pharisees into a burdensomeness too grievous to be borne, and the other has been perverted by "advanced thinkers," "new-theologians" and latitudinarians into an abolishment of the Fourth Commandment, and a justification of Sabbath-breaking by preachers and by people—just as the miracle at the marriage feast in Cana of Galilee has been perverted into an approval of wine-bibbing, whisky selling, drunkenness and debauchery. There is a marvelous liberty in the gospel, but there is no unrestricted license; and the declaration of the Lord of the Sabbath is equivalent to a re-enactment of the Fourth Commandment, as well as the decree uttered when "God ended the work which he had made." (Gen. ii, 2.)

I.—THE SANCTITY OF THE SABBATH DAY.

1. The sanctity of the Sabbath antedates the Decalogue.

In Genesis ii, 1-3, we read: "Thus the heavens and the earth were finished, and all the host of them. And on the seventh day God ended his work which he had made; and he rested on the seventh day from all the work which he had made. And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it: because that in it he had rested from all his work which he had made." And hence, were the whole Mosaic dispensation—Decalogue and all—annulled, such annulling could have no effect on the antecedent decree. (Gal. iii, 17.)

2. Being one of the "ten words" written by the finger of God on the tables of stone, it is an integral part of that moral law which is admitted on every side to be unrepealed. Nay, more; it forms a part of what the late Dr. Watkins termed "the Moral Constitution of the Universe," and, as such, it has never been rescinded, and, in the very nature of things, can never be set aside so long as God is God, and free moral agents remain to obey and to love him. Pitiable is the moral obliquity or the mental obtuseness of him who would eliminate this merciful command from the ten, destroy its sanctity, and nullify its beneficence. While not the keystone of the arch, it is of almost, if not quite, equal importance, as the maintenance of the authority or obligation of the nine others is largely dependent on this, the fourth, promulgated, as they all were, amid the awful sanctions of Sinai.

(1) "But," says some objector, "did not Christ annul the Sabbath?" To such I answer, Where? When? Put your finger on the place! Find a single line—yea, a single word, if you can, from the first word in Matthew to the final Amen! In Revelation, where there is the slightest intimation, much less express declaration, of the repeal of this commandment! It can not be done. We do read that it was the custom of the blessed Master to worship and to teach in the synagogue on the Sabbath days, and that he healed the sick and did other good deeds—godly deeds—on the Sabbath.

(2) "But," insists the objector, "did not his disciples pluck the ears of corn on the Sabbath day?" To this the answer can be readily given—Yes; and in the doing of that there was no violation of the letter or of the spirit of the commandment. They only acted contrary to the Pharisaic misconception of the purposes of the Sabbath, and from a motive very different from that which moved the man who gathered sticks on the Sabbath.

(3) "But," pursues the objector, "did not Christ Jesus say the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath?" True, O brother beloved! and what of it? Is not the same true of the church, and even of heaven itself? And is it not all the stronger reason why the Sabbath should not be taken from man, nor heaven be forfeited by him? Was not everyone of the Ten Commandments made for man, and not man for the commandments? Are they not all expressive of God's love for us? And ought not everyone of them to be obeyed? or shall we, like the scribes and rulers, pick out those commandments which we prefer to think of chiefest importance, and let the others go? or put a negative where God has put none? If we may put the "not" into the fourth or the fifth, why may we not take it out of the sixth and the seventh and the eighth? And while we are thus tampering with the commandments, and choosing which to keep and which not to keep, had we not better heed the solemn admonitions of our Lord? "These things ye ought to have done, and not to leave the others undone." (Matt. xxiii, 23.) "Whosoever, therefore, shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so" (whether by precept or by example), "he shall be called least in the kingdom of heaven," etc. (Matt. v, 19.) "For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all." (James ii, 10.)

(4) "But," urges the determined objector, "we do not celebrate the Jewish Sabbath. We have abandoned that, and, therefore, to the Christian all days are alike." To that is answered: Yes, we have abandoned the Jewish Sabbath, and with it all the cumbersome, ceremonial law—sacrifices, incense, etc.; but we have not and we can not lawfully abandon the Sabbath day—one day out of every seven for rest, meditation, worship and deeds of Christian love. We dare not. Nor can we agree with Frederick William Robertson that it is sufficient if the spirit of the Sabbath permeate the other days of the week. For while the apostles and early Christians, under divine sanction and the example of the risen Redeemer, changed from the seventh day of the week to the first day of the week, the Christian Church has never ceased to observe—to remember—every seventh day, although it may not have been the seventh day of the week. The commandment of God is to "Remember the Sabbath. . . . Six days shalt thou work; . . . but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God," and nowhere says the seventh day of the week. The observance of the first, second, third, fourth, fifth or sixth day of the week as the Sabbath, being one-seventh of our time, is not only a spiritual, but also a literal compliance with the commandment. But it is absolutely essential that one day in seven be sanctified unto the special service of God; and when, by common consent and legislative enactment, one day of twenty-four hours has been set apart as the Sabbath day, that period of time should be so regarded, that confusion be avoided, and "all things be done decently, and in order." (I. Cor. xiv, 40.)

Concerning the change by the Christian Church from the Jewish Sabbath to the Lord's day, no one need hesitate to admit that there is no expressed commandment in the New Testament authorizing the change, for we must remember that there are no precise rules for anything—baptism, reception of members into the church, administration of the Lord's Supper, church government, or anything else in the New Testament—only broad general principles of universal application. If we would seek for rules, we must look into the Old Testament Scriptures; but, while there is no express commandment, there are abundant passages by which the change is authorized by logical inference, and that severest and most unanswerable of all logic—the logic of facts.

(a) The triumphal entry of our Lord and Savior, Jesus the Christ, was made into Jerusalem on the first day of the week, amid the adoration of the great multitude who shouted, "Hosanna to the Son of David!"—a fitting prelude to the next first day of the week, when he burst the bands of death and walked forth from the tomb—Lord of death and of life!

(b) It was upon the first day of the week—the day of his resurrection—that he appeared unto Mary Magdalene in the garden near the tomb (Mark xvi, 9; John xx, 11-18); to the women returning from the sepulchre (Matt. xxviii, 9); to Peter somewhere near Jerusalem—was it not in Gethsemane? (Luke xxiv, 34); to the two disciples on the way to Emmaus, but near to Jerusalem (Luke xxiv, 13); and to all the ten at Jerusalem the same day, Thomas being absent (John xx, 19).

(c) On the next first day of the week, when Thomas and the ten others had met together for worship. (John xx, 26-29.)

(d) At the Sea of Tiberias, when seven disciples were present, and they not yet appreciative of the change of days. (John xxi, 1.) They were still "slow of heart." (Luke xxiv, 25.)

(e) To the eleven in a mountain in Galilee. (Matt. xxviii, 16.)

(f) On that memorable occasion when the disciples and the women, and Mary, the mother of Jesus, were all gathered in that upper room (I wonder if it were in that same upper room where he had broken the bread and poured out the wine, and said, "This do in remembrance of me"?) (Luke xxii, 19)—in that upper room, watching and waiting and praying, and there came that rushing sound, and those tongues of fire, and that joy which is in the Holy Ghost, and all shouted, and Peter preached that powerful and ever-memorable sermon—all, all was on the first day of the week. (Acts ii.)

(g) "Upon the first day of the week," writes Paul to the Corinthians, "let everyone of you lay by him in store as God hath prospered him." (I. Cor. xvi, 2.)

(h) "And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them." (Acts xx, 7.) This was in Troas.

(i) "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day," wrote John the Beloved. (Rev. i, 10.)

(j) And away back in Psalm cxviii—probably the very "hymn" which Christ sung (Mark xiv, 26) on the way to Gethsemane—we read: "The stone which the builders refused is become the headstone of the corner. This is the Lord's doing; it is marvelous in our eyes. This is the day which the Lord hath made; we will rejoice and be glad in it." (Ps. cxviii, 22-24.)

And thus by the logic of facts we see that the first day of the week superseded the seventh day of the week under the divine sanction and in fulfillment of divine prophecy, and because typical not only of the rest which God took after the work of creation, but of the more glorious rest that remains, therefore, after the far more glorious work of redemption; and as baptism succeeded circumcision, the Lord's Supper the Passover, and the Christian preachers the Jewish prophets (there are no priests now), so has the Lord's day succeeded the Jewish Sabbath, and with a like broader, deeper, grander significance than the original type.

(5) "But," the objector persists, "does not Paul condemn the observance of the Sabbath day? Does he not declare that he is afraid of the 'foolish Galatians,' because they 'observe days, and months, and times, and years'? (Gal. ii, 10.) And does not Paul say, in his letter to the Romans: 'One man esteemeth one day above another; another esteemeth every day alike. Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind. He that regardeth the day, regardeth it unto the Lord; and he that regardeth not the day, to the Lord he doth not regard it'? (Rom. xiv, 5, 6.) And in his letters to the Colossians does he not say: 'Let no man, therefore, judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of an holy day, or of the new moon, or of the Sabbath day'?" (Col. ii, 16.) Yes, O my brother; but was not Paul in all these places and at all these points combatting the Judaizing teachers who were seeking to pervert the Gentile converts and bring them back from the Christian Sabbath to the Jewish, and from the baptism of the Holy Spirit to the circumcision of the Mosaic dispensation? and was he not striving against their being "entangled again with the yoke of bondage"? (Gal. v, 1.) From the Jewish Sabbath to circumcision was but a step, and from that to the blood of bulls and goats only another step—and then the cross of Christ would be of none effect. (I. Cor. i, 17.) Hence Paul was "afraid" of those who "observed" the Jewish "Sabbath day."

Now, bear in mind—"remember"—that by the testimony of Christian and of heathen from the days of the risen Christ and his apostles, "the first day of the week"—"the Lord's day"—has been the Christian Sabbath, and its sanctity never questioned except by an erratic genius, now and then, or by others like the Seventh Day Adventists, who, as Bishop O. P. Fitzgerald says, "begin in Judaism and end in materialism;" or like the Roman Catholic Church, which, claiming to have "all power," and to give authority even to the Bible—the Word of God itself—regards a part of the Sabbath as a holy day and the greater part as a holiday, devoting a part to worship and a part to profanation—mass in the morning, and hunting, fishing, dancing, drunkenness, cock-fighting, bull-fighting and horse-racing the remainder of the day which commemorates the redemption of mankind and the resurrection of him who brought life and immortality to light. (II. Tim. i, 10.)

Indeed, the Christian Sabbath comes to us with all the binding force and deep significance of the old Jewish Sabbath, just as the Christian Church succeeds the Jewish, and all with "one Lord, one faith, one baptism." (Eph. iv, 5.) And it comes as a blessing from God—the Triune God—to meet the demands of man's physical, mental and spiritual being. It is a gift of his grace and an expression of his love. No wonder Paul withstood the proselyters and perverters; but very wonderful is the effort to pervert his words into authorizing the abandonment and desecration of the Sabbath! "Till heaven and earth pass away" the Fourth Commandment will be imbedded in the Decalogue (Matt. v, 18)—the guarantee of human liberty and God's providential care of the poor, toiling millions of earth's children for whom priest and Levite, prophet and preacher, may not care, but for whom Christ died.

(6) "But—but," asks the objector, with a tenacity worthy of the better side, "why have a Sabbath day anyway? and what sin is there or can there be in doing on Sunday what is perfectly lawful and right to do on Monday or Tuesday, or any other day in the week?" This is the last dodge of infidelity—the same infidelity which does not "believe in missions," and is akin to that other infidelity which does not "see any harm in the round dance," or "the arm-clutch," or in lottery tickets, or progressive euchre, or theater going, or circus attendance, or the other and worse practices of fashionable Gomorrah. It might have been otherwise if the Lord Jehovah had consulted them about the advisability and practicability of his commands or the reasonableness of his decrees. But he was obliged to do without their experience and observation when he spake and it was done, and he bowed the heavens and came down, to give laws unto men which should be as lamps unto our feet and as lights unto our paths. (Ps. cxix, 105.) Nevertheless it is answered:

(a) Because God has given men a day of rest, and commanded that it be sanctified.

(b) Because it is a felt need of humanity and of all animated creation. Six days of continuous toil is as much as man or beast can stand, support life and be healthy. The highest physical and mental efforts are rendered possible only when this law, as well as the other commandments of God, are regarded. This is not mere theory. Experience and observation have demonstrated its truth. The heathen nations and semi-infidel France during the revolution of the last century show how men are dwarfed and brutalized by disregarding this law; and experiments made at different times show clearly the wisdom and mercy of God in forbidding the labor of "thy cattle" as well as the labor of "thy man-servant" on the Sabbath.

Mississippi State Sunday-School Districts and Officers.

Mississippi has been divided into Sunday-school districts, composed of several counties, and over each district there has been selected a vice-president, whose duty it is to visit all Sunday-schools in his district, organize Sunday-schools where none exist, hold district and county Sunday-school conventions as frequently as possible, and increase the Sunday-school interest in every way. At the late convention the following Christian workers were selected as vice-presidents. Also a list of the Executive Committee follows.

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

First. Dr. L. A. Hill, Hinkel P. O. Counties: Tishomingo, Prentiss, Alcorn and Itawamba.

Second. Jos. M. Woodall, Houston P. O. Counties: Lee, Chickasaw, Clay and Monroe.

Third. J. W. Cavanagh, Crawford P. O. Counties: Winston, Oktibbeha, Noxube and Lowndes.

Fourth. L. P. Brown, Meridian P. O. Counties: Newton, Neshoba, Kemper and Lauderdale.

Fifth. W. H. Patton, Shubuta P. O. Counties: Jasper, Clarke, Jones and Wayne.

Sixth. E. J. Brown, Bay St. Louis P. O. Counties: Perry, Green, Harrison and Jackson.

Seventh. C. R. Doll, Monticello P. O. Counties: Marion, Hancock, Covington and Lawrence.

Eighth. R. A. Whitefield, Westville P. O. Counties: Scott, Smith, Rankin and Simpson.

Tenth. H. H. Estes, Hemingway P. O. Counties: Carroll, Montgomery, Lofiore and Webster.

Eleventh. O. F. Bledsoe, Grenada P. O. Counties: Grenada, Calhoun, Tallahatchie and Yallabusha.

Twelfth. W. D. Porter, Oxford P. O. Counties: Panola, Lafayette, Pontotoc and Coahoma.

Thirteenth. J. Y. Murray, Ripley P. O. Counties: Tippah, Benton and Union.

Fourteenth and Fifteenth. Hon. J. T. Fant, Holly Springs P. O. Counties: Marshall, DeSoto, Tunica and Tate.

Sixteenth. Thos. Mount, Greenville P. O. Counties: Bolivar, Washington, Sunflower and Quitman.

Seventeenth. Hugh Richardson, Vicksburg P. O. Counties: Issaquena, Warren and Sharkey.

Eighteenth. F. R. Carlos, Jackson P. O. Counties: Hinds, Copiah, Lincoln, Claiborne and Yazoo.

Nineteenth. J. C. Roberts, Centerville P. O. Counties: Adams, Franklin, Jefferson and Wilkinson.

Twentieth. H. C. Conn, Hazlehurst P. O. Counties: Amite and Pike.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Jno. Buck, Jackson; H. C. Alexander, Jackson; J. T. H. Laird, Jackson; J. B. Streater, Black Hawk; J. G. McGuire, Yazoo City; W. M. Klein, Vicksburg; J. C. Roberts, Centerville; J. M. Boone, Corinth; T. A. Teasdall, Columbus.

Every Sunday-school worker in Mississippi should cut this list out for future use.

Notice.

To the Pastors and Members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in the Aberdeen District, North Mississippi Annual Conference—

Dear Brethren and Sisters: The Millsaps Methodist College of Mississippi is no longer problematical, but an assured fact. Many of its advocates and friends have already done nobly; yet there are thousands in the State and even in our own district who have neither lot nor part in this important and necessary enterprise. And I am anxious that every member of the church in the district and even throughout the State should contribute something to this institution of learning, within whose walls our sons, brothers and friends may acquire a Christian education, and thus prepare to acquit themselves creditably and usefully in any position or profession which they may choose in life. Let us not now be concerned about its location. Wise and godly men will decide this question at the proper time, and let us pray that they may be divinely guided in this matter. That which should concern us most is the liberal endowment of the college, that it may move off prosperously from its first session in the glorious work for which designed. Let the pastors provide themselves with blank endowment notes (which may be had of Rev. A. F. Watkins, Jackson, Miss.,) and go before their congregations, and in this way, as well as by private appeals, give each member of the church an opportunity of contributing something to this worthy object. And surely, with the present flattering cotton crop prospect before us and our professed love for Methodism and her connectional interests, we shall rally to the endowment of this great educational enterprise. Give your money or your note for $100, $50, $25, $10, $5, $1. What thou doest, do quickly.

AMOS KENDALL, P. E.

From the Work.

BELEN CIRCUIT, NORTH MISSISSIPPI.

Belen is the county-seat of Quitman county—a new, rich county; and it would be hard to find a more hospitable, kind people than we have here. We are improving on all lines, but especially on church lines. We closed one of the most gracious revivals Sunday night that has ever been held in this section. Bro. George Lipscomb spent the week with us, and the Lord blessed us in the conversion of souls. Bro. Standifer was with us a day or two; also Bro. Shumaker. On Sunday night Bro. Newell preached for us, and received a class of twelve into the church, making a total of nineteen accessions since the meeting began. We have received on the entire work during the year thirty-three additions. We will begin the erection of a fifteen-hundred-dollar church here in a few days. God is moving in the hearts of the people in this part of the Delta, and we pray for a still greater manifestation of his power. Brethren, pray for us.

R. O. BROWN, P. C.

LOGANSPORT, LA.

I closed last Sunday, at eleven o'clock, a nine days' meeting at Hickory Grove School-house, about halfway between Logansport and Mansfield. Had twenty conversions and nine accessions; would have had more, but the devil put in his secret work of proselyting. I have fifteen accessions in all since March. I had no ministerial aid in the protracted meeting. Only one sermon, on Friday night, before closing, by Bro. Caraway. Got up sick next morning, and had to go home. At the closing services raised about eighty-six dollars in subscription to build a church at that place for the benefit of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

I happened to have the misfortune to lose a young mare for which I had refused a hundred dollars in money. Died with blind staggers and meningitis, and left me afoot. He is a great loss to a poor man like myself. God giveth and taketh.

Bless God, we had a good meeting anyway! May God bless every effort being put forth to save dying men and women! Amen!

F. E. BOGARD, L. P.

PRAIRIEVILLE, LA.

I was sent to the New River mission this year, and it was my first work. I have four churches, and have held a series of meetings at two of them. The church at Big Swamp had eighteen members when I came on the work, and we now have thirty-six, with one dead and one expelled. Our meeting lasted eight days at Big Swamp, and I was alone; but the Lord blessed us with a great revival.

At Antioch the meeting lasted seven days, and Bro. H. L. Norton, of East Baton Rouge, assisted me; and we had a great outpouring of the Holy Spirit. Sixteen were added to the church there, and there are others that will join us.

My work is in the extreme southwest corner of the Mississippi Conference, and is a very promising one. The people, up to last year, never had regular preaching by our church, and they come in big crowds and listened attentively to the Word. We never felt before that "the harvest truly is great, but the laborers few."

H. B. TREVILLION.

BROOKHAVEN CIRCUIT.

Meeting at Bethel (Brookhaven circuit); grand success. Addition, 13; adults baptized, 7; infants baptized, 10. I was assisted by Revs. Harvey Winborn, Willie T. Woodard, Melton Ferrell. Bethel Church is a model church. Call on any of its members to pray—old, young or children—they will pray. They have finished their church: ceiled, put in sash, and whitewashed. Cemetery wired in. Church and graveyard an Index to a people.

At our first Quarterly Conference (in February) the church was so liberal in their contributions, and Bro. Lewis told them that this would be a prosperous year with them—that God would bless them. God has verified the prediction. All around that church the crops are the best in the county. All in fine spirits. This is my third year with this people. I have another model church—Adams. Will tell of it after our protracted meeting.

SYNOPSIS OF THE COURSE OF STUDY FOR THE SECOND YEAR FOR ITINERANT PREACHERS OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH. By Rev. C. M. Heard. Cincinnati: Crauston & Stowe. Price, 40 cents.

PERIODICALS.

—DEMOREST'S FAMILY MAGAZINE, for September, is as full as usual of matter suited to the household. It is published by W. Jennings Demorest, New York. Price, $2.

—THE MISSIONARY REVIEW OF THE WORLD, for September, is promptly to hand with a rich and varied table of contents. The leading article is from the pen of the venerated Dr. Anderson Thomson, of Edinburgh, Scotland, known the world over for his work and high position. His subject, The Mission in Basuto Land, will intensely interest every reader. Dr. Ellinwood, of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, writes on Woman's Work for Woman, a paper worthy of the writer and of the theme. Dr. Pierson, one of the editors, has a masterly article on The Supernatural Factor in Missions, which is worthy of profound study. The article by Rev. D. L. Leonard on Mormon Proselytism will not only interest, but astound the public by its array of historical facts. It is a paper that merits special attention. The great Conference of missionaries at Shanghai (432 members) receives large attention. The Review sent a special representative from Japan to report its proceedings; and besides, Dr. Happer, of the Christian College of Canton, a leading member of the Conference, gives a ringing paper on its important action, also the four appeals to the churches are given in the Review. The translations from foreign missionary periodicals are full and valuable. The other seven departments are each and all full of intelligence, correspondence, able original papers on China, Japan, Korea, etc., editorial notes, reports of societies, statistics of missions and the latest news from all parts of the world. It is fully up to its own high standard of merit. Published by Funk & Wagnalls, 18 and 20 Astor Place, New York. $2 per year; in clubs of ten, $1.50. Specimen numbers, 20 cents.

LESSON X.—September 7.

Jesus and Zaccheus the Publican.

Luke xix, 1-10.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost.—Luke xix, 10.

TIME.—A. D. 33.

PLACE.—The confines of Jericho.

1. Jericho—The city was close to the fords of the Jordan, on the frontier of Perea, and on the richest plain of Palestine, abounding most in the choicest productions, especially balsam; it was, therefore, an appropriate seat for an officer of superior rank to preside over the collection of revenues.

2. Zaccheus—Probably a Jew by birth, but because he had engaged in a business so infamous in the eyes of the Jews he was considered as a mere heathen. Chief among the publicans—A farmer-general of the takes, who had subordinate collectors under him. The "farming" system adopted in the Roman revenue probably gave Zaccheus the status of sub-coutractor between the great capitalists of the equestrian order at Rome, the real publicani, and the "publicans" commonly so called, who were the actual collectors. As such he had as abundant opportunities for enriching himself as a Turkish pasha, and, as we may infer from his own words, had probably not altogether escaped the temptations of his calling. He was rich—The fruit, perhaps, of his false accusation. And, therefore, the more unlikely to pay attention to an impoverished Messiah, preaching a doctrine of universal self-denial.

3. And he sought to see Jesus who he was—Literally, And he was seeking. The verb expresses vividly the oft-repeated attempts of the man, little of stature, to get a glimpse of the Prophet as he passed. Zaccheus sought not to see what kind of a person, but which one of the crowd Jesus was. Had he heard that there was a publican like himself among the chosen disciples of the Teacher whom the people were receiving as the Son of David? Had some one told him of the parable of the Pharisee and the publican? Had the fame of the miracle wrought on the entrance into Jericho made him eager to see the worker? He was little of stature—The individualizing feature may be accepted, in connection with what follows, either as a touch of consummate art, or a note of artless truthfulness.

4. He ran before—His getting into the tree made him conspicuous. As the passover was at hand, the road was probably crowded with people going to Jerusalem; but the fame of the cure of the blind men was probably the cause of the concourse at this time. Sycamore-tree—The Egyptian fig; a tree like the mulberry in appearance, size, and foliage, but belonging, generically, to the fig-trees. It grows to a great size and height. The care taken by St. Luke to distinguish "between the sycamine" of chap. xvii, 6, and the "sycamore" here may fairly be noted as an instance of botanical accuracy, such as was likely to be found in a physician. We can picture the scene to our mind's eye—the eager, wistful, supplicating face looking down from the fresh green foliage (it was early spring) and meeting the gaze of Jesus as he passed.

5. Make haste, and come down—Whether our Lord's naming Zaccheus is to be taken as an exercise of divine power, or whether we suppose that his knowledge of his person and name had been otherwise received, is a question of no real interest. He certainly knew his heart. To-day I must abide at thy house—The words gain a fresh significance if we remember that Jericho was at this time one of the chosen cities of the priests. Our Lord passed over their houses, and those of the Pharisees, in order to pass the night in the house of the publican. There, we may believe, he saw an opening for a spiritual work which he did not find elsewhere.

6. Received him joyfully—The joy is significant as implying previous yearning, a desire for communion with the new Teacher, the wish to sit at his feet and drink in the words of eternal life.

7. Murmured—It is significant that the murmur was not confined to a special section of rigorous Pharisees, but came from the whole crowd. The chief publican was clearly not popular, and probably the priestly tone of the place gave additional strength to all caste feelings. With a man that is a sinner—The term was obviously used from the popular Pharisaic standpoint, as attaching necessarily to the calling of Zaccheus. He had placed himself on a level with the heathen or the vilest Jew, and ought to be treated accordingly.

8. Zaccheus stood, and said—Zaccheus, in his own house, hearing the murmurs of those who looked in at doors or windows, rose from his couch, and stood up, and in the hearing of all said what follows, not as an apology for himself, but as showing how ready he was to meet the prejudices of men by conquering the special temptation of his calling. The phrase, "unto the Lord," indicates, as elsewhere, that the facts were recorded by St. Luke at a comparatively late period. Stood—Describing a formal act, as of one who is about to make a solemn declaration. He was like the Pharisee, in attitude, but not in spirit. The more formal words for standing, applied to the Pharisee in the temple, is here used of the publican. The half of my goods I give—It seems more natural to see in this the statement of a new purpose than that of an habitual practice. In the absence of any words implying a command of this nature, we must assume either that it was a spontaneous impulse of large-hearted devotion, or, possibly, that Zaccheus had heard of the command given but a few days before to the young ruler. The promise implies immediate distribution. The compensation for wrongs that men might have suffered at his hands was to come out of the remaining half. If I have taken any thing... by false accusation—"If I have" does not state a merely possible case, as if Zaccheus were unconscious of any such extortion; but is a milder way of saying, "Whatever I have taken." It was common for the publicans to put a fictitious value on property or income; or to advance the tax to those unable to pay, and then to charge usurious interest on the private debt. I restore him fourfold—This restitution the Roman laws obliged the tax-gatherers to make, when it was proved they had abused their power by oppressing the people. But here was no such proof; the man, because he now sees and hates his sin, does it of his own accord. "I give." Not, it is my practice to give. Zaccheus's statement is not a vindication, but a vow. "I now give by way of restoration fourfold." The restoration required of a thief.

9. This day is salvation come to this house—The Greek tense, "This day came there salvation to this house," has a force which it is not easy to express in English, implying that the salvation was already looked back upon as completed in the past. In one sense salvation had come in the personal presence of the Savior, but we must remember all that the word implied—deliverance, not from the penalty only, but from the habit and the power of sin. This had come, and the words and acts of Zaccheus showed the fruits. And it comes to him because "he also is a child of Abraham." The Abraham character was in him, as that of the true Israel was in Nathanael. A son of Abraham, like him in his noble generosity, was found where, to the common observer, it would have seemed as hopeless to look for one as among the stones of the Jordan valley. A son of Abraham—First by birth (probably), and now more eminently by faith.

10. The Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost—Like words had been spoken once before, under circumstances that presented a very striking contrast to those now before us. Then the loving purpose of the Christ had for its object the "little child," as yet untouched by the world's offenses; now it rested on the publican, whose manhood had been marred by them. The same law of work is reproduced in a more emphatic form. There it had been that he "came to save;" here it is that he came to "seek" as well.

Missionary.

A Great Missionary Gathering,

Plans are being perfected for a National Missionary Conference, to be held at Indianapolis, Ind., September 3-9, 1890.

Prominent missionary workers, evangelists and Y. M. C. A. workers will be present, among them Bishop Wm. Taylor, of Africa; Dr. A. T. Pierson, author of "Crisis of Missions;" W. E. Blackstone, of Chicago, with his large maps of the world; Robert E. Speer, of Pennsylvania; T. C. Horton, general secretary Y. M. C. A., St. Paul, and A. Nash, State secretary, Nebraska, together with many missionary volunteers from different sections of the country. As is well known to our readers, remarkable providences have combined in recent years to open the doors for the spreading of the gospel among the nations of the earth. Especially may this be said of Africa and China. There are also many evidences of great movements toward the preaching of the gospel to "every creature," and this meeting promises to be one of unusual interest and importance.

The theme of the gathering will be, "Shall the gospel be given to all people during this generation?"

Special railroad rates are being arranged for, and it is expected that the good people of Indianapolis will provide entertainment for the delegates.

AFRICA.—Africa is to be for Jesus Christ. Shem's children have had their day. Japhet's children have had and are having their day. And Ham's children are to have their day. Is not their day dawning? See what has come in the few years since Stanley sailed down the Congo. The great Congo Free State, almost as large as Europe, in which slave-stealing and slave holding are no more; in which cannibalism has ceased; in which the gospel is freely preached; in which a large commerce is being developed; in which are lines of steamers, a railroad and wagon roads, and telegraphs. And these are but the beginnings of better things planned and soon to be. And what has followed there, will follow elsewhere. Man proposes: God disposes. Man goes before for conquest, glory and gain; and God follows after to preach the gospel, and save sinners, and set up the kingdom of Christ. So it has been in the past in Asia, Europe, and America; and so it shall be in Africa. Even now 13 Continental, 12 British, and 10 American Missionary Societies are at work in Africa. There are more than 700 ordained foreign missionaries there, more than 7,000 native preachers, more than 170,000 converts, and in the neighborhood of 1,000,000 nominal Christians. And these are but the first fruits: the harvest is yet to come. The signs would seem to indicate that Africa was in the mind of the Spirit when it was said: "Who hath heard such a thing? Who hath seen such a thing? Shall the earth be made to bring forth in one day? Or shall a nation be born at once? For as soon as Zion travailed, she brought forth her children."—Christian Weekly.

WHAT A ZENANA IS.—The house of a Hindoo of good position is divided into two parts. The zenana is that portion of it which is occupied by the women. It is generally situated toward the back of the house. In the centre of it there is an open court twenty or thirty feet square. This is surrounded by a veranda. In the inner or back wall of the veranda you see here and there all around small doors. These conduct to the private apartments of the women. As the custom in India is for young men when they get married not to leave their father's house and set up separate establishments of their own, but to bring their wives into their father's house, a goodly number of women may sometimes be found in the same family. These may all meet together in the open court. It is in this court and in the veranda which surrounds it, that much of the work of our zenana missionaries is done. Should the husband of one of the ladies of the zenana wish to enter, he must first give notice of his approach either by knocking or by a loud cough. The ladies at once draw their shudders over their faces and make a rush for their separate apartments. A lady missionary of much experience would be able to tell you of many such scenes of which she had been an eye-witness. This small court is the only place in which the zenana lady is allowed in the open air, if open air it may be called. When she has reason to go beyond the walls of the zenana, she is either carried in a close palki or conveyed in a bullock cart, which, of course, is curtained all around. Should she require to walk a few steps, a large sheet is thrown over her, so that no one may see her. —The Missionary.

BUDDHISM IN JAPAN.—While it is certain that Japan is rapidly becoming a Christian nation, it is equally evident that the change is not to be made without a last desperate struggle from the Buddhist propaganda in that empire. The most decisive battle of a campaign frequently comes at its close. That of Christianity against Buddhism in Japan seems likely to be closed in this way, and soon. Just now Japanese newspapers have much to say about the teachings of Buddhist doctrines with renewed activity, and with no little success, and of the organization of new schools, and other adjuncts to an active missionary campaign. Among the latter is, singular as it many seem, the appearance of a Buddhist paper published in English, and called the Bijou of Asia, its combination of ignorance and anger will probably prevent if from becoming a very efficient campaign organ. By a process not very lucidly described in English, and certainly without existence, Christianity is said to be declining both in Europe and America (!); and with a look of innocent sincerity, it is proposed that Buddhism shall occupy the vacated fields. For the purpose of expounding the doctrines of the coming religion to the West, this Bijou has been started.—New York Evangelist.

Tibet is the only known country on earth not open to missions. It has an area of seven hundred and fifty thousand square miles. The greatest length from east to west is fifteen hundred miles, and the population is eight million. It is the stronghold of Buddhism. Shassa, the capital, is the Rome of the Buddhists, and the Dalai Llama is the pope. He is supreme in both temporal and spiritual things. One monastery has about five thousand priests, and there are about six thousand in the country. Tibet is virgin soil for missions. The country is tributary to China.

But we are assured that to-day the workers of the China Inland Mission are on the borders of Tibet, and have been offered by the local Tibetan officials the opportunity of entering the country of the Grand Llama quietly. It is only a matter of months before Christianity will be knocking at the doors of Llamalstic faith so long left unassailed.—Helping Hand.

Churches which refuse to contribute to missions because they think they need all they can raise themselves, are acting directly contrary to the principles of the kingdom of Christ. The law of that kingdom is, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." If they want to have blessings, they must get them by giving. Withholding in the world may be a means of gain, but in the kingdom of Christ it is the way to grow poor. "There is that scattereth and yet increaseth, and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, and it tendeth to poverty." The most certain way for churches to grow weak and poor is to refuse to help in sending the gospel into all the world. This is according to Scripture, and has been proved by experience in multitudes of cases. If your church is weak, begin to do something for others, and it will grow stronger.

What is Scrofula

It is that impurity in the blood, which, accumulating in the glands of the neck, produces unsightly lumps or swellings; which causes painful running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which develops ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or many other manifestations usually ascribed to "humors." It is a more formidable enemy than consumption or cancer alone, for scrofula combines the worst possible features of both. Being the most ancient, it is the most general of all diseases or affections, for very few persons are entirely free from it.

How can it be cured? By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the cures it has accomplished, often when other medicines have failed, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. For all affections of the blood Hood's Sarsaparilla is unequalled, and some of the cures it has effected are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula in any of its various forms, be sure to give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial.

BRONCHITIS

Is an inflammation of the bronchial tubes—the air-passages leading into the lungs. Few other complaints are so prevalent, or call for more prompt and energetic action. As neglect or delay may result seriously, effective remedies should always be at hand. Apply at once a mustard poultice to the upper part of the chest, and, for internal treatment, take frequent doses of

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

C. O. Lepper, Druggist, Fort Wayne, Ind., writes: "My little sister, four years of age, was so ill from bronchitis that we had almost given up hope of her recovery. Our family physician, a skilful man and of large experience, pronounced it useless to give her any more medicine, saying he had done all it was possible to do, and we must prepare for the worst. As a last resort, we determined to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and I can truly say, with most happy results. After taking a few doses she seemed to breathe easier, and, within a week, was out of danger. We continued giving the Pectoral until satisfied she was entirely well. This indisputable evidence of the great merit of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral has given me unbounded confidence in the preparation, and I recommend it to my customers, knowing it cannot disappoint them."

"Ayer's Cherry Pectoral cured me of a bad cough and my partner of bronchitis. I know of numerous cases in which this preparation has proved very beneficial in families of so that the medicine is known among them as 'the consoler of the afflicted.'"—Jaime Rufus Vidal, San Cristobel, San Domingo.

"A short time ago, I was taken with a severe attack of bronchitis. The remedies ordinarily used in such cases failed to give me relief. Almost in despair of ever finding anything to cure me, I bought a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and was helped from the first dose. I had not finished one bottle before the disease left me, and my throat and lungs were as sound as ever."—Geo. B. Hunter, Altoona, Pa.

The Mississippi Constitutional Convention.

The people of Mississippi are now engaged for the sixth time in reconstructiug their organic law. The present Constitution was adopted in 1869, and under it the seceding State was re-admitted into the Union. Its first draft was rejected by the people on account of certain obnoxious provisions relating to suffrage and eligibility to office. The proscriptive features were disapproved by President Grant and a majority of Congress. The President was authorized by act of Congress to issue a proclamation ordering a new election in Mississippi on the question of ratifying the Constitution, in which the obnoxious measures were submitted to a separate vote. The result was, they were rejected by large majorities, and the Constitution, so singularly amended, was adopted almost unanimously.

But Constitutions, like all things human, have to be re-adjusted to meet the growing demands of the years. This has lived, with slight amendment, for twenty-one years. The first Constitution, adopted in 1817, and which admitted Mississippi to the dignity of Statehood, was replaced by a second in fifteen years. The first constitutional convention was held in the Methodist Church at Washington, Miss., built hy the eccentric Lorenzo Dow. Thus the Church gave shelter to the State. It is a curious co-incidence, however, that the first Constitution drafted in that church prohibited ministers of the gospel from holding any legislative or executive office.

There has been much discussion in the State for ten or more years with reference to a new Constitution. But the advocates of a reconstructed organic law have differed widely as to its most important features. Some desired it mainly in order to secure an elective judiciary; while other ardent conventionists urged that such a change would be disastrous. And so the discussion drifted until at last the suffrage question became the paramount issue, and on that mainly the present convention was called.

The personnel of the body is said to be superb. In point of ability and representative character, it has possibly never been equaled in the history of the State. There is no man in this convention who towers above all others as did George Poindexter in 1817, but the average culture and strength of the delegates is much greater. Only one colored man has a seat in the assembly—the Hon. Isaiah T. Montgomery, an ex-slave of Jefferson Davis. All professions, callings and classes are represented, including the ministry, in the person of Hon. Irvin Miller, of Leake county, a local preacher of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

The temper of the convention is conservative. Radical changes will only be made where imperatively needed. It seems to be admitted that some qualification will be placed upon the suffrage, and numerous plans have been submitted. A large and able committee of thirty-five have these suggestions in hand, the latest being a genuine sensation in the form of a proposition to give all women the right to vote, either in person or by proxy, who own property to the amount of three hundred dollars.

All propositions on the suffrage, however, have been met by the act of Congress re-admitting Mississippi into the Union, which limited the right of the State to impose restrictions upon the right of franchise. The question first to be settled was, therefore, How far can the convention go in view of that act? The mattee was referred to the Committee on Judiciary, of which the great jurist, Judge Wiley P. Harris, is chairman. The committee reported on Friday last and presented a masterly paper, citing authorities and decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, showing the unconstitutionality and invalidity of the act, and reaching the conclusion that any State admitted to the dignity of Sisterhood in the Union has the same degree and measure of sovereignty as did any one or all of the original thirteen States, and that this independence and sovereignty was necessarily implied and guaranteed by the Federal compact. How far the removal of that constitutional difficulty will affect the action of the convention remains to be seen.

The plans proposed to solve the suffrage difficulty take a wide range, embracing property and educational qualifications with varied modifications. The Australian ballot system has many advocates and grows in favor.

Other proposed changes of the Constitution relate to the judiciary, the composition of the Legislature, the educational interests of the State, etc.

We shall keep our readers posted with the doings of this body, as its conclusions will necessarily have a far-reaching influence. Mississippi is the first of the Southern States to revise her reconstruction Constitution. If she succeeds in adjusting the difficulties, thought to be serious, if not vital, on a broad and liberal basis, and without injury to any class, the success will be her crown of rejoicing and the joy of the whole country. We await the issue with much interest.

A Picayune a Day.

The editorial in the ADVOCATE, of August 14, entitled "A Questionable Policy," deals with what is certainly a great evil. The practice of putting young men of no experience in pastoral oversight and of little, if any, in preaching in charge of a station or of a large circuit ought to cease. It is an injustice in every way and works an injury to the charge and to the preacher in charge. The station and the large circuit have likely been in the hands of men of age or of mature powers as preachers and pastors, and such may have immediately preceded the young man who has been put to a task so far beyond him. It is true that some excuse may be offered for him on account of his age and inexperience; yet invidious comparisons will be made, his lack will necessarily be felt by the people to whom he ministers, and the young preacher will himself have a constant sense of his inefficiency and consider that he has been overloaded. In his faithful efforts to visit as often as possible the four or five hundred members of his charge, scattered within one to five or ten miles of each of his six or ten preaching-places, he will keenly feel his lack of proper quiet and opportunity for successful study. Thus having the oversight of a number of churches, needing to visit more frequently than others those who may be sick or distressed and in trouble, besides hunting out the lost sheep and the unconverted and serious ones outside of church membership, he will find scarcely any time of his own for self-development along the line of healthy study and careful pulpit preparation. There are also constantly arising in a large pastorate questions of great delicacy and importance that can not be wisely handled by an inexperienced boy. The ADVOCATE'S plan, as I take it, is the old Methodist plan, and is also in accord with the Bible, in sending out the workmen in twos.

I can see nothing in the objection that the burden in the works will be too great, as to support one man is about all they can do now. I have traveled over much itinerant ground, and have become familiar with the financial abilities of many works, large and small; yet I have never laid eyes on a charge that could not, if it would, do double and treble what it is doing in the way of pastoral support, missions and the other vital interests of Zion. Two men can most easily be supported on our circuits, and there is no need either to make the works larger in order to give them a comfortable living. The idea of five hundred members thinking themselves burdened by paying their one pastor $500—and it is oftener $250 or $300 that he realizes, and much of that not in money!

Any such circuit where there is any religious life can take good care of two good men (the elder a man of wisdom and experience and the younger a growing, teachable man of zeal and fire) by cheerfully, and without real hurt, paying them $1,200 and $600, respectively, and giving besides a full thousand to missions, church extension, etc. Why, that would just make the princely sum of $5 60 per capita, less than the yearly cost to the smoking male members of their tobacco and to the dipping female members of their snuff. Five hundred members of any secular organization never fail to make things move, and are never seriously troubled about raising thousands, if needed, for their purposes. What immense spiritual good would come to those five hundred church-members, if they could just rise to this wonderful state of grace wherein they would give 1 39-73 cents per diem for the support of the gospel!

The older man warmed up by the younger, and the younger wisely directed by the older, and both at their best and doing their utmost, and in it all heartily backed by a devoted people, how grandly on would go the glorious work of saving souls! The sad fact in the case is that downright stinginess clogs church machinery, and our young men must needs be hampered and overloaded to the positive stunting of their ministerial growth. If in thought and action something somewhat akin to liberality would only take hold upon those who have to plan the work and those who have to pay their money for church support, then this questionable policy deprecated by Dr. Carter might readily be changed. Methodist preachers do more hard work on less pay than any class of men on earth, and it would seem in them a strange and useless thing did not they have a glorious recompense in the exquisite delight that is theirs in their labors of love, in their joy over saved souls and in their certainty of an eternal weight of glory hereafter.

If our people could be brought to pay for God a picayune a day, any circuit or charge that needed them might have two pastors, build as many churches as they wished, and enable our Mission Board to send missionaries, male and female, by the hundreds into all the dark places of earth.

Alas! alas! the rolling of this old globe of ours up to the feet of God, its every continent and island dominated by the cross of his Son, and all its valleys and mountain sides and tops resounding with the hallelujahs of the millions born of his Spirit—all, all is delayed for the lack of the picayunes held back by those who bear his name. To come down to our Southern Methodist Church, and to conclude, let me state that five cents every day given to God by the 1,200,000 members of our church would yield per annum the colossal sum of $21,900,000.

JOHN T. SAWYER.

The Board of Missions.

The Board of Missions met in a "called session" in the Mission Rooms, Nashville, August 20. The object of the meeting was to take action on the resignation of one of the secretaries, Dr. A. Coke Smith. There were present at the appointed hour twenty-one members of the Board. The resignation of Dr. Smith was accepted, and after some debate as to whether it was imperative on the Board to fill the vacancy immediately, an election by ballot was ordered On the first ballot, Dr. W. H. Potter, editor of the Wesleyan Christian Advocate, received eleven of the twenty-one votes, and was declared duly elected.

Dr. Potter is well known to the church, and will, no doubt, discharge the duties of his office in such a manner as to advance the cause of missions among our people.

The next annual meeting of the Board will be held in Wilmington, N. C. By resolution the Board put itself in the itinerant ranks, and hereafter will hold its annual meeting in different places. This is an excellent move. Everything about Methodism should become itinrant—Boards and Conferences and Bishops and preachers and editors, and all There is nothing like "moving round among the members!"

College Day.

I desire space in the ADVOCATE to express my hearty approbation of the appointment of a "Millsaps College Day." If all the preachers in the two Conferences will observe the day by preaching on Christian education and taking a collection for the college, quite a handsome sum will be realized. Nor will this be the only benefit resulting therefrom. Our people will receive much needed enlightenment.

There is need of instruction on the value of education, and still greater need of indoctrination concerning the importance of Christian education. Far too many among us emphasize mental at the expense of moral culture.

The observance of this day in the way indicated will go far towards bringing our people to a proper frame of mind on this subject. This in itself will be immensely advantageous to our cause. No one, I think, can doubt that the general observance of this day will enlist in our behalf the sympathies of a large number of persons who have hitherto been indifferent on the subject.

Let us, then, brethren of the ministry, one and all, act upon the suggestion of the Board of Trustees. Whatever we may have done in the past, let us on that day preach on Christian education. Even if our people have already heard something on the subject, it will not hurt them to hear something more. "Line upon line and precept upon precept," is a good maxim. And let us not forget the collection.

If a collection has been taken already, a second one will do no harm. Perhaps many did not give the first time who can be induced to do so now. Then, too, it is, doubtless, the case that many can increase their contributions without bankruptcy. October 12 is the day. Let us all observe it.

W. C. BLACK.

JACKSON, Miss.

Advice is like snow; the softer it falls, the longer it dwells upon, and the deeper it sinks into the mind.

"Junior" Endorses.

It was with pleasure that I read your editorial on "A Questionable Policy," in the ADVOCATE, of August 14. I think no one realizes better the truths there stated than the young preachers. I, myself, have thought and do think that our practice with them is at fault; and no one is injured more by it than they. I think that the practice of putting us fledgelings in sole charge of a work is growing, and is a growing failure. The young men are losers by it, and their congregations must, of necessity, suffer by their loss. It strikes me sometimes that we are hindering ourselves in trying to run. In our haste to preach the "gospel in other towns," we make spiritual wastes. To get proofs of this you have only to look at the results on those works that have for years been supplied with young and inexperienced men. Nor are these results chargeable to the negligence or carelessness of the preacher, but simply and solely to his ignorance and inexperience. In the remark concerning spiritual wastes, I bring no charge against any young preacher, for I do not believe there is a more consecrated set of young preachers anywhere than in the Louisiana Conference; but what good is consecrated ignorance? to what use can consecrated inexperience be put? I believe every one of us (for I am one of them) does the best he can with his stock in trade; that each works according to the knowledge that he has. I think the remedy lies in the suggestiou you made, which, though a return to the ways of our fathers, is, in reality, a progression, viz: To enlarge the circuits, if necessary, and put youthful ardor and enthusiasm with sage experience and the wisdom of years. Let the Bishop send us out "two by two before his face." Bring back and place the junior preacher where he can do the best work for himself and also for the church. Let us have a little more of the itineracy. If we would introduce this system in Louisiana we would be able to do more work, and better, and would get better results, and the gospel would be preached in places that it is impossible to reach by the present system. Let us hear more about this. What say the elders?

JUNIOR.

The Children Are Helping—A Suggestion.

The following note with the accompanying "bank" came to hand this morning:

CARPENTER, Miss., Aug. 16, 1890.

Dear Bishop: We send you for Millsaps College our savings bank containing five dollars ($5), which was started for us by our now sainted grandmother, Mrs. M. L. Craig. As her loving hands can drop no more dimes in it, we have concluded that we could not appropriate it to better purpose than the endowment of Millsaps College. My little cousins, Johnnie and Edgar, look forward to that time when they will be students of the college; but I, a little girl, will have to seek my education elsewhere.

Your little friends,
MINNIE ROBERTS,
JOHNNIE LLOYD,
EDGAR LLOYD.

I make this public acknowledgement to my little friends for this generous and timely offering. They may never personally enjoy the fruits of their gift in the halls of our college; but other boys and many young preachers and missionaries will rise up in the great day to call them blessed.

And now this suggests a suggestion. Let all the children in Mississippi save their nickles and have a bank opening and offering on "Millsaps College Day," October 12. I hope every Sunday-school in the State will appropriately observe the day and make a contribution to our endowment fund.

Fraternally,

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY.

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 25, 1890.

Modesty is to merit, as shades to figures in a picture, giving it strength and beauty.

Personal and Otherwise.

We see the statement in the Clarion-Ledger that our young correspondent, M. M. Black, of Jackson, Miss., has obtained a fellowship in Vanderbilt University.

Last week the Texas Advocate reported 1,676 conversions and 1,182 accessions to the church in Texas. The good work goes on notwithstanding the croakers.

Dr. Andrew Hunter, the veteran of Arkansas, had a slight paralysis of the left side while preaching recently. The Arkansas Methodist, of last week, said that he "was improving and hopeful of early recovery." We sincerely trust he may speedily recover.

Rev. J. L. Futrell, one of the editors of the Brother in Red, has withdrawn from the editorship of that paper.

The General Conference of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church, at its recent session in Little Rock, made a law that all the preachers and exhorters should take the church papers! Why leave out the stewards and trustees?

Rev. J. Z. T. Morris writes in the Texas Advocate:

The Texas Advocate is doing very good work this year. You see I make it answer two purposes. I take two copies, one to file and one to go out among my people. I have the record of the church and a helper in my work, also. The best help I find is printer's ink. It really beats a Bishop.

We know some pastors who might safely follow the good example of Bro. Morris.

A prominent Presbyterian pastor in this city told us the other day that he had read our article on "A Questionable Policy," and heartily approved of it, because it advocated a policy that would protect our young preachers. That was the idea uppermost in our mind when we wrote the article. And yet one brother writes as if we had attacked the young preacher. We are set for his defense. We don't want them dwarfed in their youth with overwork; nor do we want the church to suffer from inexperienced leaders.

Rev. John A. Ellis, presiding elder of the Vicksburg district, has been recuperating and gathering vigor among the "sublimities of Colorado."

Louisiana Holiness Association.

By invitation of Bro. White, the Louisiana Holiness Association will be held at Mansfield, La., October 6-12. Let all the brethren who possibly can be present come, praying for a great baptism of the Holy Spirit. Let everyone who expects to come drop a postal to Bro. T. B. White, so he can provide you a home. Dr. G. W. Godby will be with us.

REV. J. S. SANDERS, Vice-Pres.
REV. F. N. PARKER, Secretary.

Notice.

Rev. J. H. Callaway, of the Louisiana Conference, is my son. I have another son, seventeen years of age, who left home last August. We are greatly afflicted on that account, not knowing where he is. He was last heard from, shortly after he left, in Morehouse parish, La. You will please insert notice of inquiry in your paper, and greatly oblige sorely afflicted parents. Anyone knowing his whereabouts will confer a lasting favor by addressing me at Hamburg, Ashley county, Ark.

—Rev. T. B. White, Mansfield, La., writes: "The Scottsville Camp Meeting was a blessed and copious baptism. I do not remember, in my long observation and experience at camp meetings, to have witnessed its equal. Conversions clear, sanctifications definite. Scores of living witnesses for Jesus testifying to the great salvation. Many of those who claimed the blessing of 'perfect love' in years agone stand as witnesses of God's keeping power. Our Bro. Parvin, who has been a shouting Methodist for forty years, claimed and professed the sanctifying power of God's grace, Sunday morning, at four o'clock. This good brother told, amid shouts and songs, that the second edition excelled the first in the perfect soul-rest he had obtained. Scottsville Camp Meeting is a big thing for the glory of God."

—Rev. G. E. Greene writes from Vernon, La.: "Bro. Wright and I have just closed our protracted meeting at New Prospect. We had some glorious times. Church revived; seven new members; about the same number of conversions. Shouts, tears, joy, repentant sinners, all the same night. A new church will be commenced there, no doubt, this fall; $140 already subscribed. We had our third quarterly meeting in the new church at Oak Ridge. The outlook is encouraging."

Mr. J. G. Graut, with indefatigable energy, has re-established his large furniture business, having just returned from an extensive tour among the most noted furniture manufactories in the North and West, from whom he purchased a large, elegant and fashionable assortment of furniture at prices that will enable him to defy competition. He has leased and had built specially for his use as a furniture store the centrally located buildings, Nos. 28 and 30 Camp street, adjoining the State National Bank, and opposite the New Orleans National Bank. This building is only five minutes' walk from the St. Charles or other most noted hotels, as well as from Canal street. Mr. J. G. Grant's improved facilities for handling cheaply and expeditiously large quantities of furniture will enable him to supply his numerous customers both in city and country with fresh, clean furniture in original packages from the manufacturers. Not a dollar's worth of old furniture saved from Mr. Grant's fire was purchased by him or is part of his present splendid stock.

THE LOST DREAM.

O, why can't I think of it? Where did it go?
I thought I would tell you this morning, you know.
Yes, I thought, half awake—all so plain it did seem;
And now I have lost it—my dear little dream.

Do you think it will come again—maybe to-night?
Oh, if I once catch it, I'll hold it so tight.
'Twas like music, I think—and it must have had wings;
'Twas like flowers and sunshine and all lovely things.

If one could just peep into dreamland and see!
Do you think I would find it there, waiting for me?
But trying to catch it, one never could tell—
It might fade quite away, under dark fairy spell.

For a queer place is dreamland, you know,—very queer;
And you can't be quite sure which is there and which here;
And you always keep doing, but never get done;
And the ground floats from under your feet as you run.

There the hills and the hollows seem melting in haze;
'Tis an Indian summer of unending days.
And the music will never play straight through one time;
And the trees are so tall they go brushing the moon.

There the cats and the dogs are all able to talk,
When you meet 'em together, out taking a walk
There the roses are green—and the leaves may be pink;
And things are so "mixish" it scares you to think.

There speaking to some one you're sure that you know,
Why, it's somebody else—and that bothers you so!
You'll mean to say something—the sense will all change
To something you didn't mean, foolish and strange.

But I think I shall know it the minute I see,
And I'll tell you the moment I wake. Oh, dear me!
I hope that I'll find it. Too bad it would seem
To lose it forever—that dear little dream!

Tommy's Experience.

"Tommy! Tommy!"

Tommy shut one eye, and with the other looked through a convenient knothole in the side of the woodshed.

Again his mother called his name, this time a little louder than before; still Tommy did not answer. To say he felt aggrieved would be giving a very mild description of his feelings at that minute. Had he not worked all morning carrying coal and water, picking up sticks and stones from the front grass-plot, and doing various other things too numerous to think of just then? And had he not been sustained and upheld through it all by the thought of having the whole afternoon to himself? Why, he had even forgotten to count how many buckets of water he had carried to wash off the porches, so interested was he in trying to calculate how many willow whistles he would have time to make before supper time. And now, just as he was comfortably fixed at work, to think that he must be called from it!

"I know just what she wants me for," he said to himself. "I don't see any sense in two of us going to the store; just as if Tillie couldn't go by herself! I'll not let on I heard her call me."

Tommy knew that this was not a very safe course to pursue, but he was so vexed that he did not think of consequences. By this time his mother had gone into the house and closed the door, but it was again opened, and again his name echoed through the premises.

"That's Tillie," said Tommy, "and she won't stop at calling; she'll hunt me up."

He looked around for a hiding-place. He could hear Tillie running down the stone walk. She would be there in a minute; so hastily jumping down from the work-bench, he ran across the floor and climbed into an old cuphoard, which shook in a threatening manner, as if resenting the instrusion. He pulled the doors to just as Tillie appeared at the doorway.

"Tommy! Tommy Dawson!" she called, so that there might be no mistake as to what Tommy was wanted. Tommy held his breath lest she might discover him, and wished that his heart would not thump so heavily against his ribs; surely Tillie would hear it. But she turned toward the house, as if satisfied that he was not to be found. Tommy chuckled in high glee, and, after hearing the door shut, clambered down out of the crazy old cupboard, his face very red, his clothes covered with dust and cobwebs. After taking observations through the knothole for a few seconds, he got up on the bench and began on the whistles, but somehow the bark seemed very hard to loosen and his knife was not so sharp as usual. He was sure he had never heard the field crickets chip so loudly, and was it not strange they were saying, "Sneak! sneak! sneak!" just as fast as they could? Tommy had often listened to them before, but he always thought they said, "Summer's here, here, here!" He must have been mistaken then, for nothing could be plainer than what they were now saying.

"If only that road to the store was not so hot and dusty!" he said half aloud; and then he whittled at a willow switch.

"I do wonder if Hatton's dog would bite? Tillie's awful 'fraid of dogs;" and then another minute of whittling.

"I guess I could finish these whistles after I come back;" and he shut his knife and with one bound was in the middle of the floor, and with another was out on the stones.

"Whew! how hot that old woodshed is, anyway!" and, running up the stones, he burst into the kitchen where he found Tillie flying around in wild delight.

"Why, Tommy Dawson," she exclaimed, "where have you been? we've been calling you everywhere."

"What are you polishing your best shoes for?—to wear to the store?" demanded Tommy, skillfully evading the question.

"Store?" echoed Tillie, scornfully. "Why, Tommy Dawson, Uncle Tom is here, he's going to take us home with him, and he's in an awful hurry; and mother's up stairs laying out your clothes, and I've polished your best shoes. You see, we thought you might come in time to get ready if everything was fixed for you to dress in a hurry. And oh, Tommy, I was that afraid I would have to go without you!" and here Tillie paused to take her breath.

Tommy may live to be very old, but he will never forget how mean he felt just then.

"You'd better not stand there," continued Tillie; "Uncle Tom said we must be ready in half an hour, and he's been here 'most fifteen minutes now."

Tilly could not think what made Tommy so very kind and thoughtful during the next fifteen minutes, and when, after running up stairs after her parasol and handing it to her, he stopped to pick a thread from her dress, her wonder found expression in words: "How nice you are to-day, Tommy! I just wish you'd be that way all the time."

And Tommy, as he climbed into the buggy which was to take them to the station, resolved that he would "be that way" just as often as he could think of it. I think he must have kept his resolution, for it was only the other day that I heard a lady remark: "How much Tommy Dawson seems to think of his sister! He treats her just as if she were some other boy's sister." — United Presbyterian.

Children's Sayings.

Laura is a little girl five years old, who is very much interested in learning to read. The other day she was studying over a list of words, and sister Gertie, who has been almost through the Third Reader, was helping her. The word "fur" proved especially puzzling, and the little one's forehead contracted into innumerable wrinkles.

"Why, you know that word, Laura?" exclaimed Gertie, eagerly, "it's something that cats have."

Like a flash the little girl's face brightened as she cried, "I know—fits!"

One of Sihyl's school-mates asked her to go home with her from school. "Oh, no!" said the little one. "I can't go without mama's commission!" — Youth's Companion.

A COOKING LESSON.

BY JOHN W. CHADWICK.

'Twas St Thefeta gave it. She, you know,
Was here on earth three centuries agone,
And lived in Spain, and starved her body so—
Her spirit too—that, dying, she had won
Such fame for sainthood as was never worn
By any other in that land forlorn.

And her dear Lord, or Mary ever mild,
In token of her sweet and perfect grace,
Would sometimes grant her, happy as a child,
To see a vision of the heavenly place;
And oft for hours it was her joy to be
Rapt in a high and glorious ecstasy.

Then earth was not; then heaven was opened wide;
Then once, they tell, that with a flaming spear
Her Savior ravished from her bleeding side
Her living heart; while she, without a fear,
Could wish no blessing greater, only so,
To be forever in her gladsome woe.

The coming rapture gave no sign before,
Nor made account of any task in hand;
And once it chanced to seize her at the hour
When she was cooking for the convent band:
Not as our daughters do who know by heart
A hundred secrets of the gentle art,

But not indifferently to the humble task,
'Twas fish that day, just turning to a brown,
No Andalusian girl could softer ask
For her dear cheek, when swift and sudden down
The vision swept, and she was caught away
Into a light which was not that of day.

To save the dinner! Not to lose her grip
Upon the fry-pan—that was her last thought
Just as she felt her footing wholly slip
Away from earth, and heaven its splendor brought
So close to her that she could lay her hand
On things that angels scarce can understand.

The vision passed, and sooner than her wish
Earth had come back; and in her hand behold
The fry-pan still and in the pan the fish
Done to a charm! The kitchen centuries old,
Had never furnished forth a dantier bit—
For angels' food it had not been unfit.

Dear sister sainted, be our pattern saint
In this at least; whatever ecstasy
May shake our souls, till we, with rapture faint,
Seem less on earth than in the heavens to be,
As thou didst not thy proper task forego
While heaven's rose showed many a mystic row,

So may it be with us! From common tasks
Of love and duty may no visions lure,
And each but prove an angel that unmasks
With glorious semblance service, sweet and pure!
Work, love-inspired, is better than the best
Imagined foretaste of the heavenly rest.

1900 NOT LEAP YEAR.—Why the year 1900 will not be counted among leap years, is thus accounted for: The year is 365 days 5 hours and 49 minutes long; 11 minutes are taken every year to make the year 365¼ days long, and every fourth year we have an extra day. This was Julius Cæsar's arrangement. You may ask: "Where do these 11 minutes come from?" They come from the future, and are paid by omitting a leap year every 100 years. But if leap year is omitted regularly every 100th year, in the course of 400 years it is found that the 11 minutes taken each year will not only have been paid back, but that a whole day will have been given up. So Pope Gregory XIII., who improved on Cæsar's calendar in 1582, decreed that every centurial year divisible by four should be a leap year after all. So we borrow 11 minutes each year more than paying our borrowings back by omitting three years in three centurial years, and square matters by having a leap year in the fourth centurial year. Pope Gregory's arrangement is so exact, and the borrowing and paying back balance so nicely, that we borrow more than we pay back to the extent of only one day in 3,866 years.—Selected.

Can it be home, a child's home without religion? It may be a house, beautiful, enriched with art, knowledge, and music; but without religion, without thoughts of God, without prayer, penitence, sweet Sabbath, faith, love, and the seeking after the life of holiness—it can not be a home. This needs no argument. It needs much emphatic repetition, and it needs deep belief. All children are naturally religious. They have wonder, awe, reverence, trust, tenderness, the keenest sense of sin and love. No "learning" comes so naturally to a child as the learning of God. The talk of children about God is as the talk of wise men. There must be religion if there is to be a home. We who are asking that all education shall be religious are, of all people, bound to see that our children find their first faith, their first prayer, their first thought of God at home. When the schoolmaster gets our boys he ought to find that there is one elementary thing in their education well begun—religion. To send a boy or a girl into the "new world" of a school without prayer, faith, love, reverence, and some experience towards God, is to send those most precious to us into their first day in the world and in life as unfitted for that world and for that life as a heathen child.—Rev. G. S. Reaney.

Sleeping-Rooms.

In the most of our dwellings the important rooms, as far as the health of the inmates is concerned, are the kitchen and the sleeping-room. In these two the mistress of the house, who keeps no servant, spends the largest part of her life; but it is to just these rooms that the least sanitary attention is commonly paid.

We shall speak now only of the sleeping-room. In this we all spend, or should spend, one-third of the day, the period designed by nature for repairing the wear of the physical and mental machinery. No greater mistake was ever made than to look on the time spent in sleep as wasted.

We have improved on such sleeping-rooms as were not unusual a few generations ago; rooms forever unvisited by sunshine; rooms opening from the kitchen, so that the spoiled air of the day was breathed over again by night; rooms in low, stifling garrets, or, worse still, mere closets, wholly cut off from sunshine and from the pure outside air.

1. A sleeping-room should never be a small one, dependent for most of its air on an open window. Such a room is seldom safe, and in certain states of the weather the air is sure to be shut off.

2. Few rooms are large enough not to require continuous ventilation. The two sleepers are constantly vitiating the air. No air is pure which contains an excess of carbonic acid, and at every breath a certain amount of oxygen is converted into this poisonous gas. Think of twelve thousand such inspirations during the night!

Moreover, each breath conveys with the carbonic acid and throws into the air effete matter thrown off by the lungs, which is also poisonous.

Nor is even this all. Millions of sweat tubes are all the time pouring their polluted waste into the room. Ventilation, it is evident, is a hygienic necessity.

3. Sunshine is essential to a good sleeping-room. Sunshine is a powerful disinfectant, and every sleeping-room needs to be disinfected daily. Let the head of the family appropriate the sunniest room; the guest room, with its occasional occupant, is of secondary importance.

4. The sleeping-room should be in an upper story. As the night air cools, many of the disease-producing particles sink to the lower strata. It is said that one may live safely in malarial region by avoiding the night air and sleeping above the ground floor.

5. The sleeping-room should be not only one of the most spacious, but one of the cheeriest and neatest and best-furnished rooms in the house. It should be emphatically "the chamber of peace."—Youth's Companion.

How They Make Thimbles.

The way thimbles are made in England and in this country is simple enough. Dies of the different sizes are used, into which the metal, whether gold, silver or steel, is pressed. The hole-punching, finishing, polishing and tempering are done afterward. Celluloid and rubber are molded. The best thimbles are made in France, where the process is more thorough. Strange as it may seem, the French consider durability in their gold thimbles as the first requisite. The first step in the making of a Paris gold thimble is the cutting into a disk of the desired size a thin piece of sheet-iron. This is brought to a red heat, placed over a graduated hole in an iron bench, and hammered down into it with a punch. This hole is the form of the thimble. The iron takes its shape and is removed from the hole. The little indentations to keep the needle from slipping are made in it, and all the other finishing strokes of the perfect thimble put on it. The iron is then made into steel by a process peculiar to the French thimble-maker, and is tempered, polished and brought to a deep blue color. A thin sheet of gold is then pressed into the interior of the thimble and fastened there by a mandril. Gold leaf is attached to the outside by great pressure, the edges of the leaf being fitted in and held by small grooves at the base of the thimble. The article is then ready for use. The gold will last for years. The steel never wears out, and the gold can be readily replaced at any time. Nowhere else in the world are gold thimbles made in that way.—Chambers' Journal.

Obituaries.

McLAURIN—Hon. LOUCHLIN McLAURIN was born, of Presbyterian parents, in Marlborough district, S. C., March 28, 1815. He came to Mississippi with his father when he was four years old, and was reared in Simpson county, Miss. Thence he came to Smith county, Miss., whore he resided up to his death, which occurred July 9, 1890, at 6 A. M. Served as a member of the Board of Supervision immediately after organization of Smith county (vote not now known), was elected to represent Smith county in Legislature in 1847 or 1848. Again elected to Legislature in 1862; re-elected 1865. Elected to that body again in 1876. Elected circuit and chancery clerk of Smith county, Miss., 1883; served in that capacity four years. Was highly esteemed—yea, honored—by all who knew him; was high-toned and honorable as a citizen, never stooping to a low or mean act. He was married to Miss Ellen C. Tullos, 1847. To them were born eight sons—all of whom have reached honorable and honored manhood, occupying and filling high places in the walks of life.

Bro. McLaurin was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in 1864. Ever thereafter his was an upright walk and godly conversation. He was firm and established in his religious and political principles. His place in church was never vacant unless he was absent from home or too ill to be there. He was liberal to support the institutions of the church—yea, never a call made in his presence for any worthy object that he did not respond liberally. But his seat is now vacant in the church militant. Our heart is sad, but he is rejoicing as an angel with his sainted wife, who died May 29, 1883; also with his grandson, little Louch., who preceeded him to heaven just one week. Bro. McLaurin was ready for those "mansions." This writer was away in Louisiana during his sickness; therefore, did not have the pleasure of visiting and holding sweet communion with him in his last hours. But his life, though not very demonstrative, was underlaid with the true fundamental principles of Christianity and developed in acts of true devotion. Therefore his was a life of faith and work. "Show me your faith without your work; I will show you my faith by my works." He was a good and kind husband, indulgent father, good neighbor, true friend and brother. Farewell, beloved father and brother, till we meet again under the shades of the tree of life.

R. A. SIBLEY, Pastor.

SHAMBURGER—Mrs. MARY SHAMBURGER (nee Wilson) was born in Georgia, November 20, 1806. Her parents moved to Alabama, and from thence to Coplah county, Miss., where she met and was married to J. W. Shamburger about the year 1820 or 1821; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church at what was known as the old Crystal Springs Camp Ground—thereby making a public profession of her Savior.

From her earliest consecration the consciousness of her acceptance was settled. She realized, by a strong faith, that she was not her own; that she was bought with a price, even the blood of Jesus. Her young life and womanhood being thus early consecrated to God and the church of her choice, it was not strange that she was so universally known and read of all who knew her. Although quite modest and unassuming (almost to a fault), she had a clear head, a warm heart, and that decision of character that made no compromise with sin. Religion with her was a principle implanted in her soul by the powers of the Holy Ghost. Hers was not the life of a loud profession; but duty, fidelity and devotion to God, family and right. She was not a stranger to the trials and afflictions of life; nay—but blessed be God—she relied upon the sure word of promise, Thy grace is sufficient.

She buried her husband during the late war. About the same time, or soon after, her only son was captured near Port Hudson and died in prison; yet her hope and trust faltered not. The language of her life was, Thy will be done. After the war she gave up her old home; went to live with her youngest daughter, Mary, wife of Oliver Holliday, where she spent the remainder of her days, bearing afflictions, disappointments and the reverses of life with that Christian resignation that shed a halo of light and hope of a blessed immortality.

About two or three years before her death she was attacked with a cancer on her face, which, by its sure, but steady course, brought her to the triumphant terminus of a long and eventful life on May 2, 1890. She leaves three daughters, many grandchildren and a host of friends, who sorrow not as those who have no hope. Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord!

ONE WHO KNEW HER WELL.

McLAURIN—Little LOUCH. McLAURIN, son of Dr. A. G. and Mrs. C. E. McLaurin, and grandson of Hon. L. McLaurin, was born in Smith county, Miss., January 19, 1888, and died in Smith county, Miss., July 2, 1890. He was the light and life of the home. He was the joy of papa's and mama's heart, and the life of grandpapa. The patter of his little feet and prattle of his sweet mouth is heard no more here. But he is with grandpapa and grandmama, with the angels and Christ. His tongue is employed in praise to God and the Lamb. His angel looks into the face of our Father in heavon. God took him to win the parents to heaven. R. A. SIBLEY.

PETTIT—Little MARY IRENE, the daughter of Mr. Robert and Mrs. Serena Julia Pettit, died at her home on July 31, 1890. She was about three and one-half years old when she departed this life and took up her abode in the kingdom of heaven.

She came forth as a beautiful flower. Oh, dear parents, take comfort when you remember while little Mary only budded on earth, she now blossoms in heaven. PASTOR.

CHEW—Died at Sikeston, Mo., August 8, an infant daughter of Rev. R. F. and Amelia Barton Chew, aged seven months.

PHILLIPS—DAVID THOMAS, son of Zack and Adline Phillips, died of pneumonia at his home in Jackson parish, La., March 21, 1890, aged twenty years and four days.

At a meeting conducted by the writer, near his home, in October, 1889, Thomas united himself with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and shortly after took up his cross and lived a consistent member until his death. He had many battles to fight in his short Christian career. His father is not a Christian, neither a member of the church; but a reckless, ungodly man, and this had a tendency to drag him back into sin, but he stood firm amidst them all. There was evidently an abiding faith in God, with a manifest and continuous flow of good feeling for everybody.

His death is a great loss to his parents, the church and the community. He leaves a father, mother and four brothers to mourn their loss, one of whom only survived him a short time, and he, too, was called from time into eternity. Truly the ways of God are past finding out, and in the midst of life we are in death. May God bless the father, mother and the three remaining brothers! is the prayer of

W. B. INABNET.

STUART—SUSIE INMAN, daughter of Mr. Benjamin C. (deceased) and Mrs. Susan Stuart, was born in Foster, Texas, October 31, 1880, and died at Percy's Creek, July 24, 1890, aged nearly ten years.

Little Susie was an amiable, sprightly, sweet child, and loved the truth tenaciously. She was consecrated to God by baptism in infancy, and by a faithful mother and aunt she was taught the duty of prayer and the importance of the consecration of her childhood to Christ. This sweet child, like a tendril, had entwined herself tenderly around the loving hearts of that now bereaved household; and their only consolation is in the joyous hope of meeting dear little Susie in the land of the pure and the innocent, where this sweet tendril will grow in immortal vigor and bloom in the freshness of eternal day. Thank God, that you and your loved one is not severed forever! The Comforter of all Christian hearts whispered in your ears as you followed to the grave the pale remains of that precious little one, Thy loved one shall live again. May our Father in heaven apply the balm of Gilead to their sorrowing hearts! W. W. HURST.

MORGAN—FRANCES ALMEDIE, infant daughter of John and Sallie Morgan, was born July, 1889, and died June, 1890. Almedie was a bright and beautiful child. She only lived to gladden the home of her parents a little over ten months, and then the flower faded and died, to bloom and live in heaven. May God comfort the bereaved parents and help them to live faithful, and meet their dear child in our Father's kingdom above!

BROOKS—BERTIE, daughter of R. A. and N. J. Brooks, was born February 9, 1889, and died July 28, 1890. She was just beginning to talk, saying, "mama" and "papa."

Little Bertie leaves two brothers and four sisters to mourn her loss, while she, with a convoy of angels around the throne in heaven, sing the praises of him who said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of Heaven!"

R. M. WALKER, P. C.

RAWLS—ARA DONA, infant daughter of Bro. and Sister Rawls, of Barnett, Miss., died on August 13, 1890, and was buried at Salem Church. Ara Dona was a sweet, bright child of about twenty months. Jesus said: "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of Heaven." There was much forbidding, by parental affection, tears, and loving ministries of friends and neighbors; but she went directly to Jesus, and to await the coming of the loved and the left.

The Clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policyholders.

The Episcopal Diocese, of New York, has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and the Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

NOW the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect in every good work, to do his will, working in you that which is well-pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ; to whom be glory for ever and ever. HO, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy, and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price. Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? and your labor for that which satisfieth not? hearken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness.—Isaiah lv, 1, 2.

GRANT'S FURNITURE STORE

NEW STORE, AT 114 Camp St. NEW ORLEANS. NEXT DOOR TO ADVOCATE OFFICE.

BEAUTIFUL PARLOR GOODS.

I have one entire floor devoted to the display of these goods alone, and have over sixty different varieties to select from. Complete Suits anywhere from $35 to $650, and odd pieces—such as Sofas, Divans, Easy Chairs, Patent Rockers, Window and Reception Chairs—at as low prices in proportion as the Complete Suits. I have these goods in Cherry, Mahogany and Walnut, and can give you your choice of any of the following coverings: Crushed, Embossed, Plain and Silk Plushes, Hair Cloth, Mohair, Raw and Spun Silks, Satins, English Tapestries, French Velours, Petit Point, Brocatelle or Damasks. I make a specialty of these goods, have many of the patterns made specially for my own trade, and can offer a greater variety at lower prices than any other house in the South.

NEW STOCK

In all departments, and every grade of goods, from the cheapest to the most expensive, in endless variety. I have all the latest and most fashionable designs, and, as I have only purchased from factories whose goods I have been selling for the past six years, can and do guarantee every piece of Furniture that leaves my establishment.

LOW PRICES

are the order of the day, and I propose to sell strictly reliable goods at a lower price than has ever before been quoted in the South. My store has long been known as "The Cheapest Furniture House in New Orleans," and this season I intend to add to the reputation it has gained in this respect. I only ask a chance to save you money.

HANDSOME BEDROOM SUITS.

A very extensive assortment of these goods in every style; and whether you wish to pay $40 for a Complete Suit of twelve pieces, or from that price anywhere up to $1,000, I can sell you what you require. I have these goods in Black Walnut, Natural and Dark Cherry, and Natural and Dark Mahogany, or in imitation of any of these woods, and can furnish the very latest, neatest and most artistic designs.

I have also a large and carefully selected stock of Hall, Library, Dining-room and Kitchen Furniture; Reed, Rattan and Wicker Chairs, Rockers, Lounges and Cribs; Brackets, What-nots, Easels, Music Stands and Fancy Top Tables; Carpets, Carpet Strips, Matting, Shades, Curtains, Curtain Poles, and everything necessary to furnish a house completely throughout.

LARGE SALES.

I have a large city trade, and am shipping goods extensively to every Southern State. My country trade has increased very rapidly during the past year, and the facilities which my new store affords me for carrying a larger and better stock will enable me to still further extend it, and to give complete satisfaction to my customers.

Hid by a Dollar.

People of ordinary sense know that the city weekly paper is made up of the reading matter once printed in the daily edition and paid for by the subscribers to the daily. This reading matter costs nothing to put it in the weekly. The expense to a publisher of such a weekly is only the very cheap paper, common "news ink" and the press-work. The cost of setting the type is a great item of expense to a paper. This heavy outlay the secular city weekly does not have. The church journal must use a grade of paper costing nearly twice the price of the secular paper. God has given it to the large majority of Methodists to see when the facts are placed before them why a city daily can circulate "a dollar paper." There is one in a hundred or a thousand who is forbidden, by perverse and congenital opacity of intellect, perhaps clouded by covetousness, from admitting a truth plain as the sun. They need the pity and prayers of their pastor and the publisher of their church paper.

The New Discipline.

We beg to announce that we are prepared to fill all orders for the revised Discipline. We hope our brethren of the ministry will exert themselves to scatter the book among our people. It ought to be in every Methodist home. It is our Confession of Faith and Book of Order. It contains the essentials of all our teachings, and embodies the laws of our government. These all Methodists should know. One has hardly a right to call himself a Methodist till he has familiarized himself with the doctrines and polity of the Church. We hope advantage will be taken of the interest in its revision to give the Discipline a wide circulation. The price in cloth is 25 cents, with the usual discount to ministers and the trade.

How Can It Be Done?

"He who makes two pianos sound where only one sounded before, is a benefactor of his kind." Exactly; and that is what Ludden & Bates, of Savannah, Ga., are doing. Wherever they sell one piano or organ, they receive orders for, at least, two more. Satisfied purchasers are their best advertisements, and their patrons understand that when they sell a piano it is a musical instrument—not a rattle-box. Read their "Special Summer Offer" in our advertising columns, and act upon it. Buy in August, September or October, at spot cash prices, and pay in December next when crops are sold. No interest. Write them about it.

Our readers who are afflicted with deafness should not fail to write to Dr. A. FONTAINE, 19 East 14th street, New York City, for his circulars giving affidavits and testimonials of wonderful cures from prominent people. The doctor is an aurist of world-wide reputation. See his advertisement elsewhere.

AMOS KENDALL, P. E.

Many people neglect a cold, thinking it will go as it came. Frequently with serious results, the cold of to-day may be the pneumonia of to-morrow. Nothing will cure a cough or cold so rapidly as Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar. Its reputation has been established for over fifty years as the best remedy for coughs, colds, bronchitis, asthma, all throat and lung troubles. For croup and whooping-cough it is invaluable. Mothers will be saved much anxiety and loss of children by having Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar always on hand. Consumption has been cured many times by its use. One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as a 50c. bottle.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The Republican senators have agreed that the Lodge Force bill shall go over to next session for final action, with the probability of its being taken up at an extra session to begin in November. There are numerous measures to be considered besides the Tariff bill, and there is little probability of an adjournment until the latter part of September.

The remains of John Ericsson, the inventor, were borne to his native country, Sweden, on August 23 by the cruiser Baltimore. The cortege was attended with imposing ceremonies.

The condition of the strike on the New York Central railroad remains unchanged. A large force of Pinkerton's police guard the property in the Albany yards. The road has refused to submit questions at stake to arbitration.

In the Constitutional Convention in Jackson, Miss., the suffrage question is absorbing all interest. The report of the sub-committee will be an apportionment plan, supplemented by something like the Australian system.

The bill taxing dealing in futures is expected to come up in Congress this week. The bill was considered some time ago as practically dead, but the members from rural districts have been instigated by their dread of the Farmers' Alliance to take up the measure. Nearly all the members from city districts are opposed to the bill.

The friends of the River and Harbor bill are doing their best to get the bill into the Conference Committee of both Houses of Congress; but there are many obstacles in the way.

The National House of Representatives adopted a resolution setting apart Thursday and Saturday of this week for a consideration of the bill constituting eight hours a day's work, and relative to alien contract labor.

It is said that a movement is on foot to build a railroad from Shreveport through the coal beds of western Arkansas to Fort Smith, and the probable location of the car repair shops of the New Orleans Pacific division at Shreveport. The consummation of the enterprise is dependent on the coal deposits, which must prove of sufficient capacity to furnish fuel for the New Orleans Pacific railroad and coal the steamboats to New Orleans. Experts claim that the coal fields referred to are equal to every demand.

The convention of the Texas Farmers' Alliance, in session at Dallas, adjourned on August 23. The resolutions ask congressmen to make laws preserving the public domain for American colonization only; that laws, both State and National, be passed to regulate transportation for the benefit of the people, and for the unlimited coinage of gold and silver, to be supplemented by sufficient volume of treasury notes to supply the country without the intervention of the national bank.

An agent of the Louisiana Lottery Company was arrested in Washington, D. C., and about 1,000 tickets were seized by the local authorities.

FOREIGN.

The papers are congratulating Lord Salisbury upon the successful settlement of the dispute between England and Portugal, which at one time threatened to result in war. Though a conflict at arms with Portugal could hardly have ended otherwise than in a victory for England, yet the popular feeling was very strongly averse to a resort to force, and the peaceful conclusion of the affair is hailed with pleasure by all classes and parties.

About one hundred and fifty lives were lost in a cyclone in Vaud, Switzerland, on August 22.

The strike in Belgium is spreading. On August 22, 3,500 miners quit work, making a total of 11,500 men on strike in the Bariuaglua district.

The London Daily News publishes an urgent appeal to the public for active measures to prevent famine and misery in Ireland on account of the potato blight. The matter is declared to be one entirely apart from mere politics, and the appeal is to the instincts of the community. A national subscription on a large scale will soon be undertaken for the purpose of furnishing sufficient food for the inhabitants of the stricken district.

Chancellor von Caprivi had a conference with the Czar on August 23, which lasted an hour. Afterward he had a long interview with Foreign Minister De Giers. The officials of the foreign office maintain absolute silence regarding the nature of the German Emperor's proposals, but admit that there was immense political significance in the interview.

Several ladies prominent in London society have started a consumers' league, the object of which is to deal only with those stores the proprietors of which treat their employees with liberality and consideration in the matter of hours of work, wages, etc.

The new foreign policy of the Emperor of Germany, though only vaguely known, has aroused the ire of the old Bismarckian press. The Cologne Gazette assails Chancellor von Caprivi as assisting the Emperor in embarking upon an enterprise that will disturb the alliance formed by Bismarck. The Post, in a semi-official article, replies that Germany can exist without Bismarck, and that the government's policy has proved dignified, and, in every way, calculated to promote a permanent peace.

At the military manœuvers in Italy smokeless powder was used with great success. The batteries of artillery fired half an hour without their location being discovered.

Twenty thousand miners held a meeting at Chesterfield, England, on August 25, and voted in favor of a working day of eight hours.

It is said that the consuls at Apia have issued a proclamation in which they warn the natives against entering into any intrigues to replace King Mataafa.

Boils and Pimples and other affections arising from impure blood may appear at this season, when the blood is heated. Hood's Sarsaparilla removes the cause of these troubles by purifying, vitalizing and enriching the blood, and at the same time it gives strength to the whole system.

Information Wanted.

Why is it that the good people of Louisiana and Mississippi are so bitterly opposed to a recognition of the Lottery in the Louisiana Constitution, and so manifestly indifferent and some of them opposed to putting a clause in the Mississippi Constitution prohibiting the licensed liquor saloon? Is it because the liquor saloon is the less evil of the two, or that the people of Mississippi are not entitled to the same protection?

A satisfactory answer to the foregoing questions, and any other information on this important subject, will be highly appreciated by the readers of the ADVOCATE. READER.

Shiloh Camp Meeting.

The Shiloh Camp Meeting will embrace the fourth Sunday in September, commencing on Friday night before and closing on Wednesday, or Thursday morning following. All ministers, both traveling and local, are invited and urged to be in attendance. The camp ground is six miles southwest of Pelahatchie, V. and M. R. R. WESTMINSTER ABBEY—THE CHAPELS AND TOMBS—WESTMINSTER HALL—THE TOWER OF LONDON—THE WHITE TOWER—THE PLACE OF EXECUTION—THE GRAVES OF ANNE BOLEYN AND CATHARINE—THE BEHEADING AXE AND BLOCK—A VISIT TO GRAY'S "COUNTRY CHURCHYARD."

One of the first places a person desires to visit when in London is Westminster Abbey. The age of the building, its historic associations, its architectural excellence and, above all, its being the receptacle of royal dust, and the dust of the great and wise and good of past generations and centuries, make it to exercise a profound influence over the mind. The great columns of stone, rising to the loftiness of palm trees, and then branching out in ribs of granite over the ceiling, and interlacing, like the boughs of the forest trees, is the first thing that strikes the eye. This is what is called groined vaulting. The idea was taken from the sight of an avenue of lime-trees, with smooth, lofty trunks, and with arching boughs, knit together at the top. I have been in a number of cathedrals, and I discover that this conception is in them all—an avenue of granite trunks and limbs overhead. When these great columns line the transepts as well, crossing the nave at right angles, the feeling, as you walk amid their shadows, is not altogether unlike the sensation of wandering through mighty avenues of trees.

All along the inner walls of these cathedrals, and approaching the nave or center aisle twenty or thirty feet, are chapels fenced in and bedged off, so to speak, from the main body in various architectural ways, and by works of art and monuments of various kinds. Here are the places, or in the crypts below, in which the mighty in deed and noble in blood slumber their long sleep. As I was entering one to see the tomb of Queen Elizabeth, my eye happened to rest upon the stone floor, when suddenly I saw blossoming under my feet the name of Addison! I was walking over his ashes, as thousands do daily. It looks like sacrilege; but it seems a custom here, and nothing is thought of it. In these old cathedrals you literally walk upon the dead. Think of walking down the aisle over the tombstones and ashes of twenty individuals and families before sitting down in your pew to hear the gospel!

From the tomb of Elizabeth I went into another chapel to look on the spot where Mary, Queen of Scots, lies. She was beheaded and buried in another part of England; but her son, James the First, had her brought here after he came upon the throne. Her tomb is fully as rich as that of Elizabeth. In this same chapel I saw all in a row together, on marble slabs in the floor, the names of Charles the Second, William and Mary and Anne. Four sovereigns of England in a line, and no monument over their ashes, save the slabs that cover their bodies! Again and again I was forced to pause or sit down by weight of meditation.

They all sleep well. And they get along together better now than they did in life. The world was hardly large enough to satisfy some whose names I read here in stone; but a very small place now is sufficient to keep them. The oppressor and oppressed, the murderer and the murdered, are here close together, lying under the same roof, and their ashes shaken by the deep-toned roll of the same organ, whose music crashes down from amid the granite pillars above, and fills these vaults below.

James the First has several children buried in one of the chapels. I was much touched with a verse that was carved on the headstone of one of them. I copied it with my pencil.

"She tasted of the cup of life,
Too bitter 'twas to drain;
She put it meekly from her lips,
And went to sleep again."

I saw the empty tomb of Cromwell. After the Restoration his body was removed, and burned, I think, while his head was fastened on a spike on Westminster Hall near by, and kept there for years. As I was looking at the tomb, several ladies drew near, of a rough pattern, and one, with strong Hibernian accent, cried out in regard to Cromwell, "And was he hurled here?—the writch!" Well for the great that they do not hear all that is said about them. How thankful people ought to be that you can't well bear over a few yards, and that when we are dead we can not hear at all!

In the chapel of Edward the Confessor I saw the chair in which the kings and queens of England are crowned. Underneath the seat, and plain to view, is the celebrated stone of Scone, upon which the Scottish sovereigns sat during their coronation. If any would like to know concerning the architecture of this same chair, I can briefly, but truly, describe it. If you have a closet at home about four or five feet high, and two feet deep, just nail a broad plank inside at the proper sitting distance, and you have got the coronation chair of England.

In close proximity to Westminster Abbey is the House of Parliament, stretched in colossal proportions upon the banks of the Thames. Comparatively a modern building, I was not so much interested in it; but was much engrossed with a building in the rear, and now constituting a kind of anteroom for the parliamentary building. It is called Westminster Hall, and is replete with historic facts and thrilling events. It was for a long time the abode of royalty, and in it also Parliament sat for generations. In it Wallace was condemned to death, and so was Guy Fawkes. It was on one of its gable ends that the head of Cromwell was exposed. In front of it Sir Walter Raleigh was beheaded. You may be sure that it was an interested gaze that was cast upon the ordinary-looking and yet remarkable structure.

Another place I visited with profound interest was the Tower of London. This is fully three miles from Westminster Abbey, down the river. It is called the Tower, when really it is a cluster of towers. The central building, however, is the one that has given character and the name to the place. Conceive a deep moat, and a lofty wall surmounted or, rather, built into a number of strong towers, and enclosing a piece of ground of several acres in extent. Besides this, there is an inner wall. From the center of this enclosed ground rises a rectangular four-story building, sixty or eighty yards square, with a turret at each corner, and with walls fifteen feet thick. This building is called the White Tower. It was at one time a palace for the crowned heads of England; but was finally vacated by them for brighter and pleasanter abodes. It then became a prison for people of consequence, while under its shadow two places of execution were established, where the very best blood of England and Scotland was made to flow. It was in this central building that Sir Walter Raleigh was confined. And it was underneath the steps of the southern stairway of this same building that the skeletons of the two young princes, murdered by Richard the Third, were found. A slab in the wall announces the fact. They were killed in what is called the Bloody Tower; but were buried by Richard, as described, in the White Tower. The place is now used as a garrison, while the apartments and council chamber and great banqueting hall of a departed royalty have been transformed into magazines, armories, and a museum containing antiquities, relics, and interesting objects of all kinds. Among the mournful and painful things to be seen is the cloak on which Gen. Wolfe died in front of Quebec, a genuine thumb-screw, a model of the "rack," and the beheading axe and block upon which Lord Kilmarnock and others were executed. The axe has a blade eighteen inches broad, the headsman's iron mask is near it, while the block is hollowed out in front and rear for the reception of the breast on one side and the drooping of the face on the other. This hollowing reduces the top edge of the block to a narrow strip of three inches in width, on which the neck is laid. On that strip I observed, with a sick feeling at the heart, two deep gashes in the wood. They needed no explanation!

Between the central building and the western wall, in almost the center of the courtyard, is the spot where condemned females were beheaded. A stone slab marks the spot. Here Anne Boleyn and Catharine and Lady Jane Grey were executed. I took a seat under a tree and gave myself up to reflection. I have walked amid so many sepulchres lately, and marked the spots signalizing so many cruelties and atrocities of men, that the soul was powerless to shake off a spirit of deep pensiveness. I conjured up the scene as, one by one, at different periods, these lovely women stood there before me, confronting the heartless crowd, the ghastly block and axe, the masked headsman, and the grave and eternity. How the innocence and helplessness of the woman appealed from the brutality and injustice of man to the merciful God! And how I feel be, in infinite pity, drew near them at the trying hour!

In a small chapel, thirty yards from where I sit, lie side by side the bodies of the two murdered wives of Henry the Eighth. Verily, when this same Henry entered at death into perdition, Satan felt moved to resign and give him the throne! I firmly believe that there are some men who actually startle and horrify the devils. I foresee a revolution and strife in hell, before which the Miltonic angel-war fades into insignificance.

I remarked that only females were executed in the walls of the tower. The men were beheaded on Tower Hill, fully one hundred yards outside the walls. Lady Jane Grey and her husband were beheaded the same day. They were, as you know, a devoted couple. He was confined in Beauchamps Tower, and she in an adjoining house. I was shown the window through which she was looking when she saw the lifeless body of her husband brought in from Tower Hill. As my eyes followed the pointed finger of the guide to the window, it seemed that I could feel even then, after the long lapse of time, that gaze of unutterable agony. In a few minutes she was led to the block herself, and the husband and wife were reunited.

Has my letter been of rather a gloomy nature? Then will I conclude it with a brief description of a visit I paid "The Country Churchyard," where Gray wrote his elegy, and where he lies buried. The spot is thirty miles northwest of London, and about six east of Windsor. I went out in the evening, as being an appropriate time. Leaving the train at a town called Slough, I hired a cab, and rode two miles to the immortalized place. Over a country of a table-like level, through pleasant lanes bordered with fields of grain, and meadows on which I noticed grazing "the lowing herd," we went quietly and musingly along. By and by the road became lined with beech trees; then it turned down a lane thickly bordered with firs, and, turning sharply again, ran several hundred yards down an avenue of elm trees of largest size, whose interlacing boughs cast a deep, cool shadow underneath. A little farther on, and the driver stopped at a closed gate in a hedge, over which I could see a meadow, some portions of a field, a clump of trees, and a church spire. The driver was not allowed to go farther, and informed me I must pursue the rest of the way by myself. It was in perfect keeping with my feelings so to do. Taking the path, I walked over the meadow and stood by the gate, studying the features of the "country churchyard" before me. The enclosure is studded with trees, and is surrounded by them as well. A little to one side is the church-building, a structure of dark stone, with Gothic roof, and with a large, square tower at its side, rising up, at least, fifteen feet above the edge of the roof. The tower is covered from top to bottom with ivy. It was from this ivy-mantled tower that the owl hooted to the moon in complaint. As I look, facing west, upon the scene, the church is a little to the right, while to the left hand, in the small yard, and but a few steps from the building, is the "yew tree" mentioned in the poem. The elms are more numerous.

"Beneath those rugged elms that yew tree's shade,
Where heaves the turf in many a mouldering heap."

It is all just as he wrote. Under the wide, drooping boughs of the yew tree I noticed not less than fifty graves. It is worthy of note that there is but one yew tree in the churchyard, and if you examine the poem, you will notice but one is mentioned. This faithfulness to facts and correctness of description strikes the heart of the observer very gratefully. Turning your back upon the enclosure, and looking east, your eyes fall upon the scene that is described in the stanza beginning,

"Hard by yon wood."

Looking in several directions, you get views of open, grassy fields, over which the poet saw "the plowman plod," "the lowing herd wind its way," "the glimmering landscape fade," while his ear caught "the drowsy tinkling from the distant fold."

Certainly it is fitting that Thomas Gray should be buried in the midst of scenes whose quiet beauty he has made by his genius a priceless legacy to the world. He lies in a tomb by the side of his mother, near the church, between "the yew tree's shade" and "the ivy-mantled tower."

I have never left a place with greater reluctance than this. The rooks were cawing in the tree-tops. The sun was going down in the west. It was at such an hour that Gray viewed the scene, and, walking about in the gloaming, molded the lines of such unparalleled melody and beauty. I walked away, and lingered, turning often to take one other farewell look. And so I finally left the place; but in my soul I bore away the lovely scene with me as a precious possession forever.

B. CARRADINE.

In Memoriam.

REV. JAMES A. GODFREY.

Rev. James A. Godfrey died at the residence of his son, in Waynesboro, Miss., Wednesday, June 11, 1890, in the seventy-first year of his age. Another veteran in the army of the King has passed over to his reward. In labors more abundant, and in feebleness extreme, he has long been waiting for the call of the Master. When it came he was ready. He was stationed in Jackson, Miss., in 1855. During that year his charge was visited with a most terrible scourge of yellow fever. Everyone left the doomed city who could possibly get away, and among those who were compelled to remain the mortality was dreadful. He, as a faithful pastor, remained at his post, and was constantly engaged in visiting the sick, consoling the dying and burying the dead. He caught the contagion towards the last of the season and went down to the very gates of death, but was mercifully raised up. It was before he was taken sick, while the people were dying all around him, and while he himself was in hourly expectation of being stricken, that he wrote the appended communication to his presiding elder. As it contains his own account of the main incidents of his life, and as it shows his experiences as he stood face to face with destiny, it is considered best to insert it in his memoir just as he wrote it, viz:

I am in the midst of an alarming epidemic. I feel calm and firm in my purpose to stand to my post of duty, and submit all to the great Arbiter of all destiny. Should I fall, I feel assured that all will be well. I have the presence of my heavenly Father.

I have a simple request or two to make of you: First, as you know me well, and saw my last labors in the pulpit, please write my obituary, and in it give my kind love and Christian farewell to my brethren in the ministry and to the church generally.

I was born in South Carolina on July 20, 1819; was received into the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, by Rev. H. H. Montgomery; was licensed to preach by Rev. M. Yell, of the Memphis Conference; was received on trial in the Mississippi Conference, and was appointed to Starkville circuit in 1845; was returned to the same work in 1846; was ordained deacon that year by Bishop Soule; served Yazoo circuit, 1847 and '48; ordained elder that year by Bishop Andrew; appointed to Carroll circuit, 1849 and '50. That year I located. Remained local two years, but had charge of Carroll circuit the latter part of 1852. In the winter of that year I was re-admitted into the traveling connection, and was appointed to Clinton circuit for 1853 and 1854. I was stationed at Jackson, my present charge, in 1855.

During my service as a preacher, local and itinerant, I have received about eleven hundred white persons into the church and about five hundred colored people. On October 12, 1843, I was married to my beloved partner, Ann Maria Holmes, and truly—oh, how truly!—has she been my companion in every endearing and holy respect. A traveling preacher's wife, never did she cross or oppose me in my ministerial duties save once, and that was when I located. Would that I had heeded her mild monitions then! I commend her and my dear children to the church I love, in this solemn hour, and especially to my ministerial brethren, and to those whom I have received into the church, and, above all to the Great Head of the church, who tempers the wind to the shorn lamb! . . . I have endeavored to serve the church as best I could for twelve years, and have a hope that those who know me best will be kind to my wife and children.

One who could write thus when momentarily exposed to death must surely have had a strong grasp by faith upon the presence and promise of his heavenly Father. Though he was so ready for the summons at that time, yet it pleased God to add thirty-five years to his life. And the added years were as the past, and even more abundant in labors and faithfulness. He served some of the most important stations of the Conference, and was for many years presiding elder. In this latter position he seemed to take greatest delight. Keeping his own conveyance, he literally lived upon his district, and had the opportunity of visiting from house to house, as did his predecessors of the olden time. He loved the church of his choice, and enjoyed to the fullest extent its gracious privileges. Naturally of a warm, generous heart, he exulted in the doctrines and usages of American Methodism. He was very far removed from being a sectarian, but loved the other branches of the church of Christ, and was, in turn, loved and appreciated by them.

He was ardently attached to little children, and they always rejoiced at his coming, knowing that they would receive cheering words and kind attentions. He was fond of preaching to the children and had a happy faculty of interesting them.

He was a great revivalist. In his palmy days his appointments would be all ablaze with the convicting and converting power of the Holy Ghost. His sermons were sometimes peculiarly searching, and were delivered with telling effect. The survivors of the old Bethel Camp Ground, in Wilkinson county, Miss., were fond of telling about some of his efforts at that famous place. They remembered his texts, his apposite illustrations, and the effects produced upon the hearers.

One of the saddest experiences of his life was when his brethren saw fit to retire him from the active ministry. He could not realize that he was growing old, and it was the ambition of his life to die with the harness on—"to cease at once to work and live." As it was, he continued to preach as occasion served, even until he was stricken with his last illness.

Realizing that his work on earth was done, he calmly adjusted all his temporal matters. About ten days before his death he received the sacrament of the Lord's Supper with a few select friends. He repeated the consecration service as his presiding elder read it. His soul seemed to be filled with sacred joy. He sent the following message to the writer: "Give my love to Bro. Andrews, and tell him that I am still marching on, full of comfort, cheer, consolation and gladness."

Three of his ministerial brethren officiated at his funeral. The doors of the business houses in the village were closed through respect to him, and the sympathetic community turned out in large numbers to show their appreciation of his worth.

Thus an honored and a useful life was closed by a peaceful, triumphant death. He rests from his labors, and his works do follow him.

C. G. ANDREWS.

During the past week the Mississippi Convention has been hard at work in committees. A goodly number of plans and resolutions and suggestions have been considered. It is said that a report will be made in favor of woman suffrage. The eyes of the whole country is on this convention. In some respects, it may be regarded as the pioneer "blazing the way" into the future of the South!

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. G. W. Gordon writes from Coffeeville circuit, North Mississippi Conference, August 30, 1890: "Since our last report we have held two meetings, which resulted in forty-one accessions to our church. Have received ninety-five since Conference. Begin another to-morrow. Pray for us."

—Rev. H. P. Gibbs, Pleasant Grove, Miss., writes: "Mastodon, an afternoon school-house appointment on my charge, located in Mississippi bottom, has a Woman's Missionary Society of twenty members who have raised their 'pledge money,' pledged at Senatobia. If the above is likely to 'provoke others to good works,' please give it a place in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE."

—Rev. D. P. Bradford writes from Morton, Miss., August 27: "Last Friday night we closed one of the most delightful meetings I have enjoyed for a number of years. The church was graciously blessed; about a dozen conversions and five accessions. More men to pray in public. Bro. L. S. Jones was the efficient help. Our church at Pelahatchie will soon be ready for use after adding some $400 in improvements. At Forest we are looking for improvements. Monthly collections a success."

—Presiding Elder Mellen writes: "Your article anent the appointment of untried preachers to fill pastoral charges meets my unqualified approval. I have seen for some years the evil complained of, lamented its existence, and sought for a cure and found none, save that which you suggest. While the Mississippi Conference occupies a higher general intellectual plane than ever before, we do not yet measure up to the demands of the people. The day for 'boy preachers' has passed forever."

—Rev. H. P. Lewis writes us as follows from Benton, Miss., August 28: "Our ranks are being thinned by death and otherwise here in Benton. Three of our church members have died this year, viz: John North, Mrs. Mary A. Clark, and J. Covert Wilkins. The two last named died this week. Sister Clark was seventy years old; joined the church under the ministry of Rev. A. Shanks in 1811. Bro. Wilkins was a young man of fine promise. News of his death has brought sadness to many hearts. He died in Greenville, Miss., where he was in business as bookkeeper for some time. Surely we are losing some of our best members. God bless the bereaved ones!"

Appointments of Missionary Secretaries.

Owing to the resignation of Dr. Smith, the publication of the appointments of the Missionary Secretaries has been delayed. Dr. Morrison has visited the August Conferences assigned him. Dr. Potter will commence his work according to the following plan:

Dr. Morrison.—Missouri, Kentucky, Louisville, Western Virginia, Holston, Indian Mission, West Texas, Northwest Texas, Texas, North Texas, Memphis, North Alabama, North Georgia, Alabama, North Mississippi, Mississippi, White River.

Dr. Potter.—Los Angeles, Illinois, St. Louis, Southwest Missouri, Tennessee, Virginia, Arkansas, Western North Carolina, South Carolina, East Texas, Louisiana, Little Rock, North Carolina, South Georgia, Florida, Baltimore, Dr. John.—Mexican Border Mission, Central Mexico Mission, German Mission.

Notice.

MR. EDITOR: Please ask through your paper for numbers of July, 1867, October, 1867, and January, 1870, of Southern Review by Bledsoe. Should any be reported to you, I can afford to pay you fifty cents per number.

How bright and fair the world might be
Were men more often known
To try and mend—not other's faults—
But, better far, their own;
Did we but try mankind to teach
A nobler, better way,
Not merely by a formal speech,
But actions, day by day.

How bright and fair this life might be,
No more a troubled dream,
If men would live for what they are,
And not for what they seem;
Did we but garner less of wealth,
Which leads so oft astray,
And more of mind and soul delights,
That can not pass away.

How bright and fair this world might be,
What marvels 'twould unfold,
If men would do one-half for love
That now they do for gold;
If we to truer, simpler ways
Were only more inclined,
We then should learn life's choicest gifts
Are health and peace of mind.

The Sabbath Day: Its Sanctity, Its Duties, Its Privileges.

(Concluded.)

II.—THE DUTIES OF THE SABBATH.

They are (1) Negative and (2) Positive.

1. The negative duties are very explicitly set forth in the Fourth Commandment itself: . . . "In it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates." A broad term is "any work," and comprehensive, condemning every kind of labor, whether of man or of beast. It is intended to close the factory and the machine shop, to stop the steamboat and the railroad train, to lock the merchant's storehouse and bar the livery stable, to halt the plow and unharness the horse in the furrow, to silence the hum of the cotton gin and of the grist mill, to call the fireman from the engine and the cook from the stove, the lawyer from his office and the judge from the bench; and from all work to summon all the children of men. That is the intent of the law and the scope of the commandment. He who disregards this law does so not only at the peril of his immortality, but also at the risk of great financial loss. Its violation carries with it its own penalty. The sin and the curse go together. They are one and inseparable. Spiritual loss is always the immediate result; and, sooner or later, the financial failure follows.

Some years ago I was preaching in a town where there were cotton factories and other industries owned by rich church members—Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Methodists, and others. These mill owners were nearly always prompt in attendance upon their respective churches, and contributed with measurable liberality to support the institutions of the churches. But while they were in their comfortable pews listening to the gospel of the blessed Jesus, poor men were at the factories cleaning boilers, and repairing machinery, and getting double wages for Sunday work, and for the price of their salvation! I remonstrated with the mill owners, and begged them to stop such shameless Sabbath desecration; but deaf ears were turned to my appeals, and all sorts of excuses given in answer to my requests. The expense would be too great. It was a work of necessity. It was a work of charity. The poor operatives could not afford the loss of a day's wages. The men were not compelled to work on Sunday; they did it voluntarily. Such were some of the excuses. Time passed on. God is patient, and sometimes there seems to be no limit to his forbearance. But one Saturday morning early the whole town was startled by a tremendous explosion. A defective boiler had burst (material was on hand for $75 worth of repairs to be made on the morrow!), and the mill was damaged to the extent of $50,000 or $100,000; several lives were lost, and a number of persons severely injured, and hundreds of the poor operatives were thrown out of employment for three or four months. Would it not have been better to have dispensed with all Sunday work, closed the mills a few hours sooner every Saturday, and once or twice a month to have shut down for a whole day? Would not the loss have been very much less to the poor operatives as well as to the rich mill owners? Would there have been the blood of the slain to cry to God for vengeance?

I knew a man of commanding intellect, the rival of Edward Everett at college, and the peer of him who is usually called the matchless Prentiss. I knew such an one, who, entering into the possession of a vast, but encumbered, estate, undertook to make the estate pay the debts by forcing his slaves and his cattle to till the soil on Sunday as well as on the other days. He died in abject poverty, the beneficiary of the bounty of his former slaves; a miserable wreck, financially, intellectually, and morally.

(2) This is a Christian government—at least, the geographies and histories say so—yet postoffices are kept open, mails received, opened, distributed, delivered, made up, and transported on Sunday; and some preachers and many church members go or send to the postoffice, and get and read their mail on Sunday, and then innocently ask, "What harm is done?" "Thy servant," the postmaster; "thy servants," the clerks; "thy servant," the route agent; "thy servants," the railroad men on the train and in the depot, numbering more than a million, if not quite two millions, in these United States, are made to "work," and not permitted to "remember the Sabbath day and keep it holy." And yet they have souls to be saved or souls to be damned. To which does their Sunday work tend?

(3) Telegraph offices are kept open, and messages sent hither and thither over the land; and to do this men are kept away from the churches of God and in their offices. The necessities of business is the justification pleaded. In other words, the "almighty dollar" is set above Almighty God, and religion is made to give place to the demands of trade. And yet, when the operators, worn out by the demands of unscrupulous task-masters, effected an organized resistance some years ago, the business interests of the country suffered far greater loss than if every telegraph office had been closed every Sunday since the electric wires began to connect city with city, and town with town.

(4) Livery stables are kept open, and horses and buggies are hired, as if there were no law, human or divine, in the land; and the side doors, or the back doors, of stores are kept a little ajar for just a little convenient Sunday traffic, as though God was not caring nor observing, as though he was as regardless of the transgression of divine laws as mayors and town marshals are of the violation of human statutes, State laws or town ordinances.

(5) And these Sunday trains, which great corporations run in defiance of divine law and in utter disregard of human freedom, and on which some preachers and church members delight to ride, think you there is no harm in them? and think you this evil can go on unchecked of God and unpunished? Ask the managers of the Jay Gould system of railways, and read the record of the "great strike" of a few years ago; some of the pages written in human blood and punctuated by bowie knives and bullets! The managers had taught their conductors and brakesmen, their engineers and firemen, their master mechanics and laborers to disregard the Fourth Commandment; and in learning this lesson of disobedience to God, they had learned other lessons, no worse, morally, though very destructive to their teachers, who, for Sunday wages and for the convenience of some preachers and many church members, had bought the souls of those who felt compelled to do their bidding or starve! And the end is not yet! God hears "the voice of the poor man's outraged freedom," and he who is not unmindful of a sparrow's fall will one day make bare his mighty arm in behalf of burdened humanity. It will then be better for railway magnates and all preachers and church members who use Sunday trains, had they never been born! It were better for them that a great millstone were hanged about their necks and they were drowned in the depths of the sea! (Matt. xviii. 6.) "For they have sown the wind, and they shall reap the whirlwind." (Hosea viii, 7.) They "may buy the poor for silver, and the needy for a pair of shoes" now, but "the Lord hath sworn by the excellency of Jacob, Surely I will never forget any of their works." (Amos viii, 6, 7.) "From my lofty seat on the elevated railway, as I went to church" (on Sunday), "I looked in through open third and fourth-story windows upon scores and hundreds of operatives hard at work in shirt-making and tailoring establishments. My heart bled for them."—(New York Letter in NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, July 31, 1890.) Was there no heart-bleeding for the railroad men, who must take preachers and people to church, but can not go themselves?

(a) But will not the trains be run on Sunday even if we preachers and church members do not travel on them? Possibly; but what of that? Is that any reason for my being a party to the wrong? Some people will commit adultery; shall you or I, therefore, be the other party? Some men will commit murder; shall I, therefore, put a pistol or a knife into their hands, and thereby encourage them to the dastardly deed? "My son, if sinners entice thee, consent thou not." (Prov. i, 10.) If all the world does wrong, it does not excuse my wrong-doing. Not in the varying customs, or in the ever-varying opinions of men, am I to find the rule of conduct; but in the immutable law of God—the only and the all-sufficient standard of conduct, of faith, and of life.

I said possibly these trains might continue to run on Sunday if preachers and church members did not ride on them; but I do not believe it to be probable. I am more than inclined to agree with that conductor on the V. and M. R. R., who, when asked by a member of the Mississippi Conference (Methodist Episcopal Church, South), "When do you railroad men intend to stop running your Sunday trains?" answered very promptly, "Whenever you Christians quit riding on them!" I have never envied that brother because of his feelings on that occasion.

A year or two ago, before the International Young Men's Christian Association, in Philadelphia, Mr. Pitcairn, superintendent of the Pennsylvania Central railroad, in an address said: "You churchmen do more than anyone else to keep up Sunday trains. If you would all oppose it, and go about it the right way, the wheels would all stop. If you will go to my office with me, I will show you letters from ministers, church committees, camp meetings and seaside churches, asking for Sunday excursions and special rates, that would keep you reading for a day. When the churches say, 'We want the Sunday train to stop!' it will stop, and not before." O my brethren! shall we not by example, as well as by Conference resolutions, say: "Stop the Sunday train! Let the railroad men rest. Let their souls be saved as well as ours."

(b) But is it not as wrong to use a horse as to use the cars on Sunday? The unnecessary use of a horse on Sunday is wrong; but not as grievous as the use of the cars—the difference being, however, only in degree, and not in kind. One might, in an emergency, use a horse on Sunday; and one might, in an emergency, use a special train on Sunday; but no emergency can justify a Christian's using one of these regular Sunday trains or a Sunday excursion train. When Wesson and Beauregard, Miss., were devastated by that terrible cyclone in April, 1883, it was right and proper to make use of special trains to carry relief; but neither right nor proper to go on an excursion just to look at the disaster wrought. To make use of a train run in defiance of divine law and human rights makes me a partaker in the sin of those who fear not God, neither regard man. (Luke xviii, 2.) Our very presence on such a train, like our presence in a gambling hell or a bawdy house—the difference here is in kind, and not in degree—encourages others to do evil, and that continually. We can not be too careful. Like Paul, we must exercise ourselves to have always a conscience void of offense toward God and toward men. (Acts xxiv, 16.) And when an evil is so notorious as the running of these Sunday trains, to have a clear conscience we must let them severely alone. (I. Cor. viii, 13.)

(c) But suppose a mother, a wife, or a child be sick, and I am called to what is supposed to be a death-bed, may I not go on a Sunday train? Better, far better—and I say this out of the depths of a blessed personal experience—trust the loved one to the physician's skill and to our heavenly Father's power, and wait till Monday. Pardon this reference to my personal experience. In the fall of 1886 I was assisting in a meeting at Brandon, Miss., my family residence being the parsonage in Bolton, about thirty-five miles distant. Sunday morning, just as I was about to enter the pulpit, a telegram was put into my hands. My custom is to put such things in my pocket, and not read them before Monday morning. If it be good news, it will keep; if bad, I will not be disturbed during Sunday. I have not gone or sent to the postoffice on Sunday for many years. But inadvertently I tore the telegram open and read it. It was from my family physician, and read as follows: "Your daughter is very sick. Come home immediately." My first impulse was to hurry to the depot, a mile distant, and take the first train which would pass in about thirty minutes; but then I thought, Dare I do this? Can I afford to break the record of years? Have I not been preaching against Sunday travel, and begging the people in my charge not to use the Sunday trains? Would they see or admit the difference in my using the train to go to my sick child, and their using the train to go to the New Orleans Cotton Exposition, or to visit their friends in Edwards or Jackson? How would my acquaintances on the train know why I was traveling on Sunday? Quickly these thoughts and others flashed through my mind. A conclusion was soon reached: I will not go home today. If I had a buggy and horse, I would go. I dare not use the train. I will commit my child into God's care, and ask him, at least, to spare her till I get home. Up went my heart in prayer to God. I entered the pulpit, preached that morning, and again that night. Early next morning I left, and got home before breakfast, to find my child better! She is with us still. In this instance God tried me, and I tried God, and, blessed be his holy name! I will trust him again and always! No man ever regretted trusting God. "If ye love me, keep my commandments." (John xiv, 15.) "He that loveth father or mother more than me, is not worthy of me: and he that loveth son or daughter more than me, is not worthy of me." (Matt. x, 37.)

(d) But suppose I take the train at ten or eleven o'clock, Sunday night, or use it for only a few miles, is that so very wrong? "Behold now, this city is near to flee unto, and it is a little one: Oh, let me escape thither (is it not a little one?), and my soul shall live" (Gen. xix, 20), was the cry of Lot when God had ordered him to escape for his life; to look not behind him, neither stay in all the plain where the wicked cities were; but to escape to the mountains. And Lot has his imitators now. Is not a man a thief, whether he steals a nickel or a million dollars? Is he not a liar, whether the lie told be little or big? And is not a man a Sabbath-breaker and a sinner,

"Whether it be morning,
Or whether it be evening," that he voluntarily rides on a Sunday train? Certainly it is murder whether "a little" strychnine or fifty pounds of dynamite be used to kill a man; and it is murder whether the victim be a man or a baby born or unborn. All sin is sin, whether it be a big sin or "such a little one," and God hates all sin.

(e) But it saves time and expense. Yes, and loses your soul! But what shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul? (Matt. xvi, 26) or gain time on earth and lose eternity in heaven?

(f) But it is so convenient. Yes, and so oftentimes is another man's property; but I have never heard of the plea of convenience acquitting a thief, or excusing lying or adultery. Rather let us be subject to inconvenience, and to delay and to expense, than to set an example for evil, bring reproach on the cause of Christ, and purchase for ourselves eternal damnation. We will find no conveniences in hell. O brethren! let us avoid all kinds of evil. Let us obey God and trust him. "Fear God, and keep his commandments." (Ecc. xii, 13.) "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." (Rev. ii, 10.)

(g) But if it is the Lord's work which I go to do, is not that the test, and may I not unhesitatingly use the Sunday train? Does "the end justify the means," as the Jesuits teach? May we not do evil that good may come? No! no! no! Every sin is a perverted blessing. I have known a man to commit sin by reading his Bible, when duty demanded his undivided attention to the work he had been employed to do, and his negligence wrought damage to his employers. And no sin can ever be made holy. God may forgive the sin and cleanse the sinner; but the sin will always be hateful to him.

(6) As "God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it" (Gen. ii, 3), and we are commanded to "remember the Sabbath day and keep it holy" (Ex. xx, 8), we must not make it a day of pleasure-seeking. It is a holy day, and not a holiday. We must avoid excursions on the cars, in buggies or on horseback, whether to camp meetings, country churches or theatres. Of course, we need not mention hunting and fishing, whisky selling and whisky drinking, picnicking and card playing, fashionable visiting and dinner parties, boat rides, theatre going and Easter breakfasts, and such other things in which the world delights, but which ought not to be named as probable to be perpetrated among a church-going people. But wherever named, they are only named to be condemned.

Because of Israel's failure to observe the negative duties of the Sabbath, we read in the Bible this historical fact: "And them that had escaped from the sword carried he away to Babylon; where they were servants to him and his sons until the reign of the kingdom of Persia; to fulfill the word of the Lord by the mouth of Jeremiah, until the land had enjoyed her Sabbaths; for as long as she lay desolate she kept Sabbaths to fulfill threescore and ten years." (II. Chron. xxvi, 20, 21.)

2. The positive duties of the Sabbath.

These may be briefly summed up:

(1) To rest from all unhallowed toil.

(2) As Christ was always prompt and faithful in attendance on the services of the synagogue, so should we be prompt and faithful in attendance on the services of the sanctuary. "And as his custom was, he went into the synagogue." (Luke iv, 16.) "Not forsaking the assembling of yourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another: and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching." (Heb. x, 25.)

(3) To do deeds of mercy:

(a) To dumb beasts. "And he said unto them, What man shall there be among you, that shall have one sheep, and if it fall into a pit on the Sabbath day, will he not lay hold on it and lift it out?" (Matt. xii, 11.)

(b) And as man, made in the image of God, is much better than a sheep, it is lawful to do well on the Sabbath day; to heal the sick (Matt. xii, 10-12); visit them that are sick or in prison, and to relieve the poor and needy.

III.—THE PRIVILEGES OF THE SABBATH.

If our hearts be right before God, and we have the mind of Christ (I. Cor. ii, 16) and the spirit of Christ (Rom. viii, 9), the duties just enumerated are transformed into glorious privileges, and we are devoutly thankful to Almighty God for the day the Lord hath made. We rejoice in its rest from work, its freedom from care. We hail it as a perpetual reminder of the resurrection of our Lord and Savior, Jesus the Christ, and of the resurrection and glorification of our own vile bodies. (Phil. iii, 21.) We hail it as a perennial type of the rest that remaineth to the people of God (Heb. iv, 9), and of that home where praise shall be the loved employ of those who loved to pray while here, and where from glory to glory we shall advance as we go on from grace to grace here; and where, crowned with righteousness (II. Tim. iv, 8), glory (I. Pet. v, 4), and life (Rev. ii, 10), we shall abide forever with Him who is the chiefest among ten thousand and altogether lovely. (Cant. v, 10, 16.)

2. Especial communion, sweet communion with God our Father and Blessed Savior, through and by the help of the Holy Spirit, who is one with the Father and the Son in the Ever Adorable Trinity. How joyous are such occasions to the soul consecrated to the service of God, and whose earnest cry is, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" (Acts ix, 6.) For while the soul is not shut up to one day for such communion, and while God is always so near to us that to every "O my Father!" comes a "Here, my child!"—yet the cares and perplexities of business life and household drudgery, the weariness of the body are so apt to interfere and mar that blissful communion between us and our God; but with the Sabbath's dawn these burdens are laid aside, and

"From the low train of mortal toys
We soar to reach immortal joys."

Baptized anew with the Holy Ghost, refreshed by new supplies of grace, our hearts warmed into a quicker throb, and our souls led into a higher life and a closer walk with God, our hopes made brighter and our vision enraptured by fuller displays of the divine glory, we are the better fitted for the duties of the coming week. We learn to long for the return of the day that saw the Lord arise, and to love the appearing (II. Tim. iv, 8) of the Lord Jesus, when he shall come to be glorified in his saints (II. Thess. i, 9), and so shall we be ever with the Lord. (II. Thess. iv, 17.) "For God hath not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain salvation through our Lord Jesus Christ, who died for us, that, whether we wake or sleep, we should live together with him." (I. Thess. v, 9, 10.) Amen!

The Brookhaven District High School.

The high school of the Brookhaven district, Mississippi Conference, has been located at Adams, and will open its first session on the first Monday in September. Adams is a country church, beautifully located, nine and a half miles west from Summit, on a splendid road. This is one of the most moral neighborhoods to be found and the best place for raising boys I ever saw. A spirit of religion pervades the community, and the boys are not exceptions. Here, too, a sick person, friend or stranger, receives the best attention, though the health of the place is so good that there are but few sick to receive the ready care.

Prof. Maxey Smith has charge of the school, with the necessary assistants, and this insures successful instruction and discipline. He is not only an able, but also a zealous, educator, looking after every interest alike. Board and tuition will be afforded as cheaply as any institution of like kind and character can supply. Mail is received and forwarded from once to six times a week (the postoffice being Auburn).

Anyone wishing to send children to school would do well to write for further information and particulars to Prof. Maxey Smith, Auburn, Lincoln county, Miss.

H. M. ELLIS,
Pastor at Adams.

There was a meeting of the committee of the Brookhaven District High School, at Summit, Miss., August 7, 1890. T. S. West, chairman, called the committee together. There were present: T. S. West, C. E. Hudson, Murray G. Felder, and J. E. Carruth, of the committee; Rev. B. S. Rayner, J. P. Carruth, G. Bancroft and W. H. Wood, visiting brethren. On motion, J. E. Carruth was elected secretary.

After some discussion by some of the brethren, it was moved and seconded that the Brookhaven District High School, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, be located at Adams Church, near Auburn P. O., in Lincoln county, Miss. The motion was put and carried unanimously.

It was moved and seconded that the chair appoint ten trustees for the said District High School, and the pastor of the church at Adams be ex-officio member of the Board. It was carried, and the following were appointed: J. P. Carruth, W. A. King, C. E. Hudson, S. J. Hodges, G. B. Smith, W. H. Wood, W. G. Felder, J. E. Carruth, T. R. Godbolt and J. E. Denman.

It was moved and seconded that this Board of Trustees be instructed to go forward, raise means, put up the building, employ teachers and begin the school.

It was moved and seconded that all the preachers in the district be requested to act as agents for this school, soliciting subscriptions to help put up the building and to increase the patronage.

It was moved and seconded that a copy of those minutes be furnished the papers in the district and the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE for publication.

On motion the committee adjourned.

"The Book and Its Theme."

This is the title of a recent issue from the press. I like it. "The Book" is the Bible. Its theme is holiness. It is plain, well-written, terse and strong, is good and edifying reading. Any book or sermon that exalts Jesus, shows the corruption and depravity of the heart and points out the sovereign remedy for its cure, I heartily commend. The blessed Bible, as the divine and authentic Word of God, furnishes the argument and fire.

The author—Rev. L. L. Pickett, of Columbia, S. C.—is a brave and fearless defender and expounder of the Scriptures, emphasizing all the cardinal doctrines of Christianity.

We welcome all such books among our people, and bid it God-speed in its mission.

MANSFIELD, LA.

A New Parsonage.

The Dalevillie congregation abound in the grace of liberality. A total membership of twenty-three last year, they built a handsome house of worship costing $1,000, and then asked to be made a station. Their young pastor and his bride were cordially received, and a good salary allowed, and that has been paid quarterly in advance. About forty-five members have been added during the year, and now a parsonage has been purchased at a cost of $800. The house is new, well-built, tastefully painted, and has room enough for an orthodox Methodist preacher's family. Next after the Enterprise parsonage, it is the best in the district.

BOOKS.

THE ANATOMY OF ATHEISM, AS DEMONSTRATED IN THE LIGHT OF THE CONSTITUTION AND LAWS OF NATURE. By Rev. H. H. Moore, D. D. Cranston and Stowe, Cincinnati; Hunt and Eaton, New York. Price, $1 50.

This book is a thorough review and analysis of the teaching of Ingersoll, the modern apostle of atheism. The statement of Ingersoll's position on religion is fair and clear; the argument to prove that he has absolutely no foundation upon which to stand is strong and invincible. The argument is well arranged and proceeds in a cumulative way to show how untenable are the positions held by the enemy, and then to explode a mine of truth under them and shatter them to atoms. The book is timely and will do good service in the cause of religion.

THE PRINCE OF PEACE. By Isabella M. Alden (Pansy). John Y. Huber Company, Philadelphia and St. Louis.

This is Pansy's latest book, and it is her masterpiece, the crown of her literary efforts. There is no life so beautiful as the life of Jesus, and Pansy's piety and taste and judgment have wrought together to produce one of the most beautiful "lives" of Jesus that has ever appeared. To say that Pansy has written on this subject is to raise the wish in every reader of her books to get this last book as soon as possible. The publishers have given the "life" a superb setting. The paper, type, etc., are all that could be desired, and there are over 200 masterpieces of illustrative art, engravings, photogravures and illuminated lithographs. Altogether, we have not seen such a superb book in a long time.

Topisaw Camp Meeting.

This camp ground is situated on a grassy plot, in a beautiful grove, on the clear and flowing stream of Topisaw, ten miles northeast of McComb City, Miss. The tents had just been whitewashed and everything put in nice order, all presenting a beautiful and an inviting appearance. The brethren agreed in the verdict that it was the prettiest camp ground they had ever seen, except Seashore. It is one of the strongest and best Methodist communities in this section of country. About forty families tented on the grounds. The tents encircle three-fourths of the grounds, the church, school-building and hotel occupying a part of the remaining fourth, with the large and elegant tabernacle in the centre.

The meeting was held August 8–15, 1890. The weather was fine, and excellent order prevailed. The attendance was larger than ever before.

The following traveling preachers, besides a number of local brethren, were present: Bishop Galloway, Presidiog Elder Lewis, Dr. West, Bros. McLaurin, Hopper, Keen, Howard, Sibley, Hewse, Pugh, Hoover and this writer. The preaching was plain, pure gospel, often accompanied by immediate and great results. Lay brethren and elect sisters were abundant in labors, prayers, songs, etc., and added largely to the work accomplished.

On Sunday, Bishop Galloway, after one of his best sermons, collected for Millsaps College about $1,350. Wednesday, Bro. McLaurin presented the Bible cause, and raised $106. Bro. Hopper took his "Conference Endowment Fund" collection privately, amounting to about $150.

I do not knew the number of conversions, but would not place the estimate below 100. There were 17 accessions. The people are nearly all in the church.

Some things deserve special mention. In the men's grove prayer meeting, on Wednesday evening, the subject of bad habits was brought up. Stress was put on the tobacco habit. One brother, past middle age, with a large family of boys, resolved to quit it, and at once threw his tobacco into the middle of the circle. Others followed, emptying tobacco, tobacco sacks, etc., on the ground. As far as we know, all present, except a few old men, promised to use no more tobacco. Chewing gum was also thrown into the ring. This done, they proceeded to renounce bad habits generally. The following day, at the early morning service, Bro. F. M. Keen, tall and of imposing appearance, arose in the pulpit and related the familiar story of the preacher who returned the deed to the property which had been given him, because he could not sing the hymn,

"No foot of land do I possess,
No cottage in this wilderness," and told them that he too, had, a hymn which he could not sing in his present condition. He proceeded to draw from his pockets cigars, tobacco sacks and cigarette books (all in the plural), throwing them in front of the pulpit, after which he proceeded to sing, "The Land of Beulah," while others shouted. Still others on the grounds gave up their tobacco, and thus the good work went on. On this same memorable morning, Bro. Hicks M. Ellis, forty miles from these scenes, deliberately emptied his tobacco sack, vowing to the Lord to use no more.

The services of this morning, like many others, continued far beyond their time, beginning at 8 o'clock and running until after 11 o'clock. Not a few promised to erect family altars.

Upon the whole, we do not remember to have seen a more delightful and successful meeting. Our Topisaw community is, and has all this year been, in fine condition. The congregations are large and appreciative. The finances are fully up. The contributions in the month of May for Conference collections amounted to $166.

ROCKY SPRINGS CIRCUIT.

The good Lord has wonderfully blessed us in our revival meetings on this circuit. I began a meeting at Hermanville on the third Sunday in July, and continued for six days. There were six valuable accessions to the church. This meeting embraced our third Quarterly Conference, and caused our beloved presiding elder to be with us. The following brethren did valuable service in the meeting: J. M. Morse, of Carthage station; N. J. Roberts, of Utica circuit, and W. P. Jones, of Burtonton circuit.

On the fourth Sunday in July I began a meeting at Center Grove, and continued for six days. God was present from the very first service to bless and save souls. I was assisted in this meeting by Rev. J. M. Morse, who preached the Word with great power and acceptability. Forty-nine joined the church, sixty professed conversion, and one hundred and sixteen promised to lead better lives. This was the most spiritual meeting I ever attended—hardened sinners accepted salvation and are now asking blessings at their tables and praying in their families. This was, indeed, a "time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord."

On the first Sunday in August I began at Ingleside, on the L., N. O. and T. R. R., and continued six days. Bro. Morse assisted me in this meeting, and preached with power and earnestness, which soon won all hearts to him. Twenty-four joined the church, several old feuds settled, a prayer meeting organized with eleven to pray in public, where there has been but one heretofore, and all the collections ordered by the Annual Conference secured.

Last Sunday I began at Hickory Ridge, and continued four days. Fifty joined the church, and all Conference assessments paid in full. Rev. N. J. Roberts assisted me in this meeting. Up to date I have received one hundred and thirty-one members, and have one other meeting to hold. I will have a full report at Annual Conference. I forgot to say we bought an organ for Rocky Springs Church. To God be all the praise.

V. D. SKIPPER.

ADAMS CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Our Adams' protracted meeting closed Sunday evening, August 3, after ten days of labor and reward. Dr. T. S. West was with us during the first, and Bro. A. F. Watkins during the last part of meeting, and both have our hearty thanks for their faithful and efficient labors. While this meeting was not as productive of noise as many preceding ones, yet I am satisfied that the work done was as thorough, permanent and healthful as could be desired, and will prove a substantial blessing to the church and community for years to come. The figures in the result run thus: Professions of religion, forty or fifty; applicants for church membership, twenty-seven—twenty-five of whom have been received; and children baptized, eight. The good to the church is beyond estimation.

On Sunday, July 27, Dr. West advised the community to bid for the location of the projected Brookhaven District High School, and so readily did they receive, and so diligently act upon his counsel, that by Tuesday evening a subscription of $1,250 had been privately raised, and several hundred more in sight.

On the following Friday, Bro. Watkins presented the claims of Millsaps College, much against the wishes of the comparatively small congregation, and, to the surprise of all, met a hearty response in notes and subscriptions amounting to $1,006 50, and more to come. The old opinion that religious revivals and collections can not go together got such a black eye that it will not again be found around Adams soon. We thank God for his goodness and mercy, and with new zeal and faith press on. I hold two other meetings next month. Pray for us, that the result may be the glory of God and the salvation of souls.

CARROLLTON CIRCUIT, NORTH MISSISSIPPI.

The third Quarterly Conference for Carrollton circuit, Grenada district, North Mississippi Conference, was held by the Rev. J. W. Price, P. E., August 2 and 3, in our new church at Colla Springs. There were present each day between six and seven hundred people.

The new church was dedicated on the Sabbath by the Rev. J. W. Price, P. E. The house of God is a frame building, 32x55, arched ceiling, valued at $1,000, and named by the trustees "Cogdell Chapel." Every debt had been paid before the day of dedication.

Bro. Price preached us three very fine sermons with happy effect. He left us on Monday, which was regretted by all.

The pastor protracted the meeting until the following Saturday night. We had 45 additions on profession of faith; baptized 35 adults and 16 infants.

The next week I held a meeting at Smith Chapel. A wonderful work of grace in the church, and 10 additions to the church, with two more to be received. To God be all the glory for this work. We have received 72 persons to date.

CAMPBELLSVILLE, MISS.

Just closed a glorious meeting at Campbellsville and returned to Bethel, where we had a glorious meeting a few weeks ago. Thank God, I found the church at work holding prayer meetings twice a week, the Baptist brethren helping them. I am glad our congregations are large and attentive. I have never seen more unity. We had seven additions at Campbellsville, and several conversions. Others expressed themselves, saying they thought of joining soon. Received two members at Bethel to-day. Will preach at Bethel Church to-night, and leave on my way to a point on Sunflower river, to organize a church. God is blessing us very much. Some sickness; not fatal. Pray for us.

LIVE OAK CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Our third quarterly meeting of Live Oak circuit, Woodville district, was held at Pine Grove Church, August 9 and 10, which was protracted for one week. On the very opening of the meeting it was seen that the presence and power of the Holy Ghost was upon the people. The preaching was with power. Bro. C. McDonald, our presiding elder, remained with us until Monday evening, after which our preacher in charge, Bro. E. T. Denson, conducted the meeting with the help of several lay members, who did efficient work, especially Bros. J. S. Hodges, of East Feliciana parish, and A. W. Turner, of Livingston. The meeting resulted in the erection of several family altars; thirty accessions to the church. Young men and young women, little boys and girls and a few old members of the church were heard to pray in the prayer meeting that had never been heard before.

PINE GROVE, LA.

AMERICUS CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

I have just closed my fifth protracted meeting. The preaching was done by Bros. M. L. White, S. D. Goff, D. C. Rolls, E. Roberts, J. King and W. W. Breem. The Word preached proved to be seed sown in good ground, that is bringing forth fruit to the honor and glory of God. We have had a grand revival at every point. God is blessing our labors. Twenty accessions and double as many conversions; twenty-five children baptized. Prayer meetings are well attended and Sabbath-school is doing well. Finances are behind, but will be paid. We praise God for the victory, give him all the glory, and press onward happy in his love.

LYMAN R. ROBERTS.

CLEVELAND, MISS.

The revivals at Cleveland and Shelby have been of unusual power. We have 45 accessions up to date, 36 conversions; have liquidated a church debt of $2,000 at Cleveland. My people are a very generous, kind people. "The Lord has done great things for us." We have had the efficient services of Revs. J. W. Price, T. W. Dye, R. M. Standefer, J. H. Shumaker and R. H. B. Gladney. Dr. Price did the preaching at Cleveland. He preached "with power and demonstration of the Spirit." Our work here is in fifty per cent. better condition than when we came last December. We hope to have a clean balance-sheet at Conference.

O. L. SAVAGE, P. C.

CARTHAGE STATION, MISS.

We closed a very successful meeting, the first Sunday in July, at this place. The meeting continued eight days; eleven joined the church, and the membership was greatly revived. Rev. V. D. Skipper was with me all the time, and preached all but two sermons, and the people were greatly edified by his sermons. Bro. J. R. Gerald was with me and preached twice, urging the people to a better life. Our church here is improving on some lines, and the people are becoming more liberal and, I hope, more spiritual.

J. M. MORSE.

UTICA CHARGE, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

We have just closed an interesting meeting of seven days at Bear Creek. I commenced on Saturday, preaching twice a day without any ministerial help, until the last two days of the meeting Bro. L. S. Jones, of Bolton, came to my relief. The meeting resulted in about fifty conversions and thirty-nine accessions to the church. We have received eighty into the church up to date, and baptized thirty-three children. We go on our way rejoicing. Pray for us.

The Liver

When out of order, involves every organ of the body. Remedies for some other derangement are frequently taken without the least effect, because it is the liver which is the real source of the trouble, and until that is set right there can be no health, strength, or comfort in any part of the system. Mercury, in some form, is a common specific for a sluggish liver; but a far safer and more effective medicine is

Ayer's Pills.

For loss of appetite, bilious troubles, constipation, indigestion, and sick headache, these Pills are unsurpassed.

"For a long time I was a sufferer from stomach, liver, and kidney troubles, experiencing much difficulty in digestion, with severe pains in the lumbar region and other parts of the body. Having tried a variety of remedies, including warm baths, with only temporary relief, about three months ago I began the use of Ayer's Pills, and my health is so much improved that I gladly testify to the superior merits of this medicine."—Manoel Jorge Pereira, Porto, Portugal.

"For the cure of headache, Ayer's Cathartic Pills are the most effective medicine I ever used."—R. K. James, Dorchester, Mass.

"When I feel the need of a cathartic, I take Ayer's Pills, and find them to be more effective than any other pill I ever took."—Mrs. B. C. Grubb, Burwellville, Va.

"I have found in Ayer's Pills, an invaluable remedy for constipation, biliousness, and kindred disorders, peculiar to miasmatic localities. Taken in small and frequent doses, these Pills on the liver, restoring its natural powers, and aiding it in throwing off malarial poisons."—C. F. Alston, Quitman, Texas.

Act Well

"Whenever I am troubled with constipation, or suffer from loss of appetite, Ayer's Pills set me right again."—A. J. Kiser, Jr., Rock House, Va.

"In 1858, by the advice of a friend, I began the use of Ayer's Pills as a remedy for biliousness, constipation, high fevers, and colds. They served me better than anything I had previously tried, and I have used them in attacks of that sort ever since."—H. W. Hersh, Judsonia, Ark.

Young Men and the Pastorate.

MR. EDITOR: Your article in a late number of the ADVOCATE, pleading for a return to the plan of the fathers in providing appointments for the young men of the Conferences, met the hearty endorsement of, at least, one of your readers. Long ago we reached similar conclusions after much reflection, and not because we loved young Archippus less, but Rome more. We have, indeed, no objection to pushing young men. It is in many cases the proper thing to do, and the only means of realizing upon investment; but what we sincerely object to—and the young men who have convictions stronger than a vague desire for personal advancement will share with us this concern—is the reckless sacrifice of the best part of God's heritage to get them to the top of the hill.

As we write we have before us in recollection several young men, no longer young in years, at least, who began their ministry with first-rate stations and circuits, who thought, and who had good reason for thinking, that the best way of disposing of a large-sized job was to finish it, and who proceeded forthwith to eat up the best part of their rich pasturage and "to tread down the residue with their feet;" and who for ten, fifteen, twenty years, a quarter of a century, have been engaged in the same exercise to the utter confusion of every worthy interest of Christ's kingdom. The injury to any one or two or three of these charges was as nothing to the damage inflicted upon the young men themselves, who thus became, instead of wise administrators of law, and faithful conservers of interests dearer than any that belong to earth, brands of sedition, thus by a strange providence interjected into the counsels of the Most High.

None of all this should ever have happened, and would not, if the young men referred to had been of less than extraordinary intellectual caliber (a reason which we place in the front, because of the false notion that has somehow obtained currency that brains will serve as a substitute for years and experience), for there were good customs forbidding it not a few, and good reasons more plentiful than blackberries; but somebody blundered, and, instead of "bright and shining lights," the church has been treated to a few wandering stars, or to a meteoric display of the least significance.

To Bishops, and all in authority we say: Do not do young men the disservice of constituting them full-fledged episcopoi the first day of the first year of their ministry; so that, like the young man of whom the editor of the ADVOCATE speaks, his first crude essay from the pulpit will prove diocesan in character, if not in influence. Give the young man a chance at the only available period in his life of avoiding the main chance, and of making something of himself better than a miserable secularist in a sacred office. The ministry is in far greater danger of being brought into contempt for its airs than for its ignorance; for its ambition and love of the world, not to say of the dollar, than for its submissiveness to authority and humble views of its own attainments. Who shall complain of want of humility or of egotism in our young ministers if we devote ourselves to the task of developing these traits in them by the false policy to which we refer. But, apart from all this, what a conception we must have of the "glorious gospel of the blessed God," and of the wonderful science of redemption, when we devote whole communities for years to the crude and raw and jejune (but adjectives fail us) dissertations of youthful empiries upon what "might, could, would or should" be the will of the Lord as variously expressed in that subject.

Time and time again we have been met recently with the inquiry why do our very young men imitate Sam Jones in the pulpit, and in answer to it we wish here to record our conviction that it is because, having been assigned Sam Jones' task, they find themselves unable to discharge it without adopting Sam Jones' methods. To turn the world upside down required trained hands in apostolic times, and it is our belief that if the times have changed, we have somehow changed with them. By Acts xx, 28, we learn that the Holy Ghost qualifies men for the office of pastoral superintendent of God's flock, but we, as a church, do not hesitate to anticipate him in this work by, at least, four years; and sometimes, when he has not been particularly prompt and pliant, to supplant him altogether, and as a fruit of this we need scarcely pause to say that many grievous and widespread desolations have occurred in our Zion. For our chief pastors there is, perhaps, the excuse that they have been met by the clamors of the clamorous for young men in the pastorates; but we respectfully urge that if they would adopt the plan which you present in your article, Mr. Editor, they would abundantly afford to these malcontents the means of profiting by their experiment without its risks. It is difficult to believe that anyone could be preferred for a position of trust and responsibility upon the ground of callowness; but, admitting its possibility, it is only another proof of the astonishing wisdom "of the children of light in their generation," and in this case it is easy enough to make a virtue of necessity by providing along with the gift called for an apostolic safe conduct.

So far as this writer is concerned, he has yet to discover the infant of days in the ministry who is above indiscretions, and who, intellectually, had not a profusion of almost any other quality that would fit him for Saul's armor but size, and we have looked upon prodigies of all shapes and conditions; and we say in love to the young men, and while fully realizing that "age may be justly contemptible," let them have the fatherly counsel and the pious example of the fathers of the church at the most critical period of a ministry, that from the beginning to the close is full of strange perils.

If there is a question about support, it is a human and not a divine condition; and we beg to assert that it is unchristian, if not positively wicked, to advance young men to the ministry with the notion that they are to receive a quid pro quo for their services. If an educated ministry means a secularized ministry, we are opposed to it to the extent of hearty protest. We are under no obligation to provide unevangelical Protestant Churches with pulpit incumbents, and we ought not to strain our system, however perfect, with such abnormal weights. Let it be understood that when a young man enters our ministry he gives up his prospects of worldly preferment absolutely, as did the apostles and prophets, and, instead of the present dearth, our ecclesiastical market-places will be speedily thronged with applicants for service who will esteem nothing so highly as an opportunity of fulfilling the ministry which they have received from the Lord.

If we dismiss the Wesleyan spirit from our ministry, we have reached the period when we should abandon the heights of Zion to other watchmen. If we have not received a call to heroic service, we are not in the apostolical succession, however deftly we may spin logical sequences to sustain that view.

But to return to the former question: So far as we know, in the whole scope of our Methodism, metropolitan and provincial, there is not a church of importance that is not suffering on account of insufficient ministerial service, and to whom a reinforced pastoral supply would not prove a God-send. There are, at least, three churches in the city of New Orleans that would be better for assistant pastors, and in the country the church in the recollection and observation of the writer has suffered untold disasters for lack of unsalaried or low-salaried workmen. What combinations of sense and sentiment, of learning and experience, of youth and age, might we not make against our wily and industrious enemy throughout this vast field, if where we do not lack the wisdom to be statesmen, we had the grace to be reformers. While the work itself would be infinitely advantaged by a republication of the bans between the senior and junior hosts of our itinerancy, and many interests of the church to which we have not referred in this brief article be conserved, we desire to say again, and with renewed emphasis, that there is no school of the prophets like that in which Elisha served an illustrious novitiate, and no school of the apostles to be compared to that in which John Mark and young Timothy climbed the steep hill of ecclesiastical preferment. But while we wait for this shadow to diminish on the dial of our itinerancy, there should be no competitive backward movement elsewhere. Let our educational mills, small and great, in city and country, continue to send out their grist, but let them not serve us stones for bread.

Cases for Discipline.

The last General Conference appointed a special committee of fifteen to formulate a deliverance on the subject of worldliness in the church, for insertion in the appendix of the Discipline. Bishop R. K. Hargrove was in the chair while the report of this committee was under discussion, and he ruled that whatever went into the appendix of the Discipline was in force until it was changed or repealed by the General Conference.

This committee named some of the diversions forbidden by that part of our General Rules which forbids "the taking of such diversions as can not be taken in the name of the Lord Jesus." Among the indulgences that can not be so taken are named "the modern dance, both in its private and public exhibitions, card-playing, theater-going, attendance upon race-courses, circuses, and the like." Each and all of these are prohibited by the General Rules of the Methodist Church. The General Conference says they are, and it says further that "these offenses are justifiable grounds of discipline." If we are not pretty well rid of these offenses in the church, in the next four years, it will be because pastors are not faithful in the administration of discipline, or because the church will not sustain them in this important work. This utterance by the General Conference is an authoritative interpretation of the law.

All true Methodists will hear this deliverance, and they will be governed by it. It is not now a question of private judgment. The church has spoken, has named a class of offenses forbidden by the General Rules. It matters not now what my private views may be as to the harmlessness of any one of these things; my church has said they are wrong, and I must yield obedience or withdraw from the church. I can not be honest or honorable and live in her pales and openly and knowingly violate her rules.

Modern dancing, card-playing, theater-going and attendance on race-courses and circuses are the fashionable and popular forms of worldliness prevalent in the church now. They are eating out the life and destroying the power of the church. The church is not in great danger from drunkenness, or lying, or stealing; but it is in danger from dancing and card-playing. It is very rare that you find a church that has a drunkard, or a liar, or a thief on its roll; and it is nearly as rare to find one that does not have on its roll from five to one hundred members who either dance, play cards, go to theaters, or attend race-courses and circuses. The danger lies not in the comparative moral turpitude of these offenses; but in the popularity of the things named by the General Conference.

Worldliness gets into the church at this gap. Some one says, "Why waste your ammunition on minor offenses like these when there are so many great evils to shoot at?" Well, for the reason that it is the sparrows that are eating up my grapes, and not bears that are tearing down the vines. I shoot at the game. I haven't a drunkard, a liar or a thief in my flock; but the dancers, card-players, theater-goers and the sight-seers at races and circuses are in the majority. They hurt the cause of God. Their conduct in these things is a reproach to religion and the church. The sinners all know that church members ought not to do these things, nor go to these places. They know it, not because the church says it is wrong, but because they are the amusements that sinners love. They know that the love of the world and of worldliness and the love of God can not dwell in the same heart at the same time.

Methodist members ought to do one of two things: They ought to quit these offenses, or withdraw from the church. As long as they stay in the church and indulge in these things they bring reproach upon the church and shame upon religion. If one will not obey the law he ought to move out of the State—move into Satan's kingdom, where he properly belongs.

GILDEROY.

The Gospel of Romance.

A recent copy of Zion's Herald contained this extraordinary notice:

Rev. Dr. J. F. Spence, Chancellor of the Grant Memorial University, of Chattanooga, Tenn., will preach next Sunday evening on "The Romance of the Poor White Man in the Mountains of Tennessee," in St. John's M. E. Church, South Boston.

Such an announcement for a Sabbath service is a gross breach of ministerial propriety and an outrage upon pulpit license. How anyone called of God to preach the holy gospel, and supposed to be burdened with a solemn message to the unsaved, can so far forget his divine mission as to make merchandise of such sensationalism is strange, indeed. The hour which should be given to feeding hungry souls with "food convenient," to warning, reproving, exhorting with all earnestness and long-suffering, is devoted to personal caricature and humorous entertainment.

And why such a theme for a Boston congregation? Rev. Spence is on his annual pilgrimage North for more coveted cash. He needs must give a reason for generous giving to his educational undertakings. In order to this he must parade the shocking ignorance of the missionary territory he is occupying. He betakes himself to romance. Facts do not suffice. They have not the desired drawing power; so the reverend gentleman romances for the entertainment of Bostonians, and they in turn pay for the fiddler. Alas! for such a conception of ministerial duty and fidelity. How long would it take to destroy the works of the devil with such preaching? In the name of genuine, intelligent fraternity, which should be practiced more and preached less—in the name of the ministry of Methodism which has been characterized by evangelical power and fervent zeal—we protest against such an abuse of the pulpit and pray to be delivered from a gospel of romance. If preachers can not find in the written Word things new and old for the edification and comfort of the people, they have a divine call not to preach. In the canonical list of the called, we do not find the romantic pulpiteer.

Bro. McDonald and the Adventists' Books.

I am glad Bro. McDonald has seen fit to mention the fact of the circulation of the literature of these Seventh Day Baptists. They have a publishing company, and under this company a great number of active salesmen who are vending the products of that publishing house under the guise of "Bible literature" and "non-sectarian books." These "Bible Readings," "Our Country," and a number of others, are sold in this way. Let our people steer clear of these agents.

Herewith I mail you a list of the books, and name and domicile of the publishers. I have not read all, but have read many of them, and they are alike pernicious as far as I can understand them: "History of the Sabbath," "Daniel and Revelation," "Our Country," "The Coming Conflict," "Synopsis of the Present Truth," "A Word for the Sabbath," "Thoughts on Baptism," "Facts for the Times: A Collection, etc.;" "The Bible Reading Gazette;" and a long list of perodicals and tracts.

These works bear the following imprint: "Review and Herald, Publishers, Battle Creek, Mich.; Pacific Press, Oakland, Cal.; Present Truth, Great Grimsby, England."

With few exceptions, these are mischievous books, and will do Methodist people no more good than they do others. Let the "Review and Herald, Publishers, Battle Creek, Mich.," alone.

J. A. PARKER.

Personal and Otherwise.

Our former co-laborer in Louisiana, Rev. A. C. Coney, after filling a four years' term at Butte City, Montana Conference, has been appointed presiding elder of the Helena district, of the same Conference. Rev. E. J. Stanley is now editor of the Montana Methodist.

We are indebted to J. S. Webster, secretary, for a catalogue of the coming State Fair, to be held in Baton Rouge, October 21–25.

Rev. W. C. Lovett takes Dr. Potter's place as editor of the Wesleyan Christian Advocate until the Doctor's successor is elected.

It is said that Mr. Moody has preached his sermon on Elijah four hundred times! Sugar-stick?

A letter from Rev. E. B. Galloway, formerly of Louisiana Conference, brings the painful intelligence that his health is so poor that he has not preached since last May. We are pleased to learn, however, that he is now improving.

Our paper is so popular with educators, as an advertising medium for their schools, that our valued correspondents are crowded out for a time. Look at our fifth page, if you want a school for son or daughter.

A note from Dr. Carradine, dated Naples, August 14, says he would sail that evening for Egypt, and, if nothing happened, would be home the first week in October.

Bishop Granbery's family have removed to Ashland, Va., which will be their future home.

Rev. W. B. Palmore has been elected associate editor of the St. Louis Christian Advocate. His editorial work will begin with October in Kansas City.

A telegram from Dr. A. D. McVoy says: "Mansfield College opens September 10, with a large and experienced faculty."

Bro. G. D. Anders gave us a call on his way from the Sam Jones Camp Meeting. He reports a meeting of great power. It continued until Sunday night, last.

The brother who sent the article in answer to "S. S. S." did not send his name. Initials are misleading. We must have the names of our contributors.

Bro. J. T. Nicholson, en route from Sam Jones Camp Meeting, reports a fine meeting, and $668 50 raised on Sunday for Millsaps College.

President Hunnicutt, of Centenary College, passed through the city, last Tuesday, en route home. The college exercises opened on Wednesday. The president will preach for the opening, next Sunday, a discourse bearing upon the work of the session.

The Los Angeles Christian Advocate, speaking of the preaching at South Oceanside Camp Meeting, says: "Rev. James Healy preached three direct gospel sermons, full of power and unction. His preaching is impetuous, enthusiastic and full of holy zeal for the cause of Christ."

Notes.

Will the writers of "News from the Work" remember that Cæsar summarized a whole campaign in a single sentence!

A man by the name of John Wesley said this:

The devil does not like field-preaching; neither do I. I love a commodious room, a soft cushion, a handsome pulpit; but where is my zeal if I do not trample all these under foot in order to save one more soul?

A presiding elder of the Mississippi Conference writes: "During the last quarter I secured you about fifty new subscribers." If all our presiding elders would do that much, it would result in 4,200 new subscribers in one year! Why can't they do it? Why don't they do it?

A writer in the Congregationalist says:

Four hours in the morning given, not to reverie or to newspaper reading, but to steady, earnest work, will make a minister independent for the rest of the day, and be amply sufficient for meeting all the demands of pulpit preparation; then the prosecution of pastoral work in the afternoons will furnish a needful alterative and some little exercise.

Bishop Key, writing of the Denver Conference, says:

On the night of the missionary anniversary, after a powerful appeal from our new secretary, Dr. Morrison, every member came forward and gave his hand and pledge to take a contribution for missions from every member of the church—man, woman, and child.

Let every preacher work on that plan, and the missionary treasury will soon fill up and overflow.

Southern Churchman says:

Many a brilliant young man leaves college or the theological seminary, having the highest honors, and for a few years does wonderfully well; after a while he only repeats himself or his sermons drift into the commonplaces. There must be a reason for it, and that reason, there is lack of study. It is not necessary for him to burn the midnight lamp; four hours a day spent, not in reading but in study, is all that is essential not only to keep him up to his standing, but to make him and keep him a growing man.

The twelfth annual report of the Woman's Missionary Society of our church makes a fine exhibit of work done and being done. There are now a total of societies, 2,991, with a membership of 73,367. The Missionary Advocate has a circulation of 13,000. The Board has sent out 10,000 mite boxes, 364,000 leaflets and 36,000 programs. The Board has in the foreign field, 31 missionaries, 57 teachers and assistants, 10 boarding-schools, 31 day-schools, 1,248 pupils. The value of the property owned by the Board is put down at $180,200. The appropriations for last year were $74,607; the receipts, $75,486. In the twelve years of its existence the society has raised $500,000. That is, indeed, a fine showing.

An eight-page paper, such as the ADVOCATE, gives an enormous amount of reading matter during a year. There is an average of five pages of reading matter each week. Each page has six columns, averaging over 700 words to the column. This makes about 4,500 words to the page, and five pages make 22,500 words each week. In one year this amounts to 1,170,000 words, and all this for two dollars, when we can get it. The other day we bought a book of 324 pages, with 232 words to the page, for which we paid cash $1 25. The ADVOCATE, at the same rate for one year, would come to about $18. And yet some people persist in saying that two dollars a year is too much for a religious paper. Some people talk nonsense!

Tricks of the Trade.

The common aphorism that there are tricks in all trades is unfortunately too true, and the refutation that there are "tricks in all trades but ours" is without verification in all the world. All professions and pursuits have their stratagems and artifices, secret and unrevealed except to the initiated, which are evasions of upright, straightforward honesty and genuine, high-toned integrity. Even the most honorable and unimpeachable professions are full of these sharp practices. Sad to state, that the ministry is dropping to the level of mere trades and professions by resorting to tricks and stratagems which are unworthy the vocation, and always end in damaging both the man and the cause. There is no profession but what it is disgraced and damaged by those who use these tricks of the trade, and far more so is both the cause and the minister himself damaged by any mere tricks of the orator and the stump speaker in the pulpit. If there is any place where pure, unaffected naturalness is at a premium, it is in the pulpit. If there is any place where all artifices and tricks of every kind are intolerable and wholly unpardonable it is in the pulpit. So sure as a minister resorts to these questionable methods to hold an audience or to interest his hearers, he will be shorn of power and his ministry will be without the spiritual results that should follow. The audience may always follow in the track of this ministerial juggler; there may be great returns of nominal members; but all vanish as soon as the dexterous artificial master of the audience is gone. The foundation is hay and stubble, and these must succumb to "fiery trials," and, having lived on mere sensationalism, when that is gone they die out.

It is deplorable for anyone who is expected to have a mighty truth to deliver to catch the attention of the audience by some startling sensational announcement, or by some mere oratorical trick, which is unworthy the pulpit or its theme. For one to commence "by asking prayerful attention of the audience, in spite of the oppressive weather, the closeness of the room, the poor ventilation afforded by modern architecture, while the discourse is predicated upon the words, Run, speak to this young man'" (found in the second chapter of Zechariah), is enough to nauseate the sincere worshiper and the starving, unconverted soul. A man who arises and requests "the sympathies of his dear congregation, as he is suffering with extreme indisposition," and thereby gains the pity of the silly girls and weak women, is without a message from the Lord and should be carried out on a stretcher and never brought back any more. But the most shameful habit is that of weeping, where a devout man becomes habituated to weeping at certain stages of every discourse. It often mellows down an audience. The true and faithful feel as if they are hard-hearted and repent for not being able to weep with the preacher. The outsiders think, Well, this is a "feeling preacher;" and there is for a few successive services a very marked effect by this tearful habit. There are those who become so habituated to this that they weep in every sermon, and feel as if the sermon is a failure unless they do weep. Some men are ruined in their effectiveness by this habit, for too much gushing is disgusting to any audience.

There are other men who choose their text, shut the Bible, put the hymn book on the closed Bible, step to one side of the pulpit and, with the most confident air, pour forth their discourse with utmost volubility. This is to impress the audience with their erudition, and say that all they want from the Bible is the text; and it is generally a closed book both in theory and fact, for all that comes from the Bible in these discourses is the text. Some simpletons in the audience may think this man is very brilliant; but it only succeeds in impressing a few times.

There are other methods and tricks which are very deleterious in their influence; any very extraordinary effort at moving an audience which is untouched, is usually fatal in its effect. A minister who gets down on his knees and invites penitents to the altar will utterly fail, and the audience goes home disgusted, outraged by such a procedure.

But as the tricks of the trade are marshalled by the pure manipulator of an audience, these ministers use all methods. Some even have decoys—that is, parties picked out beforehand and pledged to go to the altar as penitents who are not convicted of sin. But after the work is under full headway, every proposition that is at all religious is used, all methods by addition, by subtraction, by elimination, the motherless, the fatherless, the sisterless, the childless, one after another are urged, exhorted to come to the altar, till the whole crowd become a conglomerate that is without a name and without definite character. The crowd may think that there was a very successful meeting; but the Holy Spirit, if not the audience, sees that the whole thing is merely manipulating an audience; there is no conviction, no conversion. Isaiah would have cut a fine figure if he had called forth the Israelites, and begun in like manner to manipulate the crowd after one of his impassioned, mighty messages of woe and misery.

When a preacher has a message, the fewest propositions and simplest methods are necessary and effective. A message from the Lord, burning in the soul with the divine pathos in it and divine power upon it, and the Holy Spirit in it, is the culminating force which brings immediate results without artifice, stratagem, manipulation, or any such mere tricks of a speaker or an orator. Everything other than this will prove unavailing for convicting and converting souls. The natural, unostentatious, transparent minister who does nothing unusual, and preaches the message given him by the Holy Spirit, is the man of power, for the pathos, the true eloquence, will never be lacking in such a discourse. No artificial methods will make up this lack of power, nor will they add to this power when it is present. The power must inhere in the message, not in the messenger; neither his voice nor presence, nor any of these mere accessories. Without this inherent power all other accessories will be perfunctory performances; it will be evident to your audience, and every attempt to hide your lack by stage effect, oratorical tricks or other methods will be ineffectual. The power of the ministry is in the prophetic character it received from on high; its message is an inspiration, given from above, relative to the eternal weal or woe of every listener, and stamped by the Lord of heaven and earth. Go speak to the people, "Thus saith the Lord;" and if the message is from him, he will attest it. Leave all tricks for the hustings, all these subterfuges for lack of power to the worldly orators. S. Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society.

MR. EDITOR: Having visited several places within the bounds of the Mississippi Conference in the interest of the work represented in the above name, I suppose the general status of the church toward this special branch of work may be judged by that of the places visited, and would like, through the columns of the ADVOCATE, to call attention to the needs and importance of this work as well as some of the difficulties in the way of its progress.

The prevailing impression, it seems to me, is that the women of the church have enough to do already, and it would be like placing an additional burden on an overloaded pack-horse to tack on the Parsonage Society to those already in operation. In most cases the women engaged in one department of church work are the ones engaged in all the departments, and generally those women are few in number. This throws the whole burden on the "faithful few;" consequently when some new work is presented they shrink back, and ask, "Can we take it?" And, alas! too often the answer is, "We can not." It is like the process of division in mathematics. If you increase the divisor without increasing the dividend, you diminish the quotient. Oh, that every woman who has her name on the church-roll might realize that the Lord has something more for her to do than she is already doing, then our dividend of strength might be increased in greater proportion than the burden is increased, and the result of good work would increase in like proportion. So long as this is not the case, however, I would say to the "faithful few:" As the Lord increases our burden, so he will increase our strength; and he intends for us to do this additional work, or it never would have been presented to our consideration; and if we fail to carry the burden, the reason will be that we fail to go to the right source for strength.

One of the greatest difficulties in the way of organizing Parsonage and Home Mission Societies is in the multiplicity of organizations. In all cases where there is an Aid Society I have endeavored to incorporate the general with the home work, but with very little result. While this seems to be the most practicable way of effecting the work, almost all my efforts in that direction have been offset with the plea of so much to do for the home church and parsonage; there is no time or means left for anything else. Although my theory is, the home should be cared for first, I can but express the hope that this idea will not long prevail, that we must do everything at home before we undertake anything beyond that limited sphere, and that it will not be long ere every Home Parsonage Society will see its way clear to take the general work along with the home work, inasmuch as the one need in no wise interfere with the other.

Our name having been changed from Woman's Department of Church Extension to Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society, embodies more the idea of home mission work and affords an opportunity for those who believe in home missions to put that belief in effect by identifying themselves with this branch of church work.

The importance of the work demands universal attention. It is the home-building of the church. Every pastor, in order to do his best work for the church, must have a home provided for him; and if he is sent to a community too poor to provide one for him, it is the privilege as well as the duty of more favored churches to lend a helping hand to this needy preacher and community.

The late General Conference provided for the organization of Conference societies in the Woman's Department similar to those of the Woman's Missionary Society. Miss Lucinda B. Helm, our general secretary, has expressed a desire that we organize a society in our Conference during this year, and I hope all interested in the matter will take it into careful and prayerful consideration, and be ready to answer to the call for organization.

Respectfully,

ADDIE V. MARSHALL,
Conf. Sec. W. D, Ch. Ex., Miss. Conf.

Letter from Mexico.

MR. EDITOR: Since last I wrote our church and school have suffered terribly. In two days we lost three members—two of them members of our girl's school. One, our poor little "missionary girl," who has a good home now and suffers neither hunger nor cold. Bless the Lord! when she learned the sweet old story of Jesus and his love, she told it wherever she went, and lived a pure life. Those who worked for the school in which she was taught have one star of exceeding brightness in their crown of rejoicing.

I want to tell of the girls' missionary society. I went to one of the meetings, and when the children paid their cuartillas, I noticed a poor little waif lay down her dues, knowing her mother was a poor old woman, who made two reals (25 cents) a day by washing in a patio from morning till night. Out of this amount she had to pay her house-rent ($3 per month) and feed and clothe herself and two daughters. I knew also three cents was what this child had to live on all day, to buy tortillas and frijoles. I looked my astonishment, and said, "Where did you get it?" The poor child thought I doubted her honesty, and said: "It is mine, senorita; my mama gave it to me to buy something to eat." I said, "But what have you done for your dinner to-day?" The little hungry child answered, with a sob, "I had none." Could any Christian do more for the cause of missions than this little eight-year-old child? The very next Sunday her mother brought her to me in the church in the presence of the missionaries, Bro. G. and wife, and native pastor, and offered to give me the child; said she must soon fall into the grave, and had no one to care for her. It was too much for me. I accepted the gift of the poor old woman—her baby, and dearer to her heart than all the world. So little Erminia Mayo is now a member of my family—a delicate little creature, but, with enough to eat, I think will soon improve. That evening at the Children's Missionary Society, as I watched the ragged, hungry little ones putting their dinners in the Lord's treasury, I thought, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." When they gathered round the organ, and sang, "Tell it to Jesus," my tears fell like rain.

Last Monday we had a union meeting of the missionary societies of little boys and girls, at our church, at four o'clock, as Mrs. Grimes was to leave on Tuesday, to take her family to the States, and I wanted her to be able to tell of our little "Mission Band" when she reached our Sunny Land, and let you know that the gospel "is the power of God unto salvation" in poor sin-cursed Mexico as well as in your own Christian land. We had a large and interesting meeting. Mrs. Grimes says: "You surely have a powerful army here. Some day will see these sheaves ripening for the harvest." Pray that it may be so.

I am again alone, but have plenty to do, and no time even to know I miss the absent. What a boon is work; and all work for the Master is sweet.

Now, Mr. Editor, don't you think you ought to exhort some on our church? There is no danger of our getting it before we need it. We must either patch up our old one, or have a new one. Just come out to see us, and stand in our little temple and try to toll of the riches of God's love; and if you don't have to strain your voice to make yourself heard, you'll be the first who has tried it in some little time without speaking pretty loud. If you want a good hearty hug from the Mexican brethren, and sisters also, I'd advise you to speak up on the church question. S. G. WEEMS.

Common Sense versus Science.

The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and the Nashville "great official" copy from Popular Science Monthly as follows: "Sound is the sensation produced on us when the vibrations of the air strike on the drum of our ear. When there are few the sound is deep; as they increase in number, it becomes shriller and shriller; but when they reach forty thousand in a second they cease to be audible."

The above quotation is, in brief, the scientific account of the phenomenon of sound, which, if true, requires in the shrillest of audible sounds forty thousand distinct vibratory motions of the air in a second, and the same number of motions in the drum of the ear in the same time. I confess my inability to believe this dictum of science. It seems to me a physical impossibility for the drum of the ear to receive that many distinct impressions from so many distinct vibrations of the surrounding air in so short a time.

But if the foregoing seems hard of belief, what can we do when we read from the same writer an explanation of the phenomena of sight? Vision, like sound, is produced by the wave motion of a substance called ether, according to the accepted theories of science. But the authority from which I quote says: "When four hundred millions of millions of vibrations of ether strike the retina in a second, they produce red, and as the number increases, the color passes into orange, then yellow, green, blue and violet."

Let anyone put down in figures four hundred millions of millions (400,000,000,000,000), and try to bring himself to believe that the tender retina of his eye is struck that number of times by a wave of ether every second that he continues to look at a piece of red hunting, and if he succeeds in believing it, he is credulous enough to believe anything, however absurd and ridiculous.

It is utterly impossible that the optic nerve should receive that many distinct impressions in so short a time as one second. And yet this is the teachings of science, so called.

The existence of this exceedingly attenuated substance called ether—the motions of which, it is said, produce sight—has not been and can not be proved. The mere mode-of-motion theory of sound and light required some such substance to meet the exigencies of the hypothesis, and the demand was met by the conjectural creation of ether. If sound and sight are nothing outside of our sensations, and the sensations owe their origin to the motions of air and ether, why may not the motions of the molecules of the brain produce thought, and all other phenomena of mind and soul? The materialist argues if motion produces the sensations of sound and sight, which in turn become the sources of impressions and ideas, why may not the motions of brain particles give origin to mind and soul? And hence the teachings of scientists go to confirm and fortify the atheist in his unbelief. As the sensation of sound will cease with us at death, because the bodily organ is no longer capable of receiving and appreciating the motions of the air, so thought will cease when the brain ceases its motions, if, indeed, it was caused by motion. I do not see how the materialist can be dislodged from his position if we hold on to the mere mode-of-motion theory of sound and sight.

If the wave theory be true, we must accept it with its consequences; but it involves such absurdities, to which I have referred in the foregoing quotations, that I think it ought to be, and will be, after a time, universally rejected. D. G. W. ELLIS.

Fairview Male and Female College

Is under the control of the Rev. Waldo W. Moore, of the Mississippi Conference. He is aided by a corps of competent teachers. The religious influences are the very best. Students are encouraged to attend both Sunday services and the Wednesday night prayer meeting. Souls as well as bodies, hearts as well as heads, are looked after. Thorough work is done. Fairview is at Blunsville, Kemper county, Miss. Next after East Mississippi Female College for girls and Millsaps College for boys, do I commend Bro. Moore's most excellent school.

Sunday-School Lesson.

LESSON XI.—September 14.

PARABLE OF THE POUNDS.

Luke xix, 11-27.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Unto every one which hath shall be given.—Luke xix, 26.

TIME.—A. D. 30.

PLACE.—Somewhere on the approach to Jerusalem; not far from Jericho.

11. This parable, in its supposed facts, bears a remarkable likeness to those of the case of Archelaus, the son of Herod the Great, as they occurred during the continuance of the abode of the holy family in Egypt. After the death of Herod, and as, according to his will, Archelaus was to succeed him in the kingdom of Judea, that prince made a journey to Rome to obtain a confirmation of his father's bequest; that is, "to receive for himself a kingdom." But the Jews sent after him a protest, which, however, was disregarded, and "Archelaus reigned instead of his father Herod." The place where the parable was spoken appears also to have been especially appropriate for such a reference, for at Jericho was the royal palace of Archelaus, in which, for a short time, he resided in great splendor.

12. A certain nobleman—An indirect intimation of the kingly descent and dignity of our Lord; at the same time a prophecy of his going away from the earth, and a comforting representation of his departure to the Father, as of the means ordained for the obtaining of the kingly dignity and glory. Finally, the definite assurance that the interval between the departure and the return would be only an interim.

13. His ten servants—Rev. Version changes to ten servants of his, since the "his" is emphatic; literally, his own. Moreover, it would be absurd to suppose that this nobleman, of consequence enough to be raised to a royal dignity, had but ten servants. The number of slaves in a Roman household was enormous, sometimes reaching hundreds. Toward the end of the republic it was considered reprehensible not to have a slave for every sort of work. Pounds—Minas. Between sixteen and eighteen dollars apiece. The small sum astonishes us. The small sum astonishes us. Compare, on the other hand, the talents. (Matt. xxv.) But in Matthew the Lord transfers to his servant his whole property; here he has only devoted a definite sum of money to the purpose of putting his servants to the proof therewith; and the smallness of the amount corresponds to what is so carefully emphasized in our parable, namely, the relation of faithfulness in the least to its great recompense (ver. 17), which relation is less regarded in the parable in Matthew. Occupy—The word occupy has lost the sense which it conveyed to the members of the Authorized Version—that of using or laying out what is possessed. An occupier formerly meant a trader.

14. His citizens hated him—And as he was not yet in authority, they dared to oppose his application, though at a great risk, as the event proved; the application of this is obvious.

15. When he was returned—His journey had been successful respecting the purpose for which it had been undertaken, despite the opposition of his enemies; and now he comes with abundant power and possessions to reward his faithful servants, to punish the unfaithful, and to be avenged upon his enemies.

16. Cities—A city for a pound, yet not even a cottage could be bought for a pound.

20. Napkin—A cloth for wiping off the sweat. Trench notes that the napkin which the idle servant does not need for its proper use he uses for the wrapping up of his pound.

22. Thou knewest—To be read interrogatively: "Didst thou know that? Then, for that reason, thou shouldst have been the more faithful."

23. Bank—Literally, the table of the money changer. With usury—With its produce, that is, what the loan of the money is fairly worth after paying the person sufficiently for using it; for, in lent money, both the lender and borrower are supposed to reap profit. Legal interest, under the Romans, stood at eight per cent.; but in usurious transactions Jewish bankers sometimes loaned it even as high as forty-eight.

24. Unto them that stood by—Not the other servants, but the guards (halberdiers) who surround him when he appears in majesty.

25. Lord, he hath ten pounds—A parenthetical expression (as if used by the guards in surprise). The king (not Jesus) continues his words in the next verse.

26. And from him that hath not—Perhaps it would be well, with Bishop Pearce, to supply the word gained—give it to him who hath gained ten minas: "For I say unto you, That unto every one who hath gained shall be given; and from him that not gained, even that which he hath received shall be taken away."

27. This command brings out both the comings of the Lord—at the destruction of Jerusalem and at the end of the world (at the death of each one); for we must not forget that even now he has gone to receive a kingdom and return. "We see not yet all things put under him." In this parable there are two distinct morals intended. Let it be viewed in these two points of light. (1) The behavior of the citizens to the nobleman; (2) The behavior of his own servants to him. (1) By the behavior of the citizens and their punishment (vers. 14, 27), we are taught that the Jews, who were the people of Christ, would reject him and try to prevent his reigning over them in his spiritual kingdom, and would for that crime be severely punished by the destruction of their state. (2) The other moral extends itself though the whole of the parable; namely, that the disciples of Christ, who are his servants, and who make a good improvement of the favors granted them by the gospel, shall be rewarded in proportion to the improvement made under the means of grace.

Obituaries.

BEARD—ISHAM B. BEARD was born in Jefferson county, Miss., September 19, 1810, and died at his home in East Carroll parish, La., July 12, 1890. His father's name was James Beard. They moved to Carroll parish about the year 1825. Bro. Isham B. Beard was twice married: March 8, 1832, to Elizabeth Curry, who died November 1, 1850. June 27, 1857, he was married to Cordelia M. E. Newhall; she survives him with six of his children by his first wife and five by the surviving wife.

Bro. Beard joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in the year 1835, and lived a consistent and faithful member until death. From the first year of his connection with the church, he served in her various offices with great credit to himself and honor to the church. He was one of the most prominent men in the community in which he lived. He was a man of fine sense, the very soul of honor, charitable, and an humble follower of the Lord Jesus. He loved the church of God, loved her ministers, and did all he could to help them. His home was the home of the preacher—here the tired itinerant ever found a hearty welcome.

The last two years of his life were years of great suffering—the last few months of his life were months of intense suffering; but he was patient—never murmured. I visited him very often during these last months; always found him cheerful and hopeful. He was strong in the faith; willing to suffer for the Master until he should call him from earth to heaven. His last end was peace. He met death as a true soldier, fearing nothing; said there was not a cloud that intervened. He fell on sleep in Jesus as peacefully as an infant falls to sleep in its mother's arms.

Truthfully we can say, a devoted Christian, a kind husband and father, a good citizen, and a worthy gentleman has gone to his reward. He is greatly missed in our midst. Peace be to his memory! "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace."

T. S. R.

FAULK—Mrs. MOLLIE FAULK, daughter of John E. and Josephine Hamma, was born in Monroe, La., November 28, 1871, and died in the same city, July 29, 1890, in hopes of "eternal life." She was happily married to Mr. Willie Faulk, of Monroe, January 1, 1890, and with him lived in perfect happiness till the day of her death—only seven short months. Sister Mollie professed religion and united with the church in Monroe in 1883, under the ministry of Rev. B. F. White, and continued therein till death.

When the Master called she was in perfect readiness: though for the sake of those dearer to her than life she would have remained longer, had he willed it. A short time before her death, when her recovery was almost hopeless, she called her devoted husband and grief-stricken parents, brothers and sisters to her bedside and bid them an affectionate good-bye, and imprinted upon each the last affectionate kiss, and extracted from each a promise to meet her in heaven.

Sister Mollie was loved by all who knew her, and is remembered by all as a sweet-spirited Christian. Her grief-stricken young husband, though almost crushed, is being sustained by "power divine," and indulges the fond hope of a sweet reunion in heaven. The fond parents, too, and her affectionate brothers and sisters mourn not as those without hope, for they expect to meet her in "the sweet by-and-by." May the blessings of our blessed Lord rest upon every one of them!

THOS. J. UPTON.

WEDGWORTH—Mrs. M. J. WEDGWORTH was born in Jefferson county, Ga., on December 12, 1819. Her father moved to Tuscaloosa county, Ala., in 1823, where she was reared. She joined the Methodist Church at the age of fifteen years, and lived a good and consistent member until her death, which occurred on August 1, 1890, at which time she was seventy-one years seven months and twenty-five days old. She was married to Elder J. W. Wedgworth on December 5, 1835. They lived together in peace and harmony for fifty-five years seven months and eighteen days.

She was the mother of eight children—six survive her; all of whom are married and doing well. She was a good and affectionate wife and a kind mother. She visited the sick and performed all the Christian duties to the poor as far as was in her power. She died after an illness of two years and five months. But in all of her affliction she never murmured, but bore her suffering with great Christian fortitude and patience. In her last moments she bade farewell to all her loved ones, and whispered, "Safe! safe!"

SNOWDEN—Little DOLPH, son of L. B. and S. A. Snowden, died June 21, 1890, aged one year seven months and twenty-one days. How sad for one who knew him to record his early death! Not yet had his little feet become weary of life's journey; but burdenless his life went out, leaving to aching hearts the tender memory of one whose mission was accomplished. It could be said, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." Little Dolph was a favorite with all who knew him; so affectionate and so bright—a real little sunbeam. We can scarcely realize that we shall never see his loving smiles nor hear the patter of little feet.

"Weak and weary," describes the condition of many people debilitated by the warm wether, by disease or overwork. Hood's Sarsaparilla is just the medicine needed to build up and strengthen the body, purify and quicken the sluggish blood, and restore the lost appetite.

GRANT'S FURNITURE STORE

NEW STORE, AT 114 Camp St. NEW ORLEANS. NEXT DOOR TO ADVOCATE OFFICE.

BEAUTIFUL PARLOR GOODS.

I have one entire floor devoted to the display of these goods alone, and have over sixty different varieties to select from. Complete Suits anywhere from $35 to $650, and odd pieces—such as Sofas, Divans, Easy Chairs, Patent Rockers, Window and Reception Chairs—at as low prices in proportion as the Complete Suits. I have these goods in Cherry, Mahogany and Walnut, and can give you your choice of any of the following coverings: Crushed, Embossed, Plain and Silk Plushes, Hair Cloth, Mohair, Raw and Spun Silks, Satins, English Tapestries, French Valours, Petit Point, Brocatelle or Damasks. I make a specialty of these goods, have many of the patterns made specially for my own trade, and can offer a greater variety at lower prices than any other house in the South.

NEW STOCK

In all departments, and every grade of goods, from the cheapest to the most expensive, in endless variety. I have all the latest and most fashionable designs, and, as I have only purchased from factories whose goods I have been selling for the past six years, can and do guarantee every piece of Furniture that leaves my establishment.

LOW PRICES

are the order of the day, and I propose to sell strictly reliable goods at a lower price than has ever before been quoted in the South. My store has long been known as "The Cheapest Furniture House in New Orleans," and this season I intend to add to the reputation it has gained in this respect. I only ask a chance to save you money.

HANDSOME BEDROOM SUITS.

A very extensive assortment of these goods in every style; and whether you wish to pay $40 for a Complete Suit of twelve pieces, or from that price anywhere up to $1,000, I can sell you what you require. I have these goods in Black Walnut, Natural and Dark Cherry, and Natural and Dark Mahogany, or in imitation of any of these woods, and can furnish the very latest, neatest and most artistic designs.

I have also a large and carefully selected stock of Hall, Library, Dining-room and Kitchen Furniture; Reed, Rattan and Wicker Chairs, Rockers, Lounges and Cribs; Brackets, What-nots, Easels, Music Stands and Fancy Top Tables; Carpets, Carpet Strips, Matting, Shades, Curtains, Curtain Poles, and everything necessary to furnish a house completely throughout.

LARGE SALES.

I have a large city trade, and am shipping goods extensively to every Southern State. My country trade has increased very rapidly during the past year, and the facilities which my new store affords me for carrying a larger and better stock will enable me to still further extend it, and to give complete satisfaction to my customers.

New Prospect Camp Meeting.

The New Prospect Camp Meeting will commence on Friday night before the fourth Sunday in October (24th). All ministers of the gospel are invited to come and help in the meeting. They will be cared for free. This camp ground is situated near Vancleave, Miss., 21 miles north of Ocean Springs, and 15 miles north of Bellefountaine. Mail hack runs Mondays, Wednesdays and Saturdays of each week from Ocean Springs to Vancleave; leaves there at 7 o'clock; arrives here at 11 o'clock.

Preachers expecting to come will notify me by letter at Vancleave, Miss., where to meet them at Bellefountaine. M. L. WHITE, P. C.

The New Discipline.

We beg to announce that we are prepared to fill all orders for the revised Discipline. We hope our brethren of the ministry will exert themselves to scatter the book among our people. It ought to be in every Methodist home. It is our Confession of Faith and Book of Order. It contains the essentials of all our teachings, and embodies the laws of our government. These all Methodists should know. One has hardly a right to call himself a Methodist till he has familiarized himself with the doctrines and polity of the Church. We hope advantage will be taken of the interest in its revision to give the Discipline a wide circulation. The price in cloth is 25 cents, with the usual discount to ministers and the trade.

The Clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policyholders.

The Episcopal Diocese, of New York, has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and the Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

An interesting census bulletin has just been issued which shows the financial condition of the counties in the United States. In 1880 the bonded debt of 2,436 counties was $106,767,946, and the floating debt $18,853,509. In 1890 the bonded debt of 2,728 counties was $130,734,959, and the floating debt $14,958,881. The net debt in 1890 is $115,224,855. The Southern States, especially Louisiana, make an excellent showing. The greatest reduction of the gross debt during the decade is in the parishes of Louisiana, which decreased from $1,107,951 to $156,915, or 86 per cent.: Mississippi increased 9 per cent., Alabama decreased 18, and Arkansas, 49. Louisiana has total available resources, $182,170 exceeding her gross debt and thus leaving no net debt.

In the conference of the House and Senate Committees it was concluded that the appropriations of the River and Harbor bill will have to be cut down to meet the views of the President, and the amount will be reduced to about $25,000,000. There will be a general cut on the items that have been raised over those in the original bill, and it is thought the Mississippi river appropriation will be reduced by about $300,000. It is not likely that any specific amounts will be fixed for the harbors.

A proposition has been presented to the City Council, this city, by certain attorneys, who desire to enter suit against the Louisiana Lottery Company for taxes, etc., for the year 1869, and for all subsequent years up to and including 1890; all costs, outlays and expenses of litigating said claim or claims, and all other proceedings to be borne by said special attorneys, the city in no case to be liable or responsible for such costs, outlays and expenses; the principal of all taxes, licenses, interests, penalties and costs to be paid to the city treasurer; said special attorneys to receive said interests, penalties and costs in full and complete payment and satisfaction for services, labors, expenses and outlays.

In the Mississippi Constitutional Convention, in session at Jackson, there is much excitement over the suffrage question. The proposition to extend the right of suffrage to women who own $400 worth of taxable property seems to be gaining in strength and will be productive of a great discussion when reported to the convention.

The Republicans of New Iberia parish, in mass meeting, denounced the administration as unrepublican for appointing a Democrat as postmaster at New Iberia.

A meeting will be held in Chicago to effect a complete consolidation of sheet manufacteries. There are eighteen sheet towers in the United States, and of these sixteen are in the new combine. The capital stock of the concern is $3,000,000, and headquarters will be established in Chicago.

A stock company has been formed, with a capital of $1,000 000, for the purpose of supplying the American and European market with dressed beef at a figure much lower than the present rate. The company has purchased a plat of ground in Fort Worth containing fifteen acres of land, and has thereon erected a large plant with facilities for killing and storing 700 head of cattle daily. All the beef dressed by this company will be shipped to New Orleans, which is only 100 miles from the seaboard; thence to the eastern and European markets.

FOREIGN.

Terrible stories of distress are pouring in from Tokay, Austria, the scene of a great fire. Heartrending scenes are of constant occurrence, and an official appeal has been made for aid for over 6,000 people who are without food or shelter.

The movement for the re-colonization of Palestine by the Jews has received an impetus by the revival of the anti-Semitic laws in Russia. Hundreds of families of Russian Jews are arranging to emigrate to Jerusalem to escape persecution. Funds have been started in several towns to aid the poorer Hebrews to carry out this plan.

It is said that trade unions are to be suppressed in the German Empire.

The projected interview between Emperor William, the Czar and the Emperor Francis Joseph depends largely upon the Austrian government's acceptance of the terms on which Emperor William proposes a revision of the Berlin treaty. It is probable that a congress of the powers will be held early in the spring.

Six thousand persons were in attendance at the Catholic Congress, which was held at Coblentz. The congress demanded the re-establishment in Germany of all Catholic orders, including the Jesuits, and the restoration of the Pope's temporal power.

Forty thousand men in Melbourne, Australia, on August 31, representative of all trades, formed into procession and paraded the streets. No disorder.

The French government may decide to prohibit the importation of the entire list of American pork products and at the same time to increase the duties on all American products exported to France. It is hoped that such action will modify the present illiberal spirit of the McKinley Tariff bill.

The Cotton Planters and Ginners of the South.

Your attention is called to the New Cotton Bloom Gin, which has all latest improvements, including balance wheel on brush, which is peculiar to this make of gin and is used on no other. If you intend buying a gin this season, it will pay you to look into the merits of this gin. This company and its predecessors have made cotton gins for nearly fifty years, and are experts in cotton gin work. These gins are made in the most substantial manner—strong and heavy, with long bearings; every part being so nicely made and adjusted that it is without doubt the lightest running ginning outfit in the world. For further particulars, prices, terms, etc., address H. W. Hubbard, the manufacturers' general Southern agent, at Atlanta, Ga.

I, A. C. Haffenger, do say consumption can be cured by Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Churry and Tar. My mother, years ago, contracting a terrible cough soon became unable to attend to her household duties. Prominent physicians pronounced it incurable consumption. We knew of Dr. Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar, and commenced giving it to her. Before two bottles had been taken an improvement was noticed, and by the time one dozen bottles had been consumed she was well, and has never been troubled since. We have recommended it to many and always have it in the house. For coughs, colds, croup, whooping-cough, asthma, bronchitis, it is without a rival. One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as 50c. bottles.

LINGUAL DIFFICULTIES IN FRANCE—THE CAFES—VENDOME COLUMN—LOUVRE PALACE AND TUILLERIES GARDENS—SAINTE CHAPELLE—PALACE OF JUSTICE—HOW THE LAWYERS DRESS—NOTRE DAME—THE SABBATH—MISSION WORK IN PARIS.

The experience that comes to one in landing in a foreign country, where an unknown tongue is spoken, is peculiar, and not the most enjoyable. As the white chalk hills or cliffs of Dover go down under the horizon, the English language, except in sporadic cases, goes with it; and as the foot presses the soil of France, and hears the rapid clatter of tongues from under mustached lips, he begins to feel his loneliness and his comparative helplessness in a forceful measure. Henceforth signs and gestures must be relied on, while the tongue that has been so often relied on, and has answered to a thousand demands, is now relegated to a rest. It can do little or nothing more. It, so to speak, is laid on the shelf; or, more elegantly, it lies down on its velvety cushion, leans against two shining rows of ivory, while the eyes and ears stand guard, and do what they can for the resting monarch. Whenever this resting monarch, or member, arose and asserted himself in France, he got into trouble. Scores of times, full of self-confidence, he sprang up with a bound and rushed forward into the verbal affray; but as often he sank back, discouraged, disgusted, and defeated.

On one occasion I adopted the happy expedient of speaking very volubly in English, with a strong French accent. A very common mistake! What happened then? Just this: that the descendant of Charlemagne turned upon me such a flood of "omnia Gallia," without being "divisa in tres partes," that I was almost lifted from my feet. We parted, both being thoroughly mystified. But one feeling of exultation I bore away with me was: that if he had mystified me, I had also thoroughly confounded him. After being in Paris a couple of days I became bolder in regard to my lingual surroundings. So I stepped out to purchase some candles one evening, neglecting to obtain the French phrase from the hotel clerk, who spoke English. Entering into a store that contained a little of everything, I asked the female shopkeeper for a candle in plain Anglo-Saxon. She smilingly proffered me various articles. I shook my head, and fell back on my French accent. She grew more animated, and dived into her showcases for things I never dreamed of, nor would ever need. The battle became more interesting. It was impossible to tell which side would finally win. Finally a brilliant idea struck me. Raising my hand, I scratched an imaginary match in the air, and applied it to an equally fanciful candle. Her face at once lighted up. I thought I had conquered, when, lo! she stooped down and, from a shelf near the floor, lifted and handed me something that looked like the machine that is used for wooden scroll-work. I took a seat in despair. She looked at me also in despair. Then she smiled and I smiled. Then I left. She looked foolish, and so did I, and felt foolish besides. Further down the street I entered a shop where the owner understood English; but I was nearly an hour in getting the candles.

The first thing that strikes the tourist in entering Paris is the cafe system. The pavements are fairly lined with small tables and chairs, where the people are eating ices, drinking wine, or partaking of their meals, according to the hour of the day. At night especially, upon the larger avenues and the boulevards the throng of laughing, chatting, drinking, eating people at these little white-topped tables is simply immense, requiring a most skillful course in some places for the pedestrian to move along. Sunday night, as I passed to and from church, the crowd was, if possible, even larger. Vehicles of every description were flashing hither and thither up the broad thoroughfare; merriment and conversation rose and fell like waves along the pavement, crowded with nicely dressed men and women; wine-glasses were clinking, and through the leaves of the overarching trees the electric light and the moonlight, in strange companionship, fell in checkered, quivering light and shadow upon the sitting and moving groups beneath. These scenes on the week nights declare powerfully the absence of the home-life in Paris; but when beheld on the Sabbath, it teaches something sadder and more awful still, and that is, a city without God. It needs no prophet to affirm, after beholding such scenes and others of a darker nature, that, as a people, they are yet to taste in judgment "the wine of the wrath of God." God vindicates his holy day and law, and history is one long confirmation of the fact.

One of the first visits I paid was to the Vendome Column. It is about two or three blocks from the river Seine, on the upper or eastern bank. The column stands in a square, through which only one street passes, from north to south. It was constructed out of fourteen hundred cannon taken from the enemies of France by Napoleon. This was one of the best things that Bonaparte ever did—to change implements of war into an inoffensive pillar of iron. If he had taken fourteen hundred more of his own and built another column, then would he, indeed, have been famous. When the communists, in 1871, with cable and windlass, pulled it down, it was broken into fifty-six different pieces; but the government has had it all recast, and so the monument stands as it did in the time of the great Emperor.

The Louvre Palace is near by, and stands directly on the bank of the Seine. It occupies three sides of a long square; not such a square as we have in New Orleans, but one equal to six of ours. The unoccupied, or western, side was finally filled up by the construction of the Tuileries Palace. It was in this last-named building that Napoleon lived. It was destroyed in 1871 by the communists, and a few years ago the ruins were all removed, and the vacant space is now beautified with flowers, walks, and statuary. If a person stands in the center of the broad walk of that garden and look west, he will be in a line with some beautiful, wonderful, and historic objects. Back of him will be the vast Louvre Palace; back of him, only nearer, will be the place where the beautiful Tuileries Palace once stood; in front of him is the broad graveled walk, one hundred feet wide, that divides the old Tuileries gardens—part of it is flowers and statuary, and part of it is trees. Further still in the distance you see two great fountains; beyond these an obelisk of Egypt, standing in the center of the Place de la Concorde, where the guillotine once did such dreadful work; still farther on stretches the Champs Elysees, a beautiful avenue of a mile in length; and finally, at the end of the avenue, and closing the view, the Arch of Triumph, erected by the great Napoleon. I stood and looked in the direction I have indicated one Saturday evening, near the hour of sunset. He who could not think and feel under such circumstances could properly be wondered at. Half of the Louvre Palace is occupied by government offices, and the other half is used as a museum. Here are antiquities and relics beyond number, statues by the hundred, and miles of paintings. I walked, looking at them until I was weary, not in eye as much as in feet. I was shown the window from which the king fired on the Huguenots, and in full view of the window is the tower whose bell gave the signal for the massacre to begin.

In the church called Sainte Chapelle I stood examining the stained windows for which it is famous, when my attention was called to the fact that under the stone slabs where I stood were the bodies of Massillon and Fenelon—one the most eloquent, and the other the holiest man that ever lived in France. With what sudden interest did I look down, and careful and reverential became my steps. No one ever here seems to mind walking on sepulchres; but, for my life, I can not get accustomed to the practice.

The Palace of Justice, where all the courts are held, and where the lawyers congregate and perambulate in a large, central marble hall, next claimed our attention. I noticed that everyone wore a black cap, similar in shape to the tourist or traveler's cap, and a black gown that descended to within four inches of the floor. As soon as a lawyer arrives, he doffs his shining beaver, or mere ordinary-looking hat, and dons at once the cap and gown that await him in a general dressing-room in the hall. The custom struck me as most excellent. It was not only a very becoming costume to everyone, but it gave a magisterial look; and, above all, obliterated the distinctions of wealth declared by clothing. I could not help but think that when these lawyers arose to plead their cases in court, the fact that all were alike in dress must necessarily have a good effect on jury, and even judge. A lawyer's shabby coat sometimes hurts him in the United States; but such a thing can not happen in Paris very well, because of this happy expedient.

The Church of Notre Dame is on the island of Paris. It faces west, with two great square towers in front. The vaulting of the nave is one hundred and ten feet high, supported by seventy-five large pillars. You get some idea of the size of this cathedral when I tell you that it can accommodate a congregation of twenty-five thousand people. It was this church that in the Revolution was changed into a Temple of Reason, and surmounted with the figure of a woman. Napoleon restored it as soon as he came into power. It was in this church that the Corsican was crowned emperor of the French by Pius; or, rather, he crowned himself, inasmuch as he took the crown from Pius and placed it on his own head, and then turned and crowned Josephine with his own hand. What a stir and talk this act must have created in Paris and Rome and all the world! I looked with great interest on the spot which I had often seen in pictures. The paintings were faithful, for the whole place was familiar to my mind. The three chairs, in which Napoleon and the Pope and Josephine sat, are still there; but the glory and pageantry of that day is gone, and the Popo and the Emperor and the Empress have moldered into dust and ashes. Very brightly did the light fall through the stained glass upon them on this day of triumph. The next day I saw the light descend like a golden glory, and fall with almost perpendicular array upon the same place. But the kneeling figures were not there; and of all the twenty-five thousand people who filled this place at the time, and gazed breathlessly upon the scene, not one is left. Isn't it pitiful to see men greater than all forms of material strength and magnificence passing away, while such things as chairs and walls and stone pillars remain?

The next day was the Sabbath. On that day I cease traveling and sightseeing. The day is spent in my room, and in attendance upon as many church services as I can well manage. In the morning I attended service at Notre Dame. There were two hundred people in an auditorium that seats or accommodates twenty-five thousand. Let the brethren who pine over empty pews take heart. Handing a church functionary two sous for the privilege of sitting near the chancel, I took a seat and endeavored to draw good from what was going on. The organ pealed away up somewhere among the pillars, the priest ah'd and eh'd his way along in the intoning, the little boys rung the bells; a good deal of stooping, bowing, and walking about; some rapid responsive reading in Latin between the half-dozen priests in the chancel, and then all was over. The priests and little boys in white glided noiselessly away, and disappeared in a spectral way among the grand columns and monuments and statues in the rear of the cathedral. Then a man in uniform came and closed the chancel gate with a bang that filled the church with echoes, and the congregation melted away. A few remained, staring vacantly at the silent and deserted altar. I larried with them for a purpose. The followers of Peter had not fed the sheep that day. We were still hungry. A tinkling bell does not satisfy the soul; and worship in an unknown tongue, and that a dead tongue, does not profit, says the Bible. But the Lord said to the Samaritan woman, "The time is coming when men shall worship the Father everywhere." And so I opened my Bible, and in the dim light of the cathedral read the Word of Life, and rejoiced in the presence and fellowship of the Savior.

In the evening I went to three distinct religious services. Mr. McAll, who has about forty mission stations in Paris, is now away for two months' rest and recreation. The Congregationalist Church is doing also a good work in the missionary line, while the Wesleyan Methodist Church has, at least, twenty mission stations in this great field. I was struck with the intelligent audience at one of the latter-named places.

The Congregationalist minister informed me that the one method open to them of saving the people of Paris is through pastoral labor and personal contact, and then drawing them into halls of religious worship. No street meetings of a religious character are allowed in Paris. To attempt a harangue of this kind on the street would quickly result in arrest and imprisonment. And so the work will be long and difficult, necessarily.

Meantime the vast audience we crave to save sits Sunday evenings on the brilliantly lighted boulevards, laughing, chatting, smoking, and emptying wine glasses, while the churches are empty, and the holy day of God is desecrated.

B. CARRADINE.

Our Sunday-School Committee and Its Work.

Dear Fellow-worker: You are doubtless aware that each General Conference elects a Sunday-school Committee to take general charge of the Sunday-school work within the bounds of our connection. Said committee has a splendid opportunity to do much good if its functions are properly understood by all concerned.

"The church is a force to work with, and not a field to work in. Ability and necessity dwell near each other." The last General Conference, held in St. Louis in May, 1890, elected the members of the General Conference Sunday-school Committee for the next quadrennium.

They greatly desire to magnify their office by real helpfulness through progressive and aggressive plans of work. "If this day our fleece is dry, it is not because there is no dew in heaven, nor because none fell last night." "If we take little pitchers to the well, we shall carry little water away."

Hence a few words as to

OUR PART.

1. We want to secure the name and get near to the heart of every Sunday-school worker in Southern Methodism.

2. We shall strive continually to put you on the track of the very best things concerning the great work in which we are engaged.

3. Our best efforts shall be given to the development of the large resources already in our hands, but not fully appreciated.

4. We feel it our duty, as the head of this great department of the church, to modestly suggest to our workers such plans and methods as will conduce to the greatest outreach of the work. And it will be our pleasure to do this, as far as possible, by calling attention to the best books and periodicals on given subjects, and to such other matter, coming to our knowledge by correspondence and otherwise, as may appear helpful in the prosecution of the work. Thus we hope our committee will become an exchange through which much profitable information may be disseminated.

YOUR PART.

1. The quickest way to supply a want is to first find exactly what the want is.

2. Hence we desire every Sunday-school worker in our bounds to communicate freely with our corresponding secretary, giving the present state of the work and making such suggestions as will better the condition in any particular whatever.

"When God has a good work for any one to do in the world, he usually gives him peculiar training for it."

3. You can greatly help our work by giving the names and postoffices of any good Sunday-school workers in your community, either preachers, laymen, or women.

4. If you are the chairman of an Annual Conference Sunday-school Board, please write our secretary, detailing your plans in operating your Board. They may be very useful to other chairmen. Also state whether or not you think it would be very helpful to have a conference of our forty-five Annual Conference chairmen at some central point in the near future, to discuss for a day or two vigorous measures regarding our committee matters, and looking to uniformity of plans in doing this important business. We have not touched the margin of it yet. "We are willing to be delighted with success, though we are somewhat indifferent to the homely qualities which insure it."

We are now perfecting a directory of all the chairmen of Annual Conference Sunday-school Boards, to be issued soon; and we suggest that chairmen correspond freely with each other touching their manner of conducting this business. There is an immense outcome yet to be reached at this point, and we earnestly desire to hasten its coming.

5. If you are a superintendent or other officer, and have some good, tested methods for school work, write them out briefly and send them to our secretary. "Be not afraid of enthusiasm; you need it; you can do nothing effectually without it. Laziness and aspiration make a poor team."

"When God kindles a new enthusiasm among men, he is apt to let fall the sacred fire into several hearts at one time."

"The church in all its membership must be aroused to an enthusiasm for humanity; not a zeal for a single class, but for man as man."

6. If you are a teacher, and earnestly desire better things in your department, write our secretary and ask for just what you want; and if it is at all possible, he will put you in the way of it, or direct you to some one who can.

"Plainness is the beauty of teaching. What good doeth a golden key that opens not?" "His Word the substance of our teachings, his Spirit our helper, himself our guide."

7. If any of our Bishops, pastors, laymen or women have a burning thought on some particular phase of our work, put it in a few strong paragraphs and send it to our secretary, to be issued by the committee as a leaflet or tract for general distribution, if it shall so desire.

"There is Christian salt enough in the city, but it is barreled up in the churches. A barrel of salt in the attic will not save a pound of meat in the cellar."

8. Don't forget that we are mightily in earnest about this matter, and "mean business" for our Lord.

"The Holy Spirit gives awfulness to these services. We are in his tremendous presence, under his omnipotent eye, in the grasp of his infinite power, in the gracious sphere of his healing love."

9. And, finally, let us hear from you by the thousands! If there are any workers in secluded places, where the blessed Lord alone sees them, we want to hear from and help them first. Our hands shall ever be open to such toilers.

"To-day let us rise and go to our work; to-morrow we shall rise and go to our reward."

PERSONAL.

The services of our corresponding secretary are entirely gratuitous, and he wants it so understood. Because he has unbounded faith in the possibilities of this work he has undertaken to do all he can for the advancement of it; and the only compensation he asks is the most hearty fellowship and co-operation of our workers in this field, and the smile of his Lord "at the end of the days." "You can pay evangelists with money, but you can not evangelize with money. What Christ began with self-giving will be maintained with self-giving." "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." "There are perils which threaten our nation, and there are Christian resources to meet them; therefore the necessity for co-operation and organization."

If we are faithful to the trust placed in our hands, "Chrysostoms may come forth from our ragged schools, and Augustines from the thickest darkness of London poverty."

God grant that so it may be!

Yours in blessed bonds,

China Grove Camp Meeting.

The camp meeting at China Grove, Pike county, Miss., closed on Wednesday, August 27. It was an excellent meeting, and resulted in about forty conversions and twenty-six accessions to the church. Considering that a large majority of the people in this section of country are members of some church, this is quite a good showing. We had excellent order; as good as I ever saw at any camp meeting. For some years past, except the meeting of last year, we were greatly disturbed; but the State authorities having arrested the principal ones in disorder, and made examples of them, they have concluded that they have been "paying too dear for their whistle." The leader in these disturbances says he is done with such work. It has cost him, I understand, $750. Some whisky was sold secretly, and the detectives have evidence upon which the persons will be prosecuted. We expect hereafter to have uninterrupted order.

We are grateful to God for the results. Three young preachers leave soon for Centenary College, and one of them will offer himself for the mission in China, being called to that special field. Bro. Watkins was present and presented the claims of Millsaps College, and secured about $500 on the endowment fund.

J. W. PUGH, Pastor.

Homer District.

I have greatly desired to write a short article for the ADVOCATE since our District Conference; but engagements have prevented. I could say but little of our Conference; but I wished to express the high estimate placed upon yours and Dr. Hunnicutt's visit, and the good expected therefrom on the paper and the school lines. I trust that new things favorable are developing on this district in these directions, and yet we have more to contend with than any other district in the Conference. A school in every town of any strength, and many of them contending for college honors; and, in connection with this, many of the people satisfied that their children should be off with no education. But I weary you.

We are moving along well; some friction, but this is necessary to health. I think that our increase in numbers will not equal last year; but I trust that there will be an advance in finance and spiritual growth.

Lottery receiving attention. A general rejection by the whites; but the future is to determine results. The pros are not idle. They have sent a circular to most of the voters in the State, and to some it will be "taking." I wish I could say more to you; but time and space prevent.

ROBERT RANDLE, P. E.

Phœnix, Miss.

We have just closed a meeting at Phœnix with gracious results. For several months a revival spirit was manifest at our regular service. The altar frequently would be crowded and souls converted. The meeting was preceded by a week of earnest prayer. Bro. Nicholson, of Edwards, came on Friday and preached with power; Bro. Holloman, of Canton, on Monday, in the Spirit of the Master. We were glad to have these brethren, so efficient in pulpit and labors abundant. We know and love them better. Men from seventy-five to children of tender years were received into the church; in some instances, whole families. The larger per cent.—in fact, most all—were grown people; many of them in middle life. I think we can safely estimate results at one hundred conversions, seventy accessions; and there will be more to follow. This is not all. Some old difficulties were buried, and brethren pledged themselves to dwell together in unity and love. We are in a meeting at Oak Ridge, with fine prospects of good results. Pray for us.

OUR COUNTRY.

BY J. G. WHITTIER.

Our thought of thee is glad with hope,
Dear country of our love and prayers;
Thy way is down no fatal slope,
But up to freer sun and airs

Tried as by furnace fires, and yet
By God's grace only stronger made;
In future tasks before thee set
Thou shalt not lack the old-time aid.

The fathers sleep, but men remain
As true and wise and brave as they;
Why count the loss without the gain?
The best is that we have to-day.

No lack was in thy primal stock,
No weakling founders builded here;
There were the men of Plymouth Rock,
The Puritan and Cavalier;

And they whose firm endurance gained
The freedom of the souls of men,
Whose hands unstained in peace maintained
The swordless commonwealth of Penn.

And time shall be the power of all
To do the work that duty bids;
And make the people's Council Hall
As lasting as the Pyramids.

Thy lesson all the world shall learn,
The nations at thy feet shall sit;
Earth's furthest mountain-tops shall burn
With watchfires from thine own uplit.

Great, without seeking to be great
By fraud or conquest - rich in gold,
But richer in the large estate
Of virtue which thy children hold

With peace that comes of purity,
And strength to simple justice due;
So owns our loyal dream of thee,
God of our fathers! make it true.

Oh, land of lands! to thee we give
Our love, our trust, our service free;
For thee thy son shall nobly live,
And at thy need shall die for thee.

Letter from Monteagle.

The natural beauties of this Cumberland plateau are deserving of more attention. This is my fourth season at Monteagle, yet I am charmed with new scenes in every morning jaunt. The Coliseum, Bridal Veil Falls, Alpine View, Sweet Fern Cave, Bragg's View, Table Rock, Forrest Point, Winston's Cascade, Cooley's Rift—these familiar haunts by no means exhaust the list of sights in this neighborhood.

My last expedition was with a party of sixteen in a passenger wagon (four horses) down the mountain to Big Spring, the source of water supply for assembly grounds. This I had heard spoken of as a fatiguing trip, and though quite familiar with the general route as overlooked from Table Rock, and curious for a nearer look at the dwellings and dwellers in the lovely little valley, had given little thought to the spring, which is easily located by the puffs of coal smoke rising from the brush (?) at foot of opposite mountain, where the waterworks' engine pumps day and night. A brisk trot of five minutes brought us to the descent; a shelf road with many turnings, adown the side of an elongated spur, crossing by a rocky ridge to another, and so on, bringing you among the plum thickets at base, with no mishap, in about half an hour. Most of our party preferred walking down the steeper grades—an easy feat, and, on such a morning, a delightful one. At one or more points the road crossed the throbbing artery of the water-pipe, carrying its life-giving current up the mountain.

On one hand rose a mighty bluff of seamed and bleached red sandstone flecked to the summit with patches of verdure—mosses, lichens, ferns—and facaded with pinoky tree growth, wherever was a possible foothold; on the other a steep declivity, densely wooded, with here and there great boulders jutting up, or masses of broken rock at all angles, indicating some primeval crash of matter, if not the wreck of worlds. After heavy rains the torrents pouring over the cliffs above wash the road-bed dangerously, requiring constant care. Among the trees below we descried a splendid specimen of what is here called "cucumber tree"—its scarlet-cheeked fruit or seed-pods, about size and shape of half grown papaws, brightening the dense foliage. The clear sunlight transformed the frowning precipice above us into a smiling hanging garden, and sifted through the dew-laden foliage beneath to all the innocent secrets hidden there. The majestic grandeur and stillness of our environment awed us into silence at first; then, in changing mood, we sang and shouted to each other around the curves, or ran and scrambled gleefully down the rocks. We gave merry greeting to the toiling market wagons going up with supplies for our camp, shrinking meanwhile into rocky niches by the wheel track that they might pass by. It was a morning of mornings, an inspiring scene, and we were jubilant. Another half-hour of merciless bumping, at a 2.40 gait, over a valley road paved with pebbles big as a hen's egg or a football, and, turning aside into a grassy, open glade, lo! we were at the foot of the opposite mountain and Big Spring. A chill wind in our faces made us draw up our shawls; and exclamations bade us look up. Confronting us, rose a semicircular sweep of sheer precipice in a lofty arch one hundred feet high, and measuring one hundred feet from base to base; there it gives in in a deep lateral gash or cleft, along which, and almost on a level with the spectator, flows silently a cool river of purest water, brimming over at near bank, and lost under the mountain at farther side and either end. How deep? From six inches to as many feet. How wide? None can answer, since only the southern brim reveals itself. It is an exhaustless basin, shoved out a little from under the mountain as if on purpose to supply the thirsty multitudes on yon familiar height. Doubtless, it re-appears somewhere below, and is feeder of Elk river. I surveyed that wonder in mute surprise. The half had not been told me. Moses and his fainting myriads before Horeb might have been satisfied at such a fountain. And since that hour I turn the convenient water-faucet, at my cottage door on Monteagle, with a fresh sense of God's ministry for his people at this tenting ground by the way.

Two hundred yards further along is a wonderful cave, as yet but partially explored. Descending by a ladder, you find yourself in a chamber twenty to thirty feet in diameter, and ten feet to ceiling in highest part, partially lighted from above. A jagged winding gallery leads off and downward from the lower side, through rocky labyrinths hung and studded with stalactites and stalagmites of limestone, the passage narrowing so that one must crawl to pass through; and the ooze and drip of water, coupled with the remembrance of that lost river behind, discourage amateur explorers.

The assembly completed its eighth annual session August 25. So successful was it in all departments that attendance scarcely flagged to the end, and hundreds of people still remain on the grounds. At the last grand concert, Saturday night, August 23, the audience numbered fully one thousand. The summer schools, the pulpit, the platform, the concert stage, the Sabbath-school and Bible study work—all have been well represented, and given great satisfaction and pleasure. The outlook is good. Each season marks an advance. Gate receipts in '89 exceeded those of '88 by fifty per cent. Gate receipts for '90 are $900 more than last year. At least eight new private cottages are already under contract for next season. A handsome reading and reception-room will be added to the public buildings on the mall before another year, and a long bridge will span the ravine dividing the Hall of Philosophy and the Parnassean Hill from nearer grounds.

At the closing exercises, President Millsaps in the chair, these and many other encouraging facts were developed. The unanimous re-election of President Millsaps is a token for good. He is sustained and assisted by an Executive and Finance Committee, chosen from and by the trustees of the assembly, composed of some of the best and ablest men, morally, financially and every other way, in the country. These men have summer homes for their families here. They are large-minded, far-seeing business men who seek to promote religion and culture and the highest advancement of our beloved Southland and people. God bless and prosper them in the grand endeavor. M. C.

The Service of Song.

The introduction of the new hymn book has, in many localities, been attended with a very marked improvement in congregational singing. In other localities the same results have not followed; congregational singing remains as it was—small in quantity and poor in quality. As a general improvement in that regard is surely "a consummation devoutly to be wished," I offer a few suggestions looking to that end.

In the first place, I wish to remark, in all seriousness, that the whole hymn book was made to be used. "Who does not know that?" perhaps some one is ready to say. Well, if "actions speak louder than words," there are many among us who believe that only a very small part of it was made to be used. There are preachers who seem to regard it as exceedingly heterodox to select for public use any except the oldest hymns—those that we have heard all our lives; and there are organists and leaders of song whose whole stock of tunes can be counted on a very few fingers. Why should this be the case? I say nothing against the old hymns, or tunes. They are good; they ought not to die, and will not; but are they the only good ones? Did the Hymn Book Committee, including our Bishops, commit the folly of spending moments of valuable time in putting into our hymnal hundreds of hymns that are not fit to be sung? This surely no one will affirm. I, for one, believe that the committee did its work well, admirably well. They have given us the very cream of the hymnic literature of the day. And many of the new hymns—that is, those that are not in the old hymn book—take rank among the very best in the collection. Why should these be ignored? Does some one render as a reason that "the people are not familiar with them"? I answer, How did the people become familiar with those they now sing? Was it not by singing them? How long does it take to become familiar with a good piece of music? Let Sam Jones hold a revival meeting in a town, and in a few days scores of the Excell songs will be sung in mansion and cabin for miles around. This shows how quickly a good tune can be caught by the masses. Now, a large number of the new hymns in our hymn book can be learned as readily as the Excell songs. You have only to sing them a half-dozen times in public worship, and the work is done. A good place to begin practicing a new song is at the prayer meeting. Much depends upon the pastor in this matter. A pastor who knows nothing of the new hymns in the collection will generally have a flock equally ignorant of the rich treasures it contains. On the other hand, the pastor who makes himself thoroughly familiar with its contents, and then uses those contents judiciously in public worship, will find his congregation appreciating our hymns more and more as the weeks roll by. Let it be remembered that here, as well as elsewhere, "there is no royal road to learning." Familiarity with the hymn book can be attained only at the cost of diligent, painstaking labor. As an aid to hymnological study, too much can hardly be said in praise of Dr. Tillott's work, "Our Hymns and Their Authors." Often times it adds greatly to our interest in a hymn to know who was the author, what was his occupation, what were his environments, and what the circumstances that brought it into being. All such questions are answered, as far as it is possible to answer them, in Dr. Tillett's book.

But for the fear of making this article too long, and thereby tempting the editor to commit it to the waste-basket, I would instance some of the pleasing and edifying information which this book contains concerning the origin of some of our hymns. As it is, I must forbear to do so, or wait until another time. I have now been using the book more than a year, it having been presented to me by my friend, Mr. D. M. Smith, of Nashville, soon after its publication. After using it for that length of time, my advice to every preacher, young and old, is, Get the book at once, and study it diligently. You will thereby increase your interest in, and appreciation of, our hymns, and prepare yourself for your divinely given work of feeding your flock. Much of the information contained in this book can be used with good effect in prayer meetings and elsewhere.

The service of song is too important a part of worship to be neglected, or only half attended to. No preacher ought habitually to go to his prayer meeting with his hymns to be selected after he gets there. Usually he should select them beforehand, being careful to "bring forth things new and old out of his treasury." It is a good rule to let the new (i. e., the unfamiliar) hymns come in the early part of the service; otherwise they might serve as a check to the rising tide of spirituality.

The selection of hymns should also be made prayerfully, and with an eye to spiritual edification. If the pastor should have an eye to pleasing the taste of a few musical esthetes, there are very many hymns that would never be used at all. Whoever saw a "cultured musician" that didn't abominate "The Old Ship of Zion," "What wondrous love is this," "I'm going home to die no more," and the whole class to which these belong? And yet these "camp meeting ditties," as they are called, are often just what is needed to enkindle the fires of devotional enthusiasm. The selections of a professional musician would not be half so effective. The pastor needs to hear all this in mind, and then make his selections with reference to the spiritual good of his entire flock. W. C. BLACK.

JACKSON, Miss.

A Plea for the Orphan.

Since 1866, I have thought seriously upon the neglect of our church in not establishing and maintaining homes for orphans. There is much prejudice against the Roman Catholics in our midst; but if we manifested the same zeal, expended the same amount of money and patience that they do in caring for the fatherless, how many neglected little ones might be sheltered, taught and provided for, trained for lives of usefulness? Some say we have plenty of orphan asylums. Where are they? The few we have, so small, so poorly provided with accommodations and means that orphans are refused admittance. "No room; full," is the comforting reply to the call for even temporary assistance or shelter. Can not, and should not, each Conference establish and maintain a home for orphans? Let it be large enough and sufficiently well arranged that when children whose father or both parents die and they are left homeless, an application for shelter may not be met with cold refusal. Hundreds of happy, prosperous people attend our camp meetings every summer; no doubt a call upon their generous feelings and Christian charity for the suffering, the afflicted, would elicit commendation of our plans and engage their assistance in raising funds for their accomplishment. Let everyone who is able to make up the necessary outfit, and pay travelling expenses, contribute $100, $50, $25, or even $10. Multiply the smallest number (ten) by ten thousand, and a beginning towards the purchase of suitable grounds and buildings would be made; and surely many fortunate persons would contribute larger sums. I heard a gentleman, making no pretensions to Christianity, say, that after his daughter had already spent considerable money on a summer outfit, she requested more money to buy new dresses for the camp meeting. He told her if she went for the good of her soul and the good of others, it seemed to him what she had was sufficient; if she went only for show, she had better remain at home. This incident suggested to me the above plan of raising funds for an institution which would be a blessing to our church—to our country. I thought: Oh, if all the good camp-meeting folks, while so well enjoying themselves, could only have suggested to them the idea of thus contributing to the erection and support of homes for the homeless children in the sections over which our Conferences preside, how many would gladly give small or large sums according to their means? I have been told that this "is not in line with the way our people work." One question I ask, Have true Methodists any set way of doing good? Can we not step out of the beaten track? Orphans are too often forced to go to anyone who will clothe, feed and work them, paying no attention to their moral or religious training, and sometimes they are made zealous workers against the church of their fathers. I hope the Conferences, the membership, the ministers, will think more seriously upon the results of neglecting the orphans, and set to work to providing homes, instruction and maintenance for them.

Chauhtemoc.

THE INDIAN HOLIDAY IN MEXICO.

Three hundred and sixty-nine years ago the last of the Aztec emperors, Chauhtemoc, was tortured by the Spanish conquerors to compel him to reveal where the hidden treasure of the empire was. He endured the physical pain with the stoicism of a Greek philosopher, and gave such an example of heroism that history has recorded few similar. There is a monument erected to this heroic chief in the second glorieta of the Paseo de la Reforma in this city. The scene of the torture appears on one of the faces of the pedestal, and the statue was unveiled by President Diaz three years ago, on August 22, at a cost of $97,914 21. Since that day, each year, on the same date, this feast has been celebrated. The exercises at the Chauhtemoc statue were very impressive. The infantry, artillery and police detailed for the day were formed in line to the scene of the ceremonies by eight o'clock, and by nine were gathered thousands of people from all classes of society in the city. At nine o'clock a bugle announced the approach of the presidential party, who came in carriages, escorted by a mounted police, who escorted them to the pavilion on the south of the statue. There were two temporary edifices—one on the north, and the other south of the statue. The one north represented an Aztec edifice, with a canopy for a background, in which was a central disc, symbolizing the Aztec sun. On either side were banks of evergreens, on which were fastened peculiar roses, made by the Indians of the magney plant. The platform was lined with Indians in the Aztec dress, and bearing gay banners. On both sides of the pavilion were wings set apart for the various States. The decoration of that of Mexico attracted universal attention. A solid bar of white roses, two feet wide, spanned the front entrance. In this bar of roses was worked in blue pansies, "Estado de Mexico." It was supported by columns of evergreens, around which were twined strings of roses of all colors. A canopy was formed of Spanish moss, and the background banked with flowering plants and wreaths of flowers. The wing was enclosed in a fence of woven tules. The building on the south of the statue was said to be a perfect representation of an Aztec temple. The front was an open, flat arch, supported by two Aztec pillars, and about the bases were gathered trophies of the time of Chauhtemoc. There were paintings of Aztec figures. The cornice at each end was surmounted by idols, and in the center a fac simile of the calendar stone. Between the sky background and the steps leading from the temple were chairs and tables banked with roses, wreaths, pillars of roses, and evergreens of every description.

The President and his party stepped from their carriages to the beautiful strains of our national hymn and roaring cannon. There was then a discourse pronounced in the Aztec language, and a poem delivered eulogistic of the brave Aztec chief. During the exercises the Indians dressed in gorgeous costumes continued to arrive, bearing garlands to place on the statue. One society brought poles covered deep with flowers, and topped with beautiful bouquets. Others had stalks of carrizo, or cane, to which garlands were attached. The Indian bands were all out in full force. President Diaz, to the music of the national hymn and a salute of twenty-one guns, placed a beautifully woven wreath on the statue. This was the signal for a shower of floral offerings, and in less than ten minutes the base of the monument was buried in roses. The Indians then began their wild dance around the statue to the weird strains of their own bands of music. This is the Indian holiday in Mexico. The scene was so unique, and I so interested, I thought even a faint and imperfect description might not be uninteresting to the friends at home. We had no school, as it is a national holiday.

We are holding the fort the best we can. Mr. Weems holds his District Conference this week. It is somewhat late; but he waited, hoping to have a Bishop with us. He will do the best he can now, depending alone upon the Lord to help him. Please, all our friends, pray that it may be a spiritual feast, as well as a business meeting. Pray without ceasing for poor Mexico, and its few struggling missionaries. Ah! I would you could realize how much we need your prayers, your sympathy, and kindly words of cheer.

Conscience.

Conscience seems to be simply the influence of the Holy Spirit operating upon the spirit of man to prompt him to do right. What is right, he must learn. As long as the Spirit of God strives with man, he is under two opposing influences: one prompting him to good, the other to evil. And the free agency of man consists in his ability to yield to whichever he chooses. Without that power he would, no more than a machine, be entitled to either reward or punishment. But God has declared that his Spirit shall not always strive with man; and the Lord says to the Holy Spirit, "Let him alone; he is joined to idols," much oftener and sooner than many people think. Fatal danger-line! once crossed, and the doom of the soul is sealed forever.

On the other hand, St. James says: "Submit yourselves, therefore, to God. Resist the devil, and he will flee from you." And St. Paul says: "Know ye not that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness?"

And we read that after Christ had steadfastly resisted all the temptations of the devil, and had finally capped the climax by emphatically telling him, "Get thee hence, Satan," "then the devil leaveth him; and behold angels came and ministered unto him."

For one human being to influence another he must make an impression upon his spirit (mind) by means of speech, or sign, or other physical medium; but the Spirit of God can immediately and directly move upon our spirits and influence us—Spirit impress spirit—without any inter-medium. And the devil, being an evil spirit, can do the same thing unseen. But God has endowed us with reason and memory, which he requires us to cultivate to their utmost capacities, and exercise them diligently and honestly, to enable us to investigate everything pertaining to our duty, and decide correctly all questions of right or wrong devolving upon us. And then the divine influence called conscience comes in to urge us to do what we believe to be right and proper for us to do.

If any have desired to do right, but have erred on account of failure to investigate properly and fully enough to arrive at correct conclusions, "his work shall be burned, and he shall suffer loss, but he himself shall be saved, yet as by fire."

But of course his "loss," and danger of everlasting destruction, must necessarily be in proportion to his negligence to improve his opportunities. For we have the encouraging assurance from the apostle that "if any lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him." He will furnish the daylight for us to work in, but we must make good use of it. So all may have the necessary wisdom by seeking it aright, and all may be happy on earth and saved in heaven by obeying the promptings of the Holy Spirit. But to enjoy these inestimable blessings we must be in real earnest and make it the business of life to learn our duty and serve God in spirit and in truth. The form of godliness without the power will not answer the purpose; it will prove a miserable failure in this world and in the next.

PLAISANCE, La.

A Church Dedication.

I am glad to report the dedication of a beautiful country church to the worship of God at Andrew's Chapel, Columbus circuit, North Mississippi Conference. Some three months ago the good people of Andrew's Chapel decided to build a new church, and at once proceeded to raise the needed funds. Mrs. S. S. Nelson, a most estimable widow lady, headed the list of subscribers with the princely sum of five hundred dollars; and every cent of the amount needed was soon raised before the contract was let out for the building of the church. I have never had less trouble in raising money to build a church.

Last Sunday, August 24, was the day of dedication, and a more pleasant occasion I have never attended. The Rev. B. F. Phillips, my predecessor in this charge, was invited to preach the dedication sermon; and some of those who know him as a preacher said it was the best effort they ever heard him make. There were some six hundred people in attendance, notwithstanding the Sam Jones meeting about twelve miles on one side of us, and the Tabernacle Camp Meeting an equal distance on the other. But for these two attractive gatherings, it is estimated there would have been fifteen hundred people at our dedication. We had two services in the day, and dinner on the ground; and there was ample provisions made for all, for after dinner was over, and all had "eaten to the fill," there were "twelve baskets full of fragments taken up," besides several boxes and baskets full of provisions, which had not been opened at all. We could have fed another crowd of equal size. A more sumptuous dinner I never saw spread anywhere. After dinner the Rev. J. S. Oakley, our pastor at this place, gave us an able and very appropriate address on Methodism. Upon the whole, I have never passed a more enjoyable day, and I think all others will agree with me when I say there was not one single incident during the day to mar the happiness of anyone. It is a day long to be remembered by many of us. The church is an elegant building, built by Messrs. Mills and Wells, contractors of this place; and the best that may be said of it is, it is entirely free from debt. The building is 32x48 feet, with a large tower and 8 foot vestibule in front; has elevated seats, carpeted aisles and pulpit, nice set of pulpit chairs, chandeliers, etc.—all that is necessary to make a country church complete. In a word, it is the finest church I know of outside of the large towns or cities. Our people may justly feel proud of it.

Fraternally yours,

F. P. SPENCER, P. C.

COLUMBUS, Miss.

To the Treasurers of Parsonage Societies.

Dear Sisters: Upon you rests a great responsibility. Upon your faithfulness in collecting and forwarding funds depends our ability to relieve the great discomfort, if not actual suffering, of many of God's consecrated servants who have appealed to our society for assistance.

We have before us now some pressing applications that must, if possible, receive attention before the middle of October.

With this weighing upon us, we appeal to you to make a special effort to collect all dues and such other donations as you can secure, and forward at once to our Conference treasurer. Remember it is all for Christ and his holy cause. Do not delay. Be prompt for his sake.

We beg that any member of a Parsonage Society who may read this, will call to it the attention of the treasurer; for it oftentimes happens we fail to see in our paper the very item most important. Not only call attention to this, but aid all you can in collecting the funds.

Friends to our movement who are not members of the society, yet would help us in a pressure for immediate action—there comes to all a time when delay will defeat the object in view—can send their contributions to Rev. David Morton, 705 West Chestnut St., Louisville, Ky.

LUCINDA B. HELM,
General Secretary.

Miss Willard and the Salvation Army.

MR. EDITOR: Will you do the W. C. T. U. the service to state in your columns that Miss Willard has no idea of uniting the W. C. T. U. and Salvation Army, as some papers are industriously reporting. At a recent meeting of the Salvationists in Chicago, Miss Willard was invited to speak; and, after expressing the friendliness of her organization for all bodies whose purpose is the good of humanity, invited them to send, as is customary, a fraternal delegate to the next National W. C. T. U. Convention. This is the sum of it. H. B. K.

A man should never be ashamed to own he has been in the wrong, which is but saying in other words, that he is wiser to-day than he was yesterday.—Pope.

From the Work.

OPELOUSAS DISTRICT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

I give you a few items for your readers. By some means the people of this district have been impressed with the idea that presiding elders are a fifth wheel in our machinery, and that Quarterly Conferences are a useless appendage and mean nothing more than to have a few meaningless questions asked by the presiding elder, and have a collection taken for the "fifth wheel," and all is over—nothing more expected. With this mistaken view of the office of presiding elder and the nature and design of the Quarterly Conference, it has been next to impossible to impress official members that it was their duty to attend the quarterly meetings. I suppose I have not met much over one-half of the officials of the district up to date. Often when they attend the Quarterly Conference, they seem to think they have no part or let in the religious exercises of the meeting; either to get good out of it themselves or to benefit others. And as soon as the Conference is adjourned they are off for their homes or to business, and that is the last of them till the next quarterly meeting. Then often if it is not at their own church, they are absent. This state of things has greatly interfered with the material and spiritual interest of our quarterly meetings. Oh, for a revival of "old Methodism" on this going up to quarterly meetings by the officials of the church. Ten or fifteen officials added to the usual congregation of country or town, with their spiritual songs, prayers and hearty responses, would greatly increase the interest as well as the probability of good in the quarterly meetings. We have a few who are always on hand, and they will be rewarded for their faithfulness and fidelity. These are the pillars upon which the church is to be built in this country.

I am glad to be able to report that there has been a decided improvement on this, as well as on other lines, on this my third round, now near its close. The attendance of official members has been largely increased. There is a decided improvement in sympathy between the officials and the ministry, and a great improvement in church workers among the laity. At one of our Quarterly Conferences the pastor remarked, "This is the largest attendance of officials I have seen for the two years I have been on the work."

The spiritual interest is developing at almost every appointment. The preachers are having some good meetings. At several quarterly meetings on this round, protracted services have been held with good results. I was able to remain with and assist brethren at Vinton, Grand Chenier and Crowley. Bro. Daves took up the meeting when the pastor left it (he being compelled to leave), and run it for a week longer with grand success. Bros. Blocker and Tom Carter were continuing the meeting at Crowley, when I left last Monday, with good prospect of success. Just received a postal from Bro. Hocutt, saying: "Have just closed my third protracted service. At Indian Bayon had eighty-eight accessions to the church; one hundred and five accessions on the work up to date." Glory to God for the good work!

The mission fields in the district are taking on new life and developing into more substantial proportions. New fields are opening up to us and are being occupied by our workers, in the fear of God. By the power of the gospel of Christ we expect to conquer and possess them for Christ. There is, perhaps, more missionary territory in this district than in all the rest of the Conference. It will require two or three more preachers next year to supply the territory taken in this year. Our preachers have been "going into the regions beyond." A large portion of this "French-Creole" population are almost entirely destitute of the gospel or church privileges. Yet, with the proper effort, it may be taken for Christ. Is it worth taking? If China, Japan and Mexico are worth saving, I don't see why this people ought not to be saved. Their souls are worth just as much. They are in complete spiritual darkness. We are spending thousands to convert the heathen in foreign lands. That is all right; we wish we had millions more to convert them. But should we let the heathen at our door perish for the Word? Let our Mission Board at home concentrate its means on a given point like this, and send one of our best, most attractive preachers, full of the Holy Ghost, whose heart burns with the holy fire for souls, into this field, and make an appropriation sufficient to keep him there, as we do in Mexico. Then this country shall be conquered for Christ. We have a man now occupying a part of this waste field—Rev. J. L. Gibson, M. D. He is doing a good work in and about Lake Arthur. With what assistance he has received from the Conference Church Extension Board, he will soon have up a neat and attractive house of worship, that will tell for good on the people of that country for generations to come, and will form the key that will unlock that whole region of country to Protestant Christianity. Bro. J. W. Rowlett is doing a good work at Thibodeaux, and has the promise of developing there a good self-sustaining work. I must say that I think the outlook of the district is good. The farmers are blessed with fine crop prospects, and I feel assured that our Conference collections, as well as the support of the ministry, will come up well at the close.

In conclusion, let me say, Doctor, that I fully endorse your editorial, "A Questionable Policy." It was timely and well put. Thank you.

Yours truly, JNO. A. MILLER.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE ITEMS.

Our fellow-laborers—Revs. J. A. Bowen and T. W. Lewis—are restored to health sufficiently to resume pastoral work. The church in Grenada is undergoing repairs and improvement to the amount of about $3,000. It will be in good style for the Conference in December.

President Newell is cheerful over the prospect of a good opening of Grenada Collegiate Institute, September 9. He reports the outlook as being very encouraging.

Rev. W. J. O'Bryant, Cockrum circuit, and Rev. J. A. Leech, Byhalia circuit, have had successful meetings in their charges. The latter received 33 into the church at Emory and 4 at Fountain Head.

Wall Hill, Chulahoma circuit—Rev. R. M. Davis, P. C.—has had a gracious revival. The church had abundant refreshing from the Lord, and 13 or more were added to the membership.

The South Union Camp Meeting, Chester circuit, resulted in 20 accessions to the church.

The camp meeting at Bailey Camp Ground, Holly Springs district, was in session ten days. Congregations were large and the preaching good; but there were difficulties in the way that hindered the work of the Lord, so that not much apparent good was accomplished.

From August 2 to 25 the writer was in meetings, day and night, without intermission; attended from two to five services each day; preached twenty sermons, and heard more than forty preached by others. Sold books as follows: Bailey Camp Meeting, $67 55; Fountain Head, $27 50; Wall Hill, $58 70; other places, $25. The revised church hymn book gives universal satisfaction, and does effective service where used in our congregations. Let all the people supply themselves with it, and the new Discipline, which is now ready.

The many friends of Rev. J. H. Brooks, a supernumerated member of this Conference, will be glad to learn that he is able to preach and labor with much vigor in revival meetings. His presence is a benediction to any home or congregation that he enters. May he be able to preach that semi-centennial sermon at our next Conference, and to remain with us yet many years!

G. W. BACHMAN.

ABBEVILLE CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

I closed a week's protracted services at Indian Bayou Church, Saturday, August 23, with fair success. Some of the church members were revived. We straightened the roll of membership, appointed six class leaders and started the social meetings anew; organized a young men's prayer meeting. We baptized 2 adults and 13 infants, making 67 this year. Eighty-eight joined the church, making 105 up to date. There was a number of conversions. I do not know how many. The Lord is blessing this people, temporally and spiritually. The harvest is ripe here, but the laborers are few, as I am the only Protestant minister in this parish. We need a man with good common sense that can preach in French. An American man (as the French call us) will do best. They would have more confidence in him. Why can not some young men now studying for the ministry in Centenary or Vanderbilt make a specialty of the French language and its dialects, and then offer themselves to preach the gospel to the perishing thousands in South Louisiana who would be glad to hear the truth in their language.

F. G. HOCUTT.

OKOLONA CIRCUIT.

Two weeks ago I closed my meeting at Pine Grove, five miles from Aberdeen, which resulted in a great revival in the church and a great spiritual awakening among sinners. We had 19 conversions and 22 accessions to the church. Among the number that joined our church were a Baptist preacher and his wife. So you see the good work is going on. Bro. Williams, a local preacher, preached three sermons for us during the meeting. They expect to build a new church at that place soon. I took my collections ordered by the Conference at the close of the meeting, and got about 30 per cent. in excess of the assessment.

F. A. WHITSON.

NOTES FROM PLAQUEMINE BRULEE AND RAYNE CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Our revival at Plaquemine Brulee has accomplished much good, in addition to the eighteen accessions to the church, and the twenty-one conversions, and the good work is still increasing. We have several new workers as a result of the revival. At Prairie Hayes the Lord graciously blessed us; nineteen accessions and thirty conversions. The congregation at this place was very large every night, and a spirit of devotion pervaded. Bro. Pilley, of the Calcasieu mission, aided us part of the time at each of these points, and will ever have the good wishes and prayers of our people.

We are now at Crowley, in the second week of our meeting. Bro. Miller, our excellent presiding elder, was with us last week, and Bro. Isbell, this week. While this meeting is good, yet it is not in many respects a success. We have not had many conversions or accessions, but the church has been strengthened.

Bro. W. W. Dixon has had our church edifice beautifully painted, and it looks grand.

We shall hold, at least, three more meetings before Conference, and we are praying and believing for a grand success. Oh, may the Lord be with us in converting and sanctifying power!

The corn crop of this country is good. Cotton is doing well. Rice (which is the main culture) is generally fair. The rains have been partial; hence the rice is not everywhere good.

We are deeply sad at having to give up my co-worker, Bro. Thos. Carter, who goes in next month to New Orleans to teach. I hope the ADVOCATE will send us another good young man.

R. M. BLOCKER.

INDIAN VILLAGE, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

I have held four of my protracted meetings for the season. Our first was held at Frenton's Chapel—a recently organized society; and one that promises to do much work in the Master's vineyard. The church there was revived, and several members received into her pales. Our next in turn was at Pine Grove, where (I have been informed) Dr. Evans used occasionally to preach. Believers there were strengthened, and some professed conversion. The third was at Indian Village—the largest society on the work. The meeting here was fine. The members revived, the backslider reclaimed, and sinners converted. Our last was at Sardis, where we had the assistance of our beloved presiding elder, Bro. Randle, whose pulpit efforts there were strong tokens of his love for the souls of his hearers. "The Lord has done great things for us." Glory to his name! I have four meetings yet to hold. "Pray for us."

I. T. REAMES.

EDEN, LA.

My kind presiding elder and brethren of the District Conference granted me leave of absence from the Conference; so Friday eve I boarded the train for Arkansas, my old State. Arrived at the home of some of my relatives on Saturday; preached Sunday at one of my old appointments on Saline circuit. I assisted Bro. G. S. Turrentine, presiding elder of Saline circuit, in a meeting at Piney Grove. We had a glorious time; twenty-one accessions. God bless Bro. Turrentine and the dear people of Piney Grove! They have built a new church since I was in charge of that circuit, and are improving much every way.

As I came back by Colfax, I found Bro. Goodwin conducting the first prayer meeting service on Wednesday night, August 6. He said they had a revival during the District Conference, with twenty-seven accessions. They have the new church finished now. I am now hard at work, day and night, on Centerville circuit. Have some good times. J. H. CALLAWAY.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
Is a peculiar medicine. It is carefully prepared from Sarsaparilla, Dandelion, Mandrake, Dock, Pipsissewa, Juniper Berries, and other well-known and valuable vegetable remedies, by a peculiar combination, proportion and process, giving to Hood's Sarsaparilla curative power not possessed by other medicines. It effects remarkable cures where other preparations fail.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
Is the best blood purifier before the public. It eradicates every impurity, and cures Scrofula, Salt Rheum, Boils, Pimples, all Humors, Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Sick Headache, Indigestion, General Debility, Catarrh, Rheumatism, Kidney and Liver Complaints, overcomes that tired feeling, creates an appetite, and builds up the system.

Hood's Sarsaparilla
Has met peculiar and unparalleled success at home. Such has become its popularity in Lowell, Mass., where it is made, that whole neighborhoods are taking it at the same time. Lowell druggists sell more of Hood's Sarsaparilla than of all other sarsaparillas or blood purifiers. Sold by druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Apothecaries, Lowell, Mass.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla
The Best Blood Medicine

So say Leading Physicians and Druggists, and their opinion is indorsed by thousands cured by it of Scrofula, Eczema, Erysipelas, and other diseases of the blood.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla has won its reputation by years of valuable service to the community. It is the best."—R. S. Lang, Druggist, 212 Merrimack st., Lowell, Mass.

Dr. W. P. Wright, Paw Paw Ford, Tenn., says: "In my practice, I invariably prescribe Ayer's Sarsaparilla for chronic diseases of the blood."

Dr. R. R. Boyle, Third and Oxford sts., Philadelphia, Pa., writes: "For two years I have prescribed Ayer's Sarsaparilla in numerous instances, and I find it highly efficacious in the treatment of all disorders of the blood."

L. M. Robinson, Pharmacist, Sabina, O., certifies: "Ayer's Sarsaparilla has always been a 'great' seller. My customers think there is no blood-purifier equal to it."

"For many years I was afflicted with scrofulous running sores, which, at last became so bad the doctors advised amputating one of my legs to save my life. I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla and soon saw an improvement. After using about two dozen bottles the sores were healed. I continue to take a few bottles of this medicine each year, for my blood, and am no longer troubled with sores. I have tried other reputed blood-purifiers, but none does so much good as Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—D. A. Robinson, Neal, Kansas.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 1890.

Sam Jones at West Point, Miss.

BY J. D. CAMERON, D. D.

I have written nothing of our meeting because I have been so busy, and because I scarcely knew where to begin or how to end. A congregation ranging from three to ten thousand people had necessarily to come from every part of the country; and the results be spread over the same. The good accomplished by such preaching to such crowds eternity alone can reveal. Of course, there were those who were not favorable to the meeting before it began; but I have heard but one unfavorable criticism since it closed, and have heard of but one man who was severe in his criticisms (he did not attend the meeting); but he very soon learned that the part of wisdom was to keep silence. Some who cursed Sam Jones during the progress of the meeting now bless God for having sent him here. His service for men only exceeded anything I ever saw. For one hour and a half he exposed and denounced the leading vices of the country, in the presence of about six thousand men, in the most fearless and yet loving manner, and at the close of the sermon, under the proposition to quit their sins, give their hearts to God and consecrate their lives to his service, hundreds and hundreds of stalwart men came forward, and gave their hands, some of them formerly the most wicked men in the country. As to the number of conversions, of course I can make no guess, as they are scattered all over the country. I believe the work to be genuine and thorough, and that time will prove it so. A moral revolution has taken place in our town. Many who were formerly leaders in sin are now on the side of God and the right. I believe the drinking and gambling places are doomed. One man who kept a gambling-room broke up his tables on Monday after the meeting closed, and has gone into another business.

Our best citizens have formed themselves into a Law and Order League, and have entered vigorously upon their work, and seem determined to have law and order. Some who were the most wicked are now holding family prayer. Some say, "I have been a good church member; I am going to be a good Christian now." Many incidents of the most thrilling character might be given, but I would not know where to stop. I am not going to attempt a vindication of Sam Jones. Under God, he does that himself by the fruit of his labor. I will say this much, however: When I told some of my people that I had secured his services for a meeting, they asked, "How much did you agree to pay him?" My answer was: "Well, really, that is the first time I had thought of that. I just got him to promise to come and hold a meeting for me, as I would any other Methodist preacher, and there was not a word said about money." I will say further that money was mentioned between us but once during the meeting, and that incidentally. The consecrated and sweet-spirited Stuart was with him, and did his part of the preaching much to the delight and profit of the people. Let all true Christians pray God to bless these brethren in their great work.

Facts for Millsaps College Day.

The birth-year of Methodism was 1739. The corner-stone of Kingswood School was laid the same year by John Wesley. Dr. Adam Clark, the great preacher and scholar, graduated at Kingswood School, the first institution of Methodism.

In 1890 the Wesleyan Methodist Church in England has 847 lay schools, containing 180,000 children, and an annual income of $1,233,390; four theological institutions, two training-schools and a number of institutions which rank with the best colleges in America.

In 1784, at the Christmas Conference, the Methodist Episcopal Church in America was organized. At that Conference steps were taken to establish Cokesbury College.

In 1830 Methodism was behind all the evangelical denominations in the number of colleges. In 1890 she is in advance of them all. In 1884 there were 370 colleges and universities in the United States. Of these 309 were denominational and 61 undenominational. Of the denominational colleges the figures are as follows:

Methodist (all kinds), 63; Roman Catholic, 57; Presbyterian (all kinds), 46; Baptist, (all kinds), 45; Congregational, 26; Christian and Disciple, 17; Lutheran, 14; Episcopal, 11; United Brethren, 7; Reformed (German and Dutch), 7; Friend, 5; Universalist, 4; Evangelical Association, 2; Hebrew, 1; Seventh-Day Adventist, 1; Unitarian, 1; Swedenborgian, 1.

All institutions for the higher education. The following figures are at hand: Lutheran, 81; Disciple, 42; Baptist, Regular, North and South, 125; M. E. Church and M. E. Church, South, 217. Of these, the M. E. Church has 144 and the M. E. Church, South, 73.

The first Methodist college established in the South was Augusta College, located at Augusta, Bracken county, Ky., in 1823. In 1844 it was consolidated with Transylvania University at Lexington, Ky. LaGrange College, located at LaGrange, Ala. (removed to Florence, Ala., in 1855, and name changed to Florence Wesleyan University), was organized in 1830, with Rev. Robert Paine (afterward Bishop) as president.

Randolph-Macon College, located at Boydton, Mecklenburg county, Va. (removed to Ashland in 1866), was chartered in 1830, and opened in 1832, with Rev. M. P. Parks as acting president. Rev. Stephen D. Olin, D. D., was elected the first president, but was not installed until March, 1834. From the fall of 1832 to March, 1834, Prof. Parks acted as president.

Emory College, at Oxford, Ga., was organized in 1837, with Rev. Ignatius Few, D. D., as president. In 1838 Emory and Henry College, located at Emory, Va., was established with Rev. Charles Collins as president. In 1839 Centenary College was projected and located at Brandon, Miss., but was removed to Jackson, La., in 1845. In 1853 Wofford College, at Spartanburg, S. C., was founded. And the same year Trinity College, in Randolph county, N. C. In 1855 Central College, at Fayette, Mo., was organized. Vanderbilt University, at Nashville, Tenn., was founded in 1873. To this university Cornelius Vanderbilt gave $1,000,000.

The first institution for the higher education of young women in the Southwest was located at Washington, Miss., in 1819, and known as the Elizabeth Female Academy. The Wesleyan Female College, at Macon, Ga., was founded in 1839.

A comparison of 1830 with 1884 will show the progress of denominational education. This is answer to the claim that the times are outgrowing church schools. In 1830 the denominational colleges were 71.5 per cent. of the whole. In 1884 they were 83.5 per cent. In 1830 the students in the denominational colleges were 74.6 per cent. of the whole. In 1884 they were 79.2 per cent.

Millsaps College.

The present need of a Mississippi Methodist college grows upon me. Within the present week an agent of a college, not of our own State, nor of our Conference, came in to my pastorate and secured a number of students. Is it not humiliating that our boys have to be sent out of our State and out of our Conference for education? It is claimed that Mississippi is ahead of all the Southern States in the provision for the intellectual culture of her children, and yet Mississippi Methodists have to send their sons out of their own State. It makes one grow impatient for the opening of our Mississippi Methodist college. Said a minister of long standing in the Conference: "I expected my boy to start to our own college this fall."

Surely the autumn succeeding the one in which the fifty-thousand-dollar proposition was made, ought to have witnessed the inauguration of the institution. Every scholastic year which passes without its establishment is of untold loss to the church. Our laymen, our preachers ought to be educated at home. As the autumn will not witness the establishment, can it not be done in the early winter? The first year of an institution is necessarily largely given up to organization and adaptation. Could not, therefore, our college be located and organized in 1891? Let a beginning be made. Let plans of architecture be diligently studied, and the most thoroughly approved one be chosen. Let the corner-stone be laid, and the work of rearing for future generations go steadily forward. Meanwhile let temporary buildings be secured, and part of a faculty be elected. Then let such students as may come be taught with reference to future classification. Why delay? Yale College was organized just as soon as the idea of "the collegiate school for the Colony of Connecticut" was conceived. They selected a "head master," and flung open their doors. From March to September they had one student. The number increased to eight, when they elected an additional teacher. Thanks to the munificence of Major Millsaps, and to the appreciation of Mississippi Methodists, our beginning as compared to theirs will be as the river to the rill. The illustration is used simply to impress the necessity of immediate action. Let us "perform the doing of it." The additional fifty thousand is already in hand, and by the session of the Conferences will be largely increased. Shall this money be idle from January to October? Shall Mississippi Methodists even thus longer bear the reproach of not having provided a place within their State to educate their sons?

The location of the college ought to be selected solely with reference to the greatest interest of the greatest number of our people for the ages to come. It is most earnestly to be hoped that not one single person entrusted with the important responsibility of locating a college for the use of all the citizens of the State for all time, would be guilty of the narrowness, the sin, of permitting private or sectional interests to influence his ballot against the common interest of our great Church and of our great State. If there is one place above all others which has precedence (1) in rallying to its support the greatest number of our people, (2) in easiness and cheapness of access, (3) in healthfulness, and (4) in social and moral surroundings, then, in the name of fairness, truth and justice, let that place be chosen.

MILLSAPS COLLEGE DAY.

It was a happy thought of Bishop Galloway to appoint a day upon which by concert of action all our pastors and Sunday-school superintendents should present the interests of our college to the people. It is so reasonable in its claim upon all pastors and superintendents and in its promise of good results, that surely no one will fail to observe it. It is thrilling to reflect that on the same specially appointed day, October 12, 1890, every Methodist congregation and Sunday-school in Mississippi should be engaged in considering the subject of education, and in providing for the establishment and equipment of a grand male college. It will be a golden opportunity to indoctrinate our people and to arouse their appreciation of the subject of education—of home education, of religious education, of denominational education. Then, while enthusiasm is at its highest, it will be a good time to secure money and notes for the endowment of Millsaps College.

Young Men and the Church.

The Richmond Christian Advocate, discussing this subject, has this pertinent paragraph, to which we invite the reader's attention:

Young men are largely influenced by the life of members of the church. They read the lives of professing Christians much more than they do the Bible. Any inconsistency that they may detect they set down to the discredit, not of the man who is guilty of it, but of religion itself. It is the fashion of the world to hold the church responsible for all the weaknesses and shortcomings of its members. And we verily believe that worldliness in the church and the open and flagrant violation of church vows on the part of men and women professing godliness is one of the most fruitful causes of the world's indifference to religion. What use have men for a religion that makes them no better in spirit or purer in life than many of its professors? And all this groaning over the indifference and hardness of sinners is mere empty cant, so long as the groaners are themselves mere pretenders, having the form of godliness, but practically denying its power. Let the church, her ministry and laity, live up to the obligations of their high calling, become more fully imbued with the spirit of our holy religion, and illustrate it more consistently and conspicuously in their lives, and they will find lesser reason to complain of the world's neglect of Christ and his church. The world wants Christ, but not the false Christ presented in the character and lives of many who call themselves Christians.

At the Grave of the Mighty.

August 25, 1890.—To-day I stood by the grave of my dear friend and co-laborer in the gospel in the Louisiana Annual Conference in the days of other years. Perhaps no other field required more nerve and moral courage to endure as a good soldier of Jesus Christ than the territory of Louisiana.

In sad reverie, while leaning my head upon the granite pillar that marks his grave, memory, true to itself, had preserved in store many of the incidents of his life of the long, long ago—his sermons and sayings, his Conference debates and humorous editorials of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, away back in the fifties.

These were arrayed and passed in review before me in rapid succession, and I lived over many years of the past in a few moments of time. Snow-white flowers, fresh and lovely, cover the grave of the late Bishop H. N. McTyeire, indicative of his pure, uniform and symmetrical character. In an opposite arm of the Maltese cross, encircling the granite pillar, hedged about by a beautiful row of boxwood, twelve or fourteen inches in height, were the graves of Bishops McKendree and Soule, whose memories will be honored by the millions of Methodists during all the ages to come.

The graves of these honored men are away from the cemetery and all other graves, in the midst of the university grounds, carpeted with blue grass and shaded with growing shade trees—here alone, as if still in council and watching over the interests of the institution, they rest.

We left the sacred spot with mingled emotions, feeling that it was a benediction to be permitted to visit the graves of these great and good men.

Evangelizing the Cities.

This is the most important work that now presents itself to the people of God. It is so because the masses of the people are gathering faster and faster in the cities. Of all the plans we have seen, the following from the Christian Observer, of Louisville, Ky., commends itself to us as the most practicable. Of one thing we are certain, and that is, that the church ought to do more in this matter than she is doing.

After speaking of some proposed plans, and showing that it would be impossible to work them to the best advantage, the Observer says:

Is there a better plan? Yes, but it involves self-denial. It is for those members of the central churches whose homes are nearer to the dwellings of the neglected, to form colonies, establish churches that are accessible to the neglected, and then invite the poor and the wayfaring to come and worship with them. Of this plan it may be said:

1. It has been successful. It has resulted in evangelizing many neighborhoods.

2. It makes better churches. When the new-comers are brought into constant contact with well-trained Christians by the very association they learn what and how to do as Christians, and they more speedily become useful workers.

3. It develops the graces of the workers. For, instead of the small effort involved in paying some one else to go, it makes them put forth their own personal efforts for the lost. And they who personally work for Christ, love him the most and are the happiest.

Emphatically, this is the best plan. Will our people in the cities use it? It involves self-denial to give up their delightful social meetings at the church on Sunday; to make themselves attractive to another set of people; to undertake the labor of winning strangers, etc. True. But such self-denial is far less than that of Christ; it may not even be compared with his. When he has done so much for us, shall we hesitate to do this for him?

And it will, to some small extent, make us "like him." His work was to go personally among the lost and mingle with them. If we would be "like him," we, church members, must do the same. Not stand off and send missionaries, but go and constitute churches near the homes of those whom we would win.

Millsaps College Library.

I am just in receipt of the following note from an esteemed young friend, the son of one of our Mississippi pastors:

Natchez, Miss., Sept. 2, 1890.

My Dear Bishop: I have just delivered to Bro. W. H. Lewis for the library of Millsaps College, one set each of Macaulay's and Hume's England, also one copy of Prescott's Conquest of Mexico, which please accept with my best wishes for the success of the enterprise.

Cordially and fraternally,

J. C. Ballard.

Many thanks for this valuable contribution to our library. The books will be catalogued, with name of donor, and carefully preserved until the college is formally opened. Other like offerings are solicited.

Chas. B. Galloway.

Jackson, Miss., Sept. 5, 1890.

Notice.

To the Pastors of the Seashore District:

The spiritual and financial condition of the district has greatly improved in the last few years. The district, under the leadership of Rev. B. S. Rayner and Dr. T. S. West, has developed t our encouragement. We are working to reach the highest point of success. We look to you for the work. You have done nobly this year. Will you not give the best you have to the Lord? We are on our last round; let us do our best.

It is greatly your fault if every collection ordered by the Conference is not paid. God help you to be blameless in this matter! Let every pastor observe Millsaps College Day, October 12. The pastors on large circuits would do well to give the entire month of October to the interest of Millsaps College.

See that the New Orleans Christian Advocate is placed in every home.

Talk up the cause of ministerial education. We must get our people to educate our young men for the ministry.

The District Conference requested me to raise funds to educate four young ministers. We have accepted one young minister, Rev. Willie Browning, who will leave for college soon. Inspire your people with holy pride for their church.

Are you selling our books? Why not? Methodist literature should be in every home. Help us on this line.

Shall we not go up to Conference with full reports?

Thanking you for many acts of kindness, and with assurance of love for you and your families, I am,

Your pastor, I. W. Cooper.

Revival at Houlka.

We have just closed a very fine meeting at Houlka. Congregations were very large, and all denominations took part and worked in perfect harmony. The church was thoroughly revived. Twenty persons joined the different churches. The Methodists received 14, the Presbyterians 5, and the Baptists 1. On the last day we called for the collections ordered by the Conference, and secured $10 more than asked for. We had no ministerial help except two sermons preached by Prof. E. A. Smith, principal of Houlka High School. He is an earnest Presbyterian, and doing fine work for the Master. We have had 70 accessions this year. All glory to God.

Hesler R. Tucker.

An Important Fact.

Within the limited circle of my acquaintance in the North Mississippi Conference I can count more than twenty young men who have been lost to the ministry in this Conference in the past twenty years because we had no school in the State at which they could fit themselves for this work.

I can count half as many more who in the same period of time, and from the same cause, have been lost entirely to Methodism and the Methodist ministry.

Notice.

To the Preachers of the Woodville District—

Dear Brethren: Please remember Millsaps College Day, the twelfth of October. While we have Centenary College in our midst, and we may not be able to help Millsaps College as much as other portions of the Mississippi Conference, yet we can contribute something to aid in this grand enterprise of the church.

Notice.

The Methodist Church at Colfax, La., will be dedicated on Sunday, October 12, 1890, by the Rev. Charles F. Evans, D. D. A general invitation is extended to all people.

B. F. Alexander, P. E.
R. M. Walker, P. C.

An important ordinance has been introduced into the City Council by Councilman Claiborne, regulating the issuance of license to liquor shops. The proposition is that no beer saloon, coffee-house, or place where liquors are sold by the glass or retail, shall be established without the consent of the Council. A written application, signed by a majority of the property owners residing in the vicinity of the proposed saloon, must be made and approved. It is said that Mayor Shakespeare and other gentlemen of the city administration are in favor of the ordinance. We regard it as a long stride in the right direction, and hope the City Council will adopt it without delay. All bad things should be fenced off, especially liquors and lotteries.

Bro. Mitchel, our business manager, returned Saturday from a brief trip to Jonesville, La., and Natchez, Miss., with seventy-two new subscribers!

Personal and Otherwise.

There will he no change made in the time of holding the Louisiana Conference. Our Conferences meet as follows: Louisiana, December 3, at Monroe, La.; North Mississippi, December 10, at Grenada, Miss.; Mississippi, December 17, at Canton, Miss.

Rev. George Neodham is now the editor of the breezy Rocky Mountain Methodist. Success to Bro. Needham!

A good example: The broiber who runs a postal card tbrougb the typewriter when he sends "news from the work."

Bro. Cooper's pastoral address to the preachers on the Seashore district is a model. We have often read of and heard of multum in parvo, and, lo! Bro. Cooper has put it in our columns.

The Montana Methodist says:

There were hut few dry eyes in the Conference-room while Rev. L. B. Statcher was giving in his report at the recent Conference. Ho said he had been sixty years in the ministry of the Methodist Church, fifty-nine of which had been spent in the traveling connection, and on the Western frontier, extending from the Mississippi to the Columbia, and among white people-black people and Indians, among all classes, of whom, doubtless, there have been many seals to bis ministry.

Bishop Galloway dedicated our new church in Alexandria, La., last Sunday.

Dr. Hunnicutt writes as follows of the opening of the preseut session at Centenary College:

The college has bad a very gratifying opening. Former students are returning and new ones are coming in rapidly. Several of the graduates of last session have come from a distance to be present at the opening sermon. Our faculty aro all in place and are beginning their work with energy. Of course, we expect a successful session. Let our people pray and work for Centenary.

During recent trips in Mississippi the growth and prosperity of many of its commercial centers have been manifest. Numerous large school-buildings and churches, elegant hotels, Masonic halls, stores and residences are being erected. Eligible building sites are in demand. Banks are in easy monetary condition; crops generally fair, oven in the overflowed districts. Credit accounts, in the main, collectable, and trade good. With the present favorable conditions of agriculture, industries and merchandising, it is believed Mississippi is entering the most prosperous period of her existence. Let our preachers see that the religious growth keeps pace with her material prosperity.

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. G. W. Gordon writes from Coffeeville, Miss., September 5, 1890: "Have just closed my fifth meeting on Coffeeville circuit, North Mississippi Conference, with 21 accessions to our church, making in all since Conference, 114. Have one more meeting to hold."

—Rev. D. C. Foust reports from West circuit, North Mississippi Conference: "We have built a nice church this year in the neighborhood of Brooks, and have just closed a successful meeting there; thirty-five accessions. The church has been revived. The Lord has been with us in most of our meetings. West is on a higher plane, spiritually. Hopeful of collections all being full at Conference. 'Praise God from whom all blessings flow.'"

—Rev. John R. Gerald writes from Edinburgh, Miss.: "Notwithstanding our meeting at Goshen Church was broken up by heavy rains at first, we got the people back together, and had a good meeting, and in closing last night we made the third trial, before we got away from the church. Men were convicted and the power of the Most High was there. Three joined, and more will join. We had to close against our will, as we had to begin at Liberty to-day (August 30), and had no help. We had a very good meeting at Sardis; twenty-two joined there. Our meeting at Rocky Point was broken up; two joined there. We are going to try it over in September. We have many trials. Pray for us."

—Rev. J. E. Buck, writing from Rural Hill, Miss., says: "We closed an eight days' meeting here last night. Sixteen additions to the church and as many conversions. The love-feast on Tuesday was a feast indeed; many testifying to the love they have for God and his cause. We have returned to the old custom of holding class meetings; appointed leaders, and shall expect great results. This is our second protracted meeting. God is with us and blessing and saving the people. One young man, feeling to have a call to the ministry, so announced it and preached three times during the past week. He is certainly a chosen vessel, and will bless the church and ministry."

Books.

THE JEWS UNDER ROMAN RULE. By W. D. Morrison. G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York. Eyrich, 130 Canal St., New Orleans. Price, $1 50.

This is volume 29 of the Story of the Nations Series. Everything connected with the Jews and their history is of interest. The present volume embraces a period of about three hundred years, beginning B. C. 164, and continuing to A. D. 135. That period was one of great importance in the world's history, and the affairs in Palestine had a powerful bearing in the shaping of the future. Mr. Morrison has divided his book into two parts; the first treating of the Roman conquest and rule over the Jews, and the second part treating of the structure of Jewish Society under that rule. Under this second head he discusses the Sanhedrin, Temple, Synagogue, Law and Tradition, Teachers, Pharisees, Sadducees, Essenes, People, Messianic Hope and Dispersion. A valuable index closes the volume. This is a good book for a preacher.

THE LANDS OF THE ORIENT. By Rev. M. H. Chapman, D. D.

This is the third edition of Dr. Chapman's popular and interesting book of travels. It has been revised and illustrated, and is thus quite an improvement on the first, which we commended when it appeared. This book can be had of Barbee and Smith, agents, Nashville, Tenn. Price, $1 50.

SCENES IN PIONEER METHODISM. By Annie Maria Barnes. Barbee and Smith, Nashville, Tenn. Price, $1.

This book describes "scenes" in England, Wales, Ireland, Scotland, heathen lands, and in America. The "early days of Methodism" in any land are of thrilling interest, and Miss Barnes has gathered up quite a number of incidents and given them a setting which will delight all her readers. She wields an easy pen, and scenes, under her magic touch, impress themselves upon the reader with an indelible stamp.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury,

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is tenfold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, and acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co.

Sold by Druggists. Price, 75 cents per bottle.

The Clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policyholders.

The Episcopal Diocese, of New York, has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and the Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to those worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

Paragraphs.

To many the Bible is as a well without water. To such there is a kind of impossible in it. They are not conscious unbelievers, but are unbelievers, nevertheless. Its positive utterances in words, or its lessons through examples — human illustrations — are accepted as divine truth; but sentiment becomes the interpreter, and the strength of it is wasted. As a moral code, to them it is beautiful, good and true. But its heroes and heroines are largely fictitious beings as bearers of positive truth, as illustrations of truth lived to be lived, as statements of truth experienced, given through human lives rather than in formula. Or admitted real—believed, known to be real—the conclusion is that such lived, experienced, and said and done things, that can never be again; that special ministries and influences were brought to bear upon their lives, peculiar to their time, such as can not arise again. They do not see God's heart of love, throbbing with sympathy, nor hear his voice going out after them, or hear him speak in all that is said and done; they do not see their own possible. Hence they lose the precious lessons, and the Bible becomes as a well without water.

The internal witness of God's truth is the real and final testimony. Men seeking the truth—the proof of it—from any other standpoint miss the testimony of the one unerring witness. The proof of divine truth is in itself. It is not in the testimony of miracles. It is not in the logical demonstrations of men. All proof outside of its own life is purely incidental and confirmatory. There is nothing so true as God's truth. It is true whether believed by men or not. All men rejecting it would not destroy it, nor in any wise change it. They may crucify and bury it, yet it would come to life again the stronger, if possible, in its truth, for its crucifixion and burial. If it were possible for God to die, the truth would live. A father dead still speaks to his generations through his truth. The truth of God holds in it his own vitality. It is as undying and as strong as God himself. The proof of it is in itself; it needs no other. It asserts its own life, just as God asserts his own life. Men attempting to prove it true, weakens its force and its claims. Men turn away from the proof of men; what one man can do another man can do. "Evidences of Christianity," "systematic theology," flooding the church may have served a purpose. But it is a question, if the world would not have been richer in faith and experience if we could have had less of it. A truth that needs to be demonstrated true, in order to save a man, may be the ministry of his death. Much of the organized hatred and seeming demonstrations of the opposite, has come about by the very effort of men to prove the truth that needs no such help. The skill and genius and hatred of men have been taxed and developed, in answering human arguments and demonstrations of the truth, that bears in itself its own life. If divine truth needed the help of man to prove it true, it would be a sure sign of inherent weakness. Its equivalent would be found in supposing man a necessary witness to his own creation. Its equal is found in calling for the proofs and demonstrations of science to establish the fact of odor in flowers.

One of the striking things to the thoughtful, in God's Word, is the constant unexpectedness of things said and done. This is not so in the wisest and best things of men. Mental and moral habitudes become as open and well known as the man's walk, or any other physical expression. But the unexpected is always before us in God's Word. So it is to the student in nature, and often with those things most familiar. In the gradual development of divine truth, no care of what men will say or think is or can be shown. It is something above and out of them. It is something to be studied and pondered. It is something to save them. Men could not in any sense be consulted or have part in it. The truth that saves must be greater than the one saved by it. Naturally the unexpected is constantly coming up. When the truth comes in the development of human character, the had is shown as well as the good. There is no concealment of failure. When the same truth comes in formula or statement of great principles, the statement is made without regard to the mistakes men make regarding it. There is no trimming to suit men's prejudices, or stooping to men's ignorance. There is a natural flow of truth. It is always new, always beautiful, always full of power. It may be a savor of life unto life. On the other hand, it may be a savor of death unto death. The wayfaring man, though a fool, shall not err therein. And yet the wisest find all of wisdom exhausted in the simplest principles.

More or less all these things are linked to the majestic statement of the sublime Renuncient: "I can of mine own self do nothing, as I hear I judge; and my judgment is just because I seek not mine own will, but the will of the Father, which hath sent me." It is the unexpected. The witness is found in the internal testimony. It is made without reference to the misunderstanding of men—even his own friends. It is the statement of an experience, and the illustration of a principle universal in its reach. It is vital to the life of God in the soul. It is not simply an official utterance of the Son of God. It is the statement of an experience, not only known to him, but one attainable by all others, submitting to the one law of life. If it is true only of Jesus, its only office is to tell us that he was not less than God, and mere than man. He was purely human. This is a purely human experience—that of man's elder brother—an attainable in its kind by all. It is a wonderful saying. It is the basis of the divine in the human life—of the divine in the human life of the Son of man. So he is our example—he illustrates true life. He had just previously said: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, the Son can do nothing of himself; but what he seeth the Father do: for what things soever he doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise." And so he says, subsequently: "He that findeth his life shall lose it, and he that loseth his life" (as I have lost mine) "for my sake shall find it. He that loveth father or mother more than me is not worthy of me, and he that loveth son or daughter more than me is not worthy of me." That is, he that does not surrender his own life, will and way, and that also even which is dearer to a true son or a true father than life itself, father and mother, son or daughter, for Me—for my life, which is the life of the Father—is not worthy of Me—can not be of me, who am of the Father. Luke, the Gospel of his humanity, puts the matter in a stronger way: "If any man come after me and hate not his father and mother, and wife and children, and brethren and sisters, yea, and his own life also, can not be my disciple." The "can not" is in this—it is the one only law of discipleship—i. e., that self-emptying must precede divine occupation. "I can of mine own self do nothing." "Verily, verily, I say unto you, the Son can do nothing of himself." In a different way he had previously said the same thing; proclaimed the law of the renuncient: the law of his own life and that of every man who has God's life formed within him, when he said: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, except ye be converted"—changed—"and become as a little child, ye can not enter the kingdom of heaven;" and then, answering directly the question that had been raised as to who should be greatest in the kingdom of heaven, he adds: "Whosoever, therefore, shall humble himself"—lose his own will, his own life—"as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven." A statement of the same great principle is made in his answer to Nicodemus: "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born again"—become a child again, lose his self-consciousness—"he can not see the kingdom of God." It is the lack of the renuncient spirit, the presence of self-consciousness, that keeps God out of the life. "Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life." And when self gives way enough for God to enter into the life, it is self-consciousness that prevents him from working in and through us. Judging not as we hear, but according to our own will, and not according to the will of the Father which hath sent us, is the secret of all human failure in all things.

JOEL T. DAVES.

Between the Two.

I am not an old, nor yet a young minister. I am serving my first year on my sixth work. I was but a fledgling in the itinerancy my first year; and as to a greenie—well, I am that yet. So I think and I believe I could introduce a dozen witnesses of the same opinion—some of them Bishops. I have made mistakes on every work I was ever on.

Some time ago a preacher on trial, first year, writes to the ADVOCATE, saying that his section is served too largely by young preachers. He said: "The boys do the best they can, but they lack experience." Now, in the six works nearest to him three are young and three are old preachers. Widen the circle to eight appointments, and the proportion is the same—four and four.

Then another article appears in which this statement is made: "If you will examine the Minutes of the Conferences for several years just past, you will find that the increase of membership reported is largely due to the work of our young men. They have built more churches, founded more parsonages, established more camp grounds, collected more moneys, harvested more sheaves, and done more work along every line than have our old men." Bravo! That is certainly a record not to be ashamed of. And yet some preachers seem to dislike to be called youngsters. Brother, don't shake at this. If a rose by its beauty is attracting the eye, and filling the air with its fragrance, you may call it a jimson weed; the process is not arrested, the opinion of the observer is not changed.

Some time ago, as I passed out of a church, I overheard one man say to another, "The old man speaks right well." Such an idea—calling me old. Well, I have not told my wife about it yet; I don't want the whole family stirred up.

Mr. Editor, you must be careful how you call people old, and you had as well be on your guard about calling them young, too. There is one sad feature in the article referred to. The brother says: "The first year of my ministry (with but four months' previous experience) resulted in a larger number of conversions, and a better work generally, than I can show for the next two succeeding years combined."...."And another of my class makes a similar showing." This is too suggestive of early superannuation. The Nashville Advocate places the retrograde line at forty-five. I propose adding, at least, five more years. The first work I served during my pastorate one hundred and fifty-two names were added to the roll, one church painted, a new parsonage founded, and a new wife installed in it. In my present pastorate, up to date, ninety-five names have been added to the roll, four new seats put in the church and a cow-stall built to shelter the parsonage cow. And I have no idea of striking down grade at forty-five or fifty either, and I hope that brother will not be discouraged. If he will stir, he will regain his lost powers.

Well, there ought to be no sparring between the young and old ministers. I, being between the two, can shoot both ways. Our young men are certainly doing well, and the old men, almost to a man, rejoice at it. I have met one or two who did not seem to enjoy it much. Our young men, almost to a man, have high regard for the fathers in Israel. I have met a few who seemed to have no special regard for the veterans. One thing is certain: there is no good reason for a minister retrograding at fifty. We have one in our Conference about seventy-five years old, and he is active in body to-day and, I suppose, as vigorous in mind as ever. There may be some prejudice against him on account of age, but not on account of work, for he is certainly able and willing to do it.

TOM STIRLING.

In Memoriam.

Loughlin Bethea McLaurin, who died at his home in Jefferson county, Miss., July 11, 1890, was a man of no ordinary mold. His life deserves more than a passing notice. The son of John and Elizabeth McLaurin, he was born in Marlboro' district (or county), S. C., November 10, 1828; came to Mississippi in early manhood, and was married, January 3, 1856, to Miss Catherine Gilchrist, of Jefferson county, who remained his faithful and devoted wife till now that death has made this temporary separation.

He made his home in South Carolina for two years after marriage; but in 1860 he settled in Copiah county, Miss., removing to Jefferson in 1875. During the whole war he served with remarkable fidelity in the Southern army. Through sickness and hardships incredible he stood to his post in circumstances that would appall and drive to the hospital any but the bravest and most patriotic. The scenes he then passed through would challenge the belief of any who did not know the truly heroic spirit of that little great man—for he was small in statue and large in soul.

The most important event of his life occurred in 1870. During that year he was converted and joined the Methodist Church, South, under the ministry of Harvey F. Johnsen, whose memory is blessed in that section. His faith showed itself in works "meet for repentance." He sanctified his house by setting up the family altar immediately and dedicating his children to God's service. Long as strength to utter prayer remained, from that altar sweet incense arose. Though raised a Calvinist, he became a warm advocate of Arminian doctrine, meanwhile cherishing the fullest affection for all who love the Lord Jesus. He was too large-souled ever to become a bigot.

Soon after conversion he felt called to exhort, and then to preach. He was very diffident about his ability, but finally was not disobedient to the united call of the "Spirit and the Bride." He had "heard," and said to other thirsty souls, "Come to the living waters and drink freely." His preaching was fervent and forceful, earnest and urgent on sinners to repent. He continued in the local ranks, feeling that duty so compelled him, and not from any lack of zeal for the work. While industriously farming and providing for the large family with which God had blessed his marriage, he continued to preach and to lead Sunday-schools and prayer meetings in his neighborhood, accomplishing much good.

He was always a great help to the preacher in charge, doing all such work as lay within his power without murmurings or disputings. I hesitate not to put him in the front rank of that noble band who do so much unrequited service in our church. But he stopped not at this; his actual money contributions to the support of the gospel and the spread of Christ's kingdom abroad were larger in proportion to his means than those of any other man I have ever known. If any gave "beyond their power," it was he. To him giving to the Lord was a real luxury. Its utmost indulgence was restrained only by lack of sufficient means. Losses and misfortunes but brought out his nobility and generosity of soul in brighter illustration. At such a time how his faith would take wing and mount heavenward under the inspiration of holy song, specially when attuned to such sentiments as, "When through fiery trials," etc. The true gold of his nature was highly refined and often clearly reflected the image of the Master.

O brother beloved! we shall greet you where "all the ship's company meet who have sailed with the Savior below;" and may the loved ones all be there "where the faithful part no more!" A bereaved friend,

J. P. DRAKE.

Sam Jones Camp Meeting.

I returned from the meeting on Friday after a presence of five days. There were thirty-two ministers of the gospel on the ground. The attendance varied from about eight hundred to probably twice that number. Except a little talking in the congregation, the department was good, and the general attention to services remarkable for its earnestness. Accommodations for eating and sleeping were not to be complained of. The grounds are new, and need improvement in the way of better roads, paths and bridges; the removal of logs, brush, stumps, weeds, grass, etc. Doubtless, all this will be attended to in time. Water for all purposes is abundant and of excellent quality. All passenger trains stop to put off or receive passengers. A depot to receive passengers and baggage and their protection from the rain is greatly needed. It is intended, I am told, to make this a permanent camp ground, and in time it will become a place of beauty as well as of profit and pleasure.

Religious services were marked by earnestness and zeal. Not a lifeless or dull sermon or exhortation was delivered while I was there. The singing was good, inspiring and full of revival power. Members of the church had a mind to work, and they were happy; tears of joy and exclamations of praise were frequent. Results were certainly good. A number applied for admission into the church, and some found their way into the kingdom of God—the kingdom that consists of righteousness, peace and joy in the Holy Ghost. Quite a large number declared themselves as seekers of salvation, who had not entered the kingdom when I left. There were some masterly pulpit efforts; but I heard no sermon on faith, justification or the new birth, and I thought there was too little simple, plain instruction as to how to find the "pearl of great price." The Christians were happy, but did not labor sufficiently for the conversion of souls. There was more of song than of prayer. There was more of drinking of the water of life than of calling the thirsty to the Fountain.

These camp meetings are doing much good for the people of the neighborhood. They are gaining knowledge of the best things. Their taste for all that is good, beautiful and true is being cultivated. Their love for one another is increased, and there is a general upward tendency in the vicinity in all good things. The gospel is taking hold upon the people, and they are industrious, prosperous and happy.

Obituaries.

BROWN—WILLIAM JOSEPH BROWN was born in New Orleans, La., February 16, 1874, and died in Birmingham, Ala., June 23, 1890. During his brief life he exhibited qualities of head and heart that were calculated to ripen into a noble and useful manhood. In 1885, during a revival meeting at Louisiana Avenue Church in New Orleans, and under the pastorate of Rev. B. F. White, he was converted and immediately joined the church. His grandmother, herself a saint and safe judge in things spiritual, pronounced his conversion "a bright one." His five years in the church were marked by consistency of life and love and zeal for the Master. He was distinguished for always being in his place in the Sunday-school and in church. On going with his mother to Birmingham to live, he became connected with St. John Church, and during the last revival at that church he manifested deep concern for the salvation of others, carried several of his companions up to the altar and knelt with them until they were converted. The fever of which he died, carried him off in a few days. The day before he became unconscious, he sang hymns most of the time, among them being the one known as, "At the Cross." His sorrowing mother writes of him: "During his delirium his words were pure, as his life had been. As long as he was conscious he would remind me, if I was a little late, that we had not had prayers. His life was pure; his end was peaceful. I know he is happy." Willie Brown was a very affectionate son, and at all times kindly considerate of his mother, never willfully disobeying her. He was a youth of fine physique, handsome features and manly bearing. He was intellectual and smart, and gave promise of making his mark. Energetic and capable, polite and of cheery disposition, ready and willing to help anybody, it is not strange that all who knew him loved him. The old and young, white and black, lost a dear friend in him. His funeral was largely attended, and his grave on the hill-side was literally covered with beautiful floral offerings, showing the great esteem and genuine love of his many friends.

In the measureless grief of her stricken spirit, the mother thinks and thinks of her noble Willie; and yet, God's grace vouchsafed to her, though the tears will fall and the heart must ache, she is enabled to say, "Thy will, O God, be done!" When after awhile she falls asleep, as did he, on the dear Lord's loving breast, she shall awake in the glory-world to find again her darling boy and walk with him the plains of light. Just sixteen years on earth, yet was his life a grand success, for he made the final passage in the triumph of the gospel of Christ, and is henceforth and forever numbered with those who are "clothed upon with immortality," and who live beyond the stars. May mother, brothers, relatives and friends so live as to reach the same blessed home! Surely Willie will be found waiting hard by the entrance to give her welcome when his mother, released from earth, shall go sweeping through the gates of glory. Let us remember that God "doeth all things well."

J. T. S.

SESSIONS—Died, in great peace, at his father's residence, in St. Helena parish, La., June 12, 1890, WILLIAM, youngest son of T. H. and Malvina Sessions. He was born December 21, 1869; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, under the ministry of Bro. J. S. Parker, 1883; and, though young and surrounded by worldly associations, he ever endeavored to live up to his church vows; and, though nearly thirty years of age, he still remained at home and labored to support and comfort his parents as a loving, kind and obedient son.

He was loved and respected by all who knew him. When he recognized the fact that he must die, he told his parents and friends that he was prepared to go; that the Lord had forgiven all his sins; for them not to grieve for him, but to pray for themselves, and try to meet him in heaven. When the hour of all hours came, he said: "Now fix me good on my bed, and let me rest easy, for I am going home to my sweet Jesus in heaven, where I may rest from all my labors. Let me in! let me in!" The pearly gates swung open and his purified spirit "went into the marriage, and the door was shut." P. HOWARD.

FLEMMING—The sweet spirit of MARGARET EMMA FLEMMING departed this life July 17, 1890. She was born in New Orleans, November 22, 1865, and was the eldest of the three children of Richard Flemming and Emily Cassidy. Of deep feeling and strong attachment, her dominant quality—love—permeated with sweetness the lives of those with whom she associated, and pervaded with beauty the home in which she prayerfully and conscientiously discharged the duties of a daughter and sister. She was a consistent Christian, a member of Felicity Street Church, and an earnest and ardent worker in the mission school; a work for which her generous nature and tender sympathy for others especially fitted her. Two months before her death, when in perfect health, she predicted that her earthly life was nearing a close; and so it proved. But as the turbulent shores of time receded, she mirrored with increasing clearness the sweet tranquility of her own native heaven. And death was transition to sublime heights of life and love; to the peace of God, which passeth all understanding. T. W.

MCDONALD—On the morning of August 5, 1890, the spirit of PARKER MCDONALD took its flight to heaven, after three weeks' illness of bilious typhus-malaria and pneumonia, leaving a sister, four brothers and kind and loving parents to mourn his loss. He died in the bloom of manhood, aged twenty years. Early in childhood he joined the Methodist Church and professed religion under the ministry of Rev. W. B. Lewis. He was earnest in his religious profession, his seat in church and Sunday-school seldom being vacant.

Though the jewel is taken away, may we find consolation in the Word, which teaches that "he doeth all things well!" It is, doubtless, that these providences are visited upon us to take our affections off of earth and bind us on to heaven. He was soon to leave for Memphis to take lectures, as his object was to be a physician. It grieved our hearts to think we had to be separated that distance, but little did we think of an eternal separation so soon. Let us think that the Master had use for him, and that his actual life has only begun, under the approving smile of God, to continue through all eternity. SISTER.

Sunday-School Lesson.

LESSON XII.—September 21.

JESUS ENTERING JERUSALEM.

Luke xix, 37-48.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Blessed be the King that cometh in the name of the Lord.—Luke xix, 38.

TIME.—Sunday of Passion week.

PLACES.—The Mount of Olives; and the Temple at Jerusalem.

37. The descent—Two distinct sights of Jerusalem are caught on this route, an inequality of ground hiding it for a time after one has first seen it. Verse 37 marks the first sight, verse 41 the second and nearer view. At this point (the former) the first view is caught of the southeastern corner of the city. The temple and the more northern portions are hid by the slope of Olivet on the right; what is seen is only Mount Zion, now, for the most part, a rough field, crowned with the mosque of David and the angle of the western walls, but then covered with houses to its base, and surmounted by the castle of Herod, on the supposed site of the palace of David.... It was at this point that the shout of triumph burst forth from the multitude.

39. Some... Pharisees—The spirit of these Pharisees was just that of modern Socinianism; the prophetic expressions used, and the lofty epithets applied to him who was merely, in their view, a teacher, offended them.

40. If these should hold their peace, the stones... would... cry out—A proverbial expression. When men hold their peace from praising God, and especially when a dark despotism imposes silence on the better-minded, when the gospel is suppressed, then the stones begin to cry out; (things ordinarily dumb and inanimate become God's witnesses); they proclaim the judgments of the Lord, whose glory can have no end.

41. He beheld—Again the procession advanced. The road descends a slight declivity, and the glimpse of the city is again withdrawn behind the intervening ridge of Olivet. A few moments, and the path mounts again; it climbs a rugged ascent, it reaches a ledge of smooth rock, and in an instant the whole city bursts into view.... It is hardly possible to doubt that this rise and turn of the road was the exact point where the multitude paused again, and he, when he beheld the city, wept over it. Wept—With audible weeping.

43. Cast a trench (mound) about thee—This was literally fulfilled when this city was besieged by Titus. The word literally means a pointed stake, used in fortifying the intrenchments of a camp, and thence the palisade itself. In fortifying a camp or besieging a city, a ditch was dug round the entire circuit, and the earth from it thrown up into a wall, upon which sharp stakes were fixed. Every Roman soldier carried three or four of these stakes on the march.

47. And he taught daily in the temple—This he did for four or five days before his crucifixion. Some suppose that it was on Monday in the Passion week that he thus entered into Jerusalem and purified the temple, and on Thursday he was seized late at night; during these four days he taught in the temple, and lodged each night at Bethany. (See Matt. xxi, 17.)

48. Were very attentive to hear him—Or, they heard him with the utmost attention; they hung upon him, hearing. The whole account of our Lord's teaching in the temple during these three or four days, as given by the several evangelists, shows a marvelous activity on his part, and a kind of awful suspense on the part of all that heard him. The Galileans were earnest to proclaim him king; the whole multitude, then present at the feast from all parts of the world, were very attentive to hear him, and "the chief priests and the scribes" seem to have been thoroughly alarmed, and ready to resort to the most desperate means to accomplish his destruction.

Asthma can't be cured? Oh! yes it can. Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar will do it. I know it because it gave me relief. Every winter I was troubled with asthma, especially if the weather was damp, suffering severely. I took about six bottles of Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar, and am completely cured. It is the remedy for asthma. CHAS. HEINES, 500½ Chippewa Street, New Orleans, La.

Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar is a sure and speedy cure for coughs, colds, catarrh, bronchitis and consumption, and gives immediate relief in cases of croup and whooping-cough. Try it. One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as a 50c. bottle.

GRANT'S FURNITURE STORE

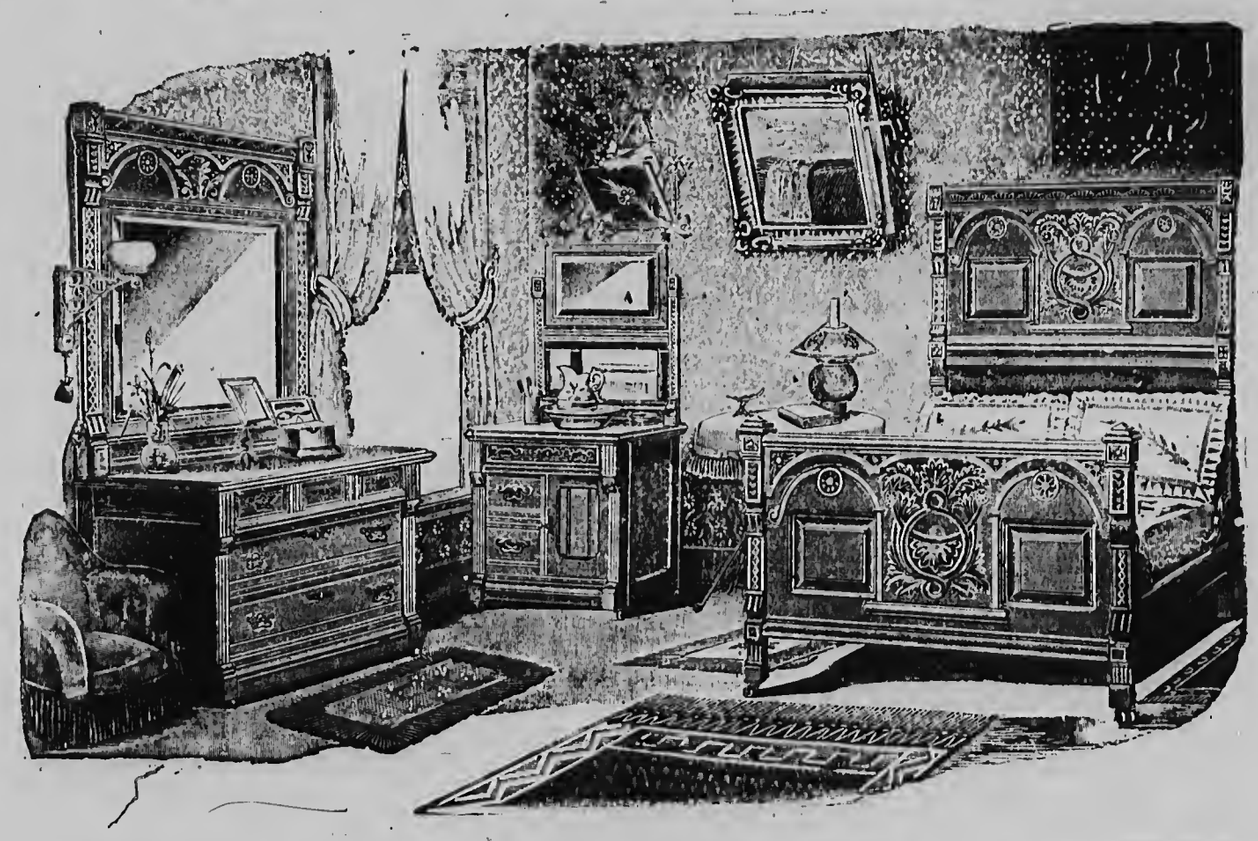
NEW STORE, AT 114 Camp St. NEW ORLEANS. NEXT DOOR TO ADVOCATE OFFICE.

BEAUTIFUL PARLOR GOODS.

I have one entire floor devoted to the display of these goods alone, and have over sixty different varieties to select from. Complete Suits anywhere from $35 to $650, and odd pieces—such as Sofas, Divans, Easy Chairs, Patent Rockers, Window and Reception Chairs—at as low prices in proportion as the Complete Suits. I have these goods in Cherry, Mahogany and Walnut, and can give you your choice of any of the following coverings: Crushed, Embossed, Plain and Silk Plushes, Hair Cloth, Mohair, Raw and Spun Silks, Satins, English Tapestries, French Valours, Petit Point, Brocatelle or Damasks. I make a specialty of these goods, have many of the patterns made specially for my own trade, and can offer a greater variety at lower prices than any other house in the South.

NEW STOCK

In all departments, and every grade of goods, from the cheapest to the most expensive, in endless variety. I have all the latest and most fashionable designs, and, as I have only purchased from factories whose goods I have been selling for the past six years, can and do guarantee every piece of Furniture that leaves my establishment.



LOW PRICES

are the order of the day, and I propose to sell strictly reliable goods at a lower price than has ever before been quoted in the South. My store has long been known as "The Cheapest Furniture House in New Orleans," and this season I intend to add to the reputation it has gained in this respect. I only ask a chance to save you money.

HANDSOME BEDROOM SUITS.

A very extensive assortment of these goods in every style; and, whether you wish to pay $40 for a Complete Suit of twelve pieces, or from that price anywhere up to $1,000, I can sell you what you require. I have these goods in Black Walnut, Natural and Dark Cherry, and Natural and Dark Mahogany, or in imitation of any of these woods, and can furnish the very latest, neatest and most artistic designs.

I have also a large and carefully selected stock of Hall, Library, Dining-room and Kitchen Furniture; Reed, Rattan and Wicker Chairs, Rockers, Lounges and Cribs; Brackets, What-nots, Easels, Music Stands and Fancy Top Tables; Carpets, Carpet Strips, Matting, Shades, Curtains, Curtain Poles, and everything necessary to furnish a house completely throughout.

LARGE SALES.

I have a large city trade, and am shipping goods extensively to every Southern State. My country trade has increased very rapidly during the past year, and the facilities which my new store affords me for carrying a larger and better stock will enable me to still further extend it, and to give complete satisfaction to my customers.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

On September 5 a train on the New York Central railroad was wrecked by an obstruction placed on the track. Three passengers were hurt, but not seriously.

The Democratic nominee for governor of Arkansas—Eagle—was elected.

The city authorities of Jackson, Miss., on September 5, inaugurated a war on gambling.

Wyoming's first election under the State Constitution takes place on September 11. Women will have the right then to vote.

Mr. Breckinridge, of Arkansas, who was unseated in the House of Representatives, will return to his State in a few days to look after his election. He has already been nominated for the next Congress, but will also be a candidate to fill the vacancy which has resulted from the action of the House in his case.

The Louisiana Furniture Manufacturing Company was inaugurated in this city, on September 4. This company has a splendid plant, and will employ 150 men. The factory buildings occupy a square of ground.

A premature explosion of a blast occurred in the Northern Pacific yards at Spokane Falls, Wash. About thirty men were in the vicinity at the time, and many of them were instantly killed.

The celebration of the fortieth anniversary of the admission of the State of California into the Union is now in progress under the auspices of the Native Sons of the Golden West, an order composed of native-born Californians. Other societies are co-operating.

A mortgage on the lines of the Great Northern Railway, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba railway, was filed in the county auditor's office in Seattle, Wash. The mortgage is made to the Central Trust Company under date of July 1. The amount of the mortgage is $30,000,000. The purpose of the loan is stated to be for the Pacific extension of the Great Northern from Assinaboin to Portland. The extension, it is said, will cost $25,000,000.

The Newsboys' Home, in this city, was dedicated, on September 7, by Archbishop Janssens. The new quarters can accommodate about one hundred boys.

The conference report on the River and Harbor bill was adopted by the Senate on September 8, and the bill goes to the President for executive action.

The State of Maine has been carried by a strong Republican majority. Speaker Reed is re-elected by the largest majority he ever received.

The Mississippi Constitutional Convention, in session at Jackson, has the report of the Franchise Committee under consideration.

On last Saturday night about thirty men began laying a railroad track in this city, and by daylight, Sunday morning, had completed the same for three blocks. The work was done at night to prevent interference.

FOREIGN.

At the session of the Dominion Labor Congress, at Ottawa, Ont., the increase of Chinese immigration was discussed. A letter was received from the Victoria (B. C.) Trade Assembly protesting against the immigration, because of the immorality and congestion of the labor market resulting therefrom.

A movement is on foot in London to erect a monument to the late Cardinal Newman. A majority of those interested in the project favor the Westminster Abbey as the place for the monument, while others prefer Birmingham.

Gen. Ezeta, of San Salvador, has withdrawn the army of occupation from Guatemala in conformity with the terms of the peace treaty. His great success in freeing Salvador from the dictation of Guatemala makes him the unanimous choice of the people for president of the republic.

The crops generally and the potato crop in particular in Ireland are doomed to failure this year, and this involves starvation and distress for a large proportion of its inhabitants. Liberal assistance is hoped for from America and Australia to enable the famine-stricken people to tide over the coming gloomy winter.

Gen. Von Moltke will be presented the house in which he was born at Parchim, Mecklenburg, on the occasion of his ninetieth birthday, which will be celebrated in a few weeks.

Prince Bismarck's stay at Hamburg has been one prolonged ovation. A crowd gathered at the station to witness his departure and bade him a hearty farewell. On September 7 local societies held a torchlight procession in Prince Bismarck's honor, and the Prince afterward attended a fete at the Kurgarten and mixed freely with the visitors. During the evening he made a brief speech, concluding by proposing cheers for the Emperor.

The American Forestry Congress, in session at Quebec, September 5, after listening to several interesting papers, adopted resolutions recommending the sending of young men to Europe to study forestry; also the modification of the rules regulating the management of public timber lands, in order to secure the re-wooding of the forests.

There is much distress in Austria, caused by the rising of the Danube and other rivers. One million dollars were granted by the Austrian government to destitute flood sufferers.

Russia proposes to levy a heavy tax on Chinese immigrants.

The Best Advertising.

The most efficient advertising in behalf of Hood's Sarsaparilla is that which comes from the medicine itself. That is, those who are cured by it, speak to friends suffering similarly, who in turn derive benefit and urge others to try this successful medicine. Thus the circle of its popularity is rapidly widening from this cause alone, and more and more are becoming enthusiastic in behalf of Hood's Sarsaparilla as it actually demonstrates its absolute merit. All that is asked for Hood's Sarsaparilla is that it be given a fair trial. If you need a good blood purifier, or building-up medicine, try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

The Cotton Planters and Ginners of the South.

Your attention is called to the New Cotton Bloom Gin, which has all latest improvements, including balance wheel on brush, which is peculiar to this make of gin and is used on no other. If you intend buying a gin this season, it will pay you to look into the merits of this gin. This company and its predecessors have made cotton gins for nearly fifty years, and are experts in cotton gin work. These gins are made in the most substantial manner—strong and heavy, with long bearings; every part being so nicely made and adjusted that it is without doubt the lightest running ginning outfit in the world. For further particulars, prices, terms, etc., address H. W. Hubbard, the manufacturers' general Southern agent, at Atlanta, Ga.

The only reliable vegetable substitute for calomel, which acts on the liver, blood, kidneys and stomach, and best anti-bilious purgative is Maguire's Cundurango. Endorsed by Archbishop Ryan, of Philadelphia; Rev. McNally, of St. Louis, and a host of prominent people.

PRICE BAKING POWDER CO.

NEW YORK. CHICAGO. ST. LOUIS.

NOW the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect in every good work, to do his will, working in you that which is well-pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ; to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen.—Hebrews xiii, 20, 21.

Mr. J. G. Grant, with indefatigable energy, has re-established his large furniture business, having just returned from an extensive tour among the most noted furniture manufactories in the North and West, from whom he purchased a large, elegant and fashionable assortment of furniture at prices that will enable him to defy competition. He has leased and had built specially for his use as a furniture store the centrally located buildings, Nos. 28 and 30 Camp street, adjoining the State National Bank, and opposite the New Orleans National Bank. This building is only five minutes' walk from the St. Charles or other most noted hotels, as well as from Canal street. Mr. J. G. Grant's improved facilities for handling cheaply and expeditiously large quantities of furniture will enable him to supply his numerous customers both in city and country with fresh, clean furniture in original packages from the manufacturers. Not a dollar's worth of old furniture saved from Mr. Grant's fire was purchased by him or is part of his present splendid stock.

BUT if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.—I. John i, 7.

"Seeing is Believing."

And the best lamp ever made, like Aladdin's of old, a "wonderful lamp!" A lamp absolutely non-explosive and unbreakable, which gives a clear, soft, brilliant white light of 85 candle power! Purer and brighter than gas light, softer than electric light, more cheerful than either! That lamp is

"The Rochester."

And with it there is no smoke, no smell, no broken chimneys, no flickering, no sweating, no climbing up of the flame, no "tantrums" nor annoyance of any kind, and it never needs trimming. Its founts (oil reservoirs) being tough rolled seamless brass, with central draft, it is absolutely unbreakable and as safe as a tallow candle.

Only five years old, and over two million of these lamps in use. It must be a GOOD lamp to make such a telling success. Indeed it is, for lamps may come and lamps may go, but the "Rochester" shines on forever! We make over 2,000 artistic varieties, Hanging and Table Lamps, Banquet, Study, Vase and Piano Lamps,—every kind, in Bronze, Porcelain, Brass, Nickel and Black Wrought Iron.

Ask the lamp dealer for it. Look for the trade-mark stamp: "THE ROCHESTER." If he hasn't the genuine Rochester and the style you want, or if no lamp-store is near, send to us for free illustrated catalogue (and reduced price-list), and we will box and send you any lamp safely by express, right to your door.

A SCENE IN BELGIUM—COLOGNE—THE RHINE—THE VINEYARDS—THE RUINS OF CASTLES—THE LEGENDS—COL. SOMEBODY—BINGEN-ON-THE-RHINE—A MOONLIGHT SCENE ON THE RHINE.

I left Paris on the eight o'clock morning train for Cologne, on the Rhine. In this journey you pass through the breadth of the kingdom of Belgium. A hard-worked looking people meet the gaze whenever and wherever you look. We ran for miles on the banks of the river Meuse. Mountainous hills descend at some places very steeply to the river's brim. Running up the hill-sides were cultivated farms, divided into squares by hedges. The unconscious arrangement gave to these farms the appearance of pictures painted in living colors, set up in frames, and leaned against the walls of the mountains. What a wonderful picture gallery that river valley was for awhile!

From Aix-la-Chapelle to Cologne, all in Prussian territory, the country was one waving mass of golden grain, with gleaners in the field, and loaded wagons moving along the tree-skirted roads, with villages and spires in the distance, and in the remote distance ranges of purple hills shutting in the immense plain.

We arrived at Cologne at or near seven in the evening. There are two things to be done in this city that sits on the western bank of the river Rhine. One is to get a bottle of cologne, not because that it is especially needed at this place, but because here is the fountain-head of that famous perfume. Another thing to be done is to visit the great cathedral. It is a Gothic structure, and by its size and beauty deeply impressed me. As I entered the building at eight in the evening, I found the vast space within almost filled with a worshiping throng. A dim, weird light from a few lights struggled with the shadows of the temple; the great columns of stone lifted themselves up until they were fairly lost in the darkness of the lofty ceiling; a great crowd of people stood or knelt all about the building, every eye being on the priest who was literally enveloped in a cloud of incense arising from the altar; the music came from an unknown, undiscovered spot. It was from above, among the stone pillars; but whether from the chancel, or from the right transept or the left, or from the end of the nave, it was impossible to tell. How the Roman Church calculates upon the effect of all these things—the gleaming row of candles, the mysterious bell, the clouds of incense, the majestic pillared roof, the architectural magnificence, the distant music from above; the flitting, bowing white-robed figures in the altar, and; over all, the dim, mystic light peculiar to the cathedral! It was a scene for a painter.

Not all of the Rhine is beautiful; but that portion which lies between Bonn and Bingen constitutes the part that has figured in song, poem, fiction, and book of travel. Taking the steamer at Cologne, and going up as far as Mayence, over an hundred and twenty miles away, you see it all. I was reluctant at the beginning of the voyage to yield the claims of the Hudson river; but before the journey was completed I had given the palm to the Rhine. The advantage of the latter is in the length of the mountain panorama, and in the castle ruins that crown the crags all along. Then there is such a delightful combination of the ancient and the modern, of wild nature and nature tamed. The harvests wave in the sunny fields, the sail gleams on the river, the vineyards clothe the mountain-side, and the ruined castle sits on the jutting crag. Industry leans on its reaping-hook in the field, and History looks down upon you from the beetling rocks of the mountains that tower above you. Nature has three veils that she is fond of using, and which she employs with marked effect on the Rhine. She has a silver veil for the valley, a purple one for the hills, and a deep blue one for the mountains. I was much impressed with the old castles. Their strength and beauty of situation would strike the most careless observer. Some are half-way down between the crest of the mountain and the edge of the river; others are perched upon the highest point, and stand with outline against the sky, noticeable for miles down the stream. The wonder was, how they could ever be taken by any kind of military assault. The castle of Drachenfels has been immortalized by the pen of Byron. I can not refrain from quoting the verse that appears in "Childe Harold:"

"The castled crag of Drachenfels
Frowns o'er the wide and winding Rhine,
Whose breast of waters broadly swells
Between the banks which bear the vine,
And hills all rich with blossom'd trees,
And fields which promise corn and wine;
And scattered cities crowning these,
Whose fair white walls along them shine,
Have showed a scene which I should see
With double joy, were thou with me."

At Coblentz the "Blue Moselle" empties into the Rhine. It is a river that has had a charming song composed in its praise. The strains that I had heard as a boy were sounding in memory the whole evening. Just opposite Coblentz is the fortified heights of Ehrenbreitstein, called the Gibraltar of Northern Europe. From the waves of the river to the topmost rocks it is a mass of walls and towers and battery-crowned plateaus. It is said that a most exquisite view of the country is to be had from the summit of the castle. Traveling on a short schedule, I could not stop, though my eye and heart hungered so to do.

The vineyards constitute a most remarkable feature of this beautiful river. The slopes of the hills and the sides of the mountains are literally covered with them. In some places the mountain declivity is so sharp that it has to be terraced all the way down. At one point I counted twenty-eight or thirty distinct terraces. It is easy to imagine what a pleasing spectacle it presents.

The legends of the Rhine are almost as numerous as its vineyards. A book containing a number was offered for sale on the boat; but I had indulged sufficiently in that lore as a boy, and I also had a few in condensed form in one of the books I had with me. I give, in a few brief words, one of them. The sentences in parenthesis are my own, with the desire to throw additional light on the authentic and interesting record.

A certain lord, living in yonder castle to the right, had a daughter. (Oh, these daughters!) And she was lovely. (Of course.) About this time there came along a young wandering knight. (A kind of medieval tramp.) He fell in love with the daughter, and she with him. (All this was a foregone conclusion.) After a few months of lover-like happiness he went off to fight the Moors in Spain. (All of which was very wrong. What had the Moors done to him?) In one of the battles he was wounded, and, being left on the battlefield, was thought to be dead; and such a report came to the ears of the lovely daughter. At once she was plunged into despair, and immediately took the veil and became a nun. (All this was extremely precipitate; she should have waited until the arrival of the evening mail.) The young wandering knight was not killed, as was reported, but wounded. (If he had been a settled, industrious landholder in the neighborhood, he would have died; but, being a kind of military tramp, he recovers.) Hastening back from the gory field, he finds, to his consternation and grief, that his lady love has taken the irrevocable vow of the nunnery; whereupon he spends the rest of his days leaning on and over the castle parapets of stone, looking down upon the convent that contained his lost treasure. (All this morbid, unhealthy, useless piece of inactivity goes to show us that had this young man lived in the present century, he would have worn long hair, played accompaniments on the piano, and written bad poetry.) Finally the young knight died. (Of what complaint is not mentioned in the legend; but I suspect that he caught cold sitting so long on the stones.)

And now the young people rave over the one arch of the castle that is left. What mental conclusions they draw I leave to each reader to imagine; but the moral I draw from the legend is that you never know what young people are going to do.

Still farther up there is another ruined castle where formerly dwelt seven lovely sisters. (This being four or five hundred years ago, there is no possible way of disproving the fact that all the sisters were lovely.) Having very large estates in addition to their beauty, they had quite a number of suitors. (Comment here is superfluous.) But these sisters did not desire to marry. (Perhaps they saw the men were after the land and money.) Anyhow, when compulsion was brought to bear upon these seven females in regard to matrimony, the legend relates that they drowned themselves in the river Rhine, and forthwith there came up above the surface seven rocks, into which form the rocky-hearted sisters were transformed. (On reflection, this was not such a change after all. Nevertheless, it was a warning to other females who, since that time, have been more tractable. Think of it!—seven sisters kill themselves rather than get married. Their race is perished!)

In the journey up the Rhine there are moments when, through the stoppage of the boat a few minutes, or from some features of the landscape being less striking, the passengers take note of each other, and exchange hasty salutations and a few words of pleasant remark. At one of these times I was introduced to a Col. Somebody, whose name I forget, because I see so many famous people, they being out in force this year. This colonel was Lincoln's law partner, and wrote a life of the dead President. He quite enchained me with scraps of Lincoln's early history, and with the account of the capture and death of Booth, his murderer.

Bingen is reached about half-past seven in the evening. It lies on the west bank of the Rhine, at the foot of lofty vineyard-clothed hills. Directly across the river the mountain-side is terraced and vine-clothed down to the water's edge. It is a lovely place, and recalled with deeper appreciation the song by Mrs. Norton, of "Sweet Bingen-on-the-Rhine."

After passing Bingen the mountains seemed to become weary with having entertained us so long; and so, with graceful sweep of their beautiful forms, they swept off to the right and left for a distance of several miles, and stood looking back at us, through their dark blue veils, over their rounded, sloping shoulders. Thus coquettishly left, we pursued our way between level shorelines that reminded me greatly of the Mississippi. Then lights began to twinkle here and there on the river from fishing-boats, and the stars came out overhead, and the trees stretched in spectral lines on the shore, and then the moon arose in cloudless beauty and poured a flood of liquid light on the distant mountains and fields and the broad flood of the river. And then a little while after the lights of the city of Mayence came into view before us, and the beautiful dream-like trip on the Rhine was at an end.

B. CARRADINE.

A Bimetallic Currency.

From the caption of this article it might be inferred by the unwary that we were proposing to advocate a return to specie payments upon the part of our respected commonwealth; but nothing could be farther from our thought. We intend to speak of a currency as much more diffuse than the former as the wind than the water, and as much less dependent upon the edict legislative for its irresistible outflow as Tennyson's brook than the frog-ditch across which we threw nimble dams in our childhood. The gospel which, according to the divine formula of, "Go ye into all the world," was taken up by the four winds of Pentecost and carried into immediate and general circulation, north, south, east and west, is the subject that enchains our pen; and to call it bimetallic is to adhere to a phraseology both scriptural and apostolic. When the chief apostle said, "Gold and silver have I none," he only meant to deplore the awful commercial fate of an enterprise which had been set on foot by the proprietor of not only "all the gold and silver," according to the testimony of his Word, but of everything in being that might be deemed its collateral, and not to congratulate himself upon a state of poverty so dire as must have attracted the admiration of even the lame beggar. When the other apostle declared that the faith of the Christian was more precious than "gold and silver," it was not his purpose to utter a bull of excommunication against the latter, or to declare that the former was not in harmony with it, but only to institute an instructive comparison between correlated subjects occupying different spheres of being. Indeed, these two subjects are in apposition with each other as being the chief representatives of values in the realms to which they respectively belong; and because this is so, and because all spiritual truth, to be appreciated by man, must find some material expression, we could not expect the former, occupying the latter's sphere, to proceed independently of it, any more than we should expect a bird to fly without wings, or an ostrich to run without legs. Certainly we are taught by our Savior that the righteous and the unrighteous mammon are connatural with each other, and that they amount to so entirely the same thing in a Christian man's experience, that if the former, for any cause, were to fail, the latter, as a divinely appointed usher, would conduct him to everlasting habitations. The gospel, coming into the world, says to Cæsar: I will make your circulating medium mine, and place an invisible stamp upon it that will cause it to be current in the worlds of light. It shall be valuable henceforth, not for what it is, but for what it does. It shall be a curse when hoarded, and a sweet benediction when cast abroad in profusion like the gold of the nightly firmament. Every dollar upon which the annealing fiat of the great Mint Owner passes will scintillate blessing with a radius as great as though it were enhorizoned, and enctured with the bands of Orion or the rings of Saturn.

But before we get too far away from the earthy earthiness of the subject, which is that which is material to this discussion, let us observe again that while the gospel has very little to do with star dust, that it is so utterly dependent upon gold dust that without it it could get nowhere in an eternity. The gospel, mounted on a great white horse, wearing many crowns, and dashing through the astonished continents with the speed of a comet, or as an angel wearing a sapphire crown, and flying in the midst of heaven, with sun, moon, and stars en train, are true metaphors, and the parts of most convincing logic; but just think of the expense, as an unpatriotic citizen of our country is said to have ejaculated when it was proposed to extend the national credit by a new issue of greenbacks. Ah! nothing is so costly; and yet there are those who will look this gift-horse in the mouth, and who urge pusillanimous objections because the Author of redemption has constituted the most precious of earthly possessions its legal tender. But may we not declare that gold and silver is a standard of values which man himself has ordained, and inquire, Shall he not stand or fall by it? Would it not be a privation to the average Christian if he owned such a priceless treasure as the gospel, and was forbidden to spend money on it? Does it not seem reasonable to a person who has the financial instinct even moderately developed, that if nothing which heaven contains can be purchased with money—that is to say, by a simple process of bargain and sale, which we apprehend to be true—that yet anything that heaven contains would be cheap if it could be bought at any price? Christ taught, indeed, that the wards of covetousness in a human life could only be opened with a key of the precious metals, and his ministry, from its beginning to its close, was nothing so much as a crusade against this vice. The widow's mite, he taught, put into beneficent circulation, was more than all the moth-eaten regalia and cankered gold and silver of the rich men of Jerusalem. A few denarii doled to the multitudes would outweigh the interest-bearing millions of the young ruler, or a bright farthing, bearing the temple superscription, bestowed lovingly upon the beggar, all the treasure of Dives.

It is not a question, yet again taught the greatest financier who has dawned upon our lower sphere, of giving, but one of paying. "The gold and the silver are His," said Christ by the mouth of his prophets; and to make that saying intelligible, he added the authoritative comment, "Render unto God the things that are God's." The disciples of Christ are stewards of an estate who are to render an account; or they are proprietors of a pound which they are to increase by dextrous trading; and, in any case, they are to expect only a reasonable wage for their services. Every man who sets up lordship over an earthly estate thrusts out the rightful heir by violence, and usurps a title which can not inhere in flesh and blood. Every man who puts his money to interest, that it may yield a per cent. for his own coffers, lays that up in a napkin which shall speak against him with a voice as of liberated thunders in the judgment. The Christian can not buy his way into heaven, but he can pay his way to heaven. "Shall we pay tribute?" queried the Jews. "Show me a penny," said he who became poor for our sakes.

To him who reads aright the denarius, the most common expression of the currency of the Roman Empire in the time of our Savior, is the Alpha and Omega of the gospel.

And from all this moralizing, if we get no other benefit, let us grasp the conclusion that it will be as intolerable in the judgment for a covetous laity, as for a penurious or a luxurious clergy, or for Judas or Ananias.

Millsaps College Notes.

Surely the blessings of God will rest upon a cause which is the recipient of funds made precious by sacred associations and holy memories. A little girl had accumulated ten dollars in gold, and when God's messenger had called her from earth to heaven the fund, now sacred in the eyes of those who loved her, was kept until some cause, holy enough for such treasure, should present itself. What holier claim than Christian education? And Millsaps College becomes the custodian of the sacred fund.

An aged woman had been gathering together, in a mite box, her spare pennies for the Lord's treasury; and when the cold hands had been folded above the heart that had ceased its throbbing, the reverent hands of three little grandchildren gathered up the sacred treasure, and, in the endowment of Millsaps College, consecrated it to the service of the Lord.

A widow had received fifty dollars from an organization of which her husband had been a member, and, wishing to dedicate it to the service of her Master in the way that would best promote his cause, she subscribed the amount to the endowment fund of Millsaps College. May God's blessings abide upon these sacred offerings!

Bishop Galloway preached at Crystal Springs, on last Sunday, on "Christian Education," and collected $270 for Millsaps College. On the same day the agent collected $150 at Lake, and Bro. Nicholson made the handsome collection reported last week from the Sam Jones Camp Meeting. A united effort would accomplish in a day what will otherwise require months for its accomplishment.

On Tuesday, September 2, the agent visited the historic town of Woodville, where for two days he was entertained in the delightful home of that noble son of an honored name, Dr. Edward McGehee. On Wednesday morning he attended the opening exercises of Edward McGehee College, which, under the direction of Rev. H. Walter Featherstun and his accomplished wife, gives promise of increased prosperity and usefulness.

President Featherstun has associated with himself a corps of efficient and experienced teachers, and the cause of Christian education will be promoted by the work done at this honored institution.

On Wednesday night the interests of Millsaps College were presented, and a collection taken up amounting to $135.

The agent spent last Sunday with the Methodists of Hamburg, Miss., and secured $139 50 for the endowment fund of Millsaps College.

"Millsaps College Day" promises to be a grand success. The idea was a happy one, and meets the hearty endorsement of our people. Nothing less than a universal observance of the day throughout the State will meet the opportunities and obligations of the hour. Publications will be made in the ADVOCATE of the amount raised by each church and Sunday-school.

The following extract from a letter from one of Mississippi's most promising young preachers is commended to the thoughtful consideration of every friend of our great enterprise:

I feel that it is a privilege to do anything I can to help forward what I conceive to be the most important cause that now presents itself to Mississippi Methodists. As a lover of my State and my church, I had rather put work and money into Millsaps College than into any other cause that I know of, however just its claims. I saw and felt the necessity of this college long before it was publicly agitated; but never saw any light until Maj. Millsaps made his noble offer.

The following extracts are regarded as models:

A young lady writes:

Enclosed find $10, which you will please accept with best wishes for Millsaps College.

A presiding elder says:

I send you $80 in notes. . . . Send me some more blanks.

A pastor writes:

Enclosed find four notes amounting to $35. Send me more blank notes.

The agent will take pleasure in furnishing blanks upon application.

A. F. WATKINS.

Notice.

To the Preachers in Charge in Columbus District, North Mississippi Conference—

Dear Brethren: You have seen the call of Bishop Galloway, and of the Rev. A. F. Watkins, agent, to observe Sunday, October 12, as Millsaps College Day. Let me urge a prompt and hearty response to that call. Explain the object of the college, and urge everyone to give something—those who have much to give much; those who have little to give what they can. Let the faith and zeal of our people be shown by their liberality to this enterprise. Let Columbus district show herself forward in this good and needed work. We are able to do, if we will. If any cry poverty, ask if this poverty is not the result of no purpose to use God's gifts to his glory. We give now to secure a working basis of endowment. We leave the question of location to be discussed and settled hereafter. Doubtless there will be opportunity for free discussion of that matter before the place is chosen. Up with the college; the boys are waiting.

School for the Blind.

For many years the blind of the State, its most needy beneficiaries, have been without a permanent home, or the appliances and facilities needed for their comfort in living, or their educational development. Within the last year the "Louisiana Board of Trustees for the Assistance of the Blind" have purchased a property, erected an elegant building, and transferred to the State for permanent and exclusive use as a school and industrial home for the blind. The organization of the school is complete, and the next session will begin on the first day of October next.

In this school all the branches of a first-class education, as in other schools, are thoroughly taught. Besides music, the girls are taught sewing, knitting, and domestic work; the boys are taught several useful trades, by which they may become self-supporting. All are trained in the beautiful and healthful exercise of calisthenics. In the care of Mrs. Lane and Mrs. White the children lack nothing of the tender care they receive from their own parents and in their own homes.

It is to be hoped that everyone who knows of a blind person under twenty years, of sound health and good character, will use every proper influence to send them to the school.

"Let us take heed; for mercy is like a rainbow which God set in the clouds to remember mankind; we must never look for it after night, and it shines not in the other world. If we refuse mercy here, we shall have justice to eternity.—Bishop Taylor.

THE STREAM IN THE WOODS.

Bright stream, that wanders here and there,
Laughing the whole day long,
Your voice across the woodland calls
Like a remem'ered song.

Here, as of yore, the beeches spread,
And grass and flowers are sweet,
Where oft your hasting waters ran
Across my childish feet.

A golden time! I knew it not.
In those far days of old;
But left the field and left the stream
To seek for other gold.

Oh, dear to me your sunlit wave,
And dear the leafy shore;
But you have borne upon your tide
That which returns no more.

The Administration of Discipline.

The Methodist Church has always been opposed to whisky drinking, worldly amusements and other such things. These vices have been declared against by her press and pulpit in no uncertain terms; and her stringent rules upon these subjects have distinguished her from other churches at this point. Our last General Conference took even a higher stand in this regard than the church had before occupied, and affirmed the unalterable opposition of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to such things as card-playing, dancing, theater-going, whisky-drinking and attendance upon race-courses, and urged our ministers to faithfully administer discipline at any violation of these rules. How may this best be done? This is the question that concerns us, as the church is determined to put down these evils.

The answer, to my mind, is plainly this: Let us, as ministers, take a bold stand in support of our church, and carefully, but firmly, administer discipline in cases of violation of law, and let there be concert of action. As long as a part of our preachers disregard the law in these things, and another part endeavor to enforce it, there will be dissatisfaction and the evils will not be suppressed. There is a great lack of uniformity in the administration of discipline among us, that is arraying one class against another, and that is threatening the very peace and prosperity of our beloved church. Let us suppose a case, which is by no means a solitary one: A minister is sent to one of our charges as pastor of a people, and allows dancing, theater-going and such evils, and takes no notice of them beyond an occasional word of remonstrance. At the next Conference some one else is sent to that charge; and this minister, feeling it his duty to keep, not to mend the law, begins to draw the line upon these things. In a moment a very tirade of abuse is poured upon him, and the church temporarily suffers, and the preacher becomes unpopular simply for a faithful discharge of duty; when, if his predecessor had performed his obligation, there would have been nothing of it. If our people everywhere knew that these things would not be tolerated, and that our clergy was a unit upon this question, all these evils could soon be suppressed; but until this is the case we will have friction, and the faithful must suffer.

As a rule, the preachers upon circuits, missions and small stations execute law, and our city pastors almost totally disregard it; and, as a consequence, the action of the latter is being constantly thrown up to the former, and their whole ministry is affected by it.

It is rapidly getting to be the case that the country members must be expelled for an offense, while the city member floats along in the giddy maze of the waltz, and frequents the theater, and is not even rebuked. There are some notable exceptions; but we are beginning to place too much estimate upon money and influence, and we are doing it to the detriment of our spiritual power. In some places the people are defying the pastor to interfere at the peril of withholding their financial support.

Let us abolish our rules altogether or enforce them in a uniform manner. If we are uniform in enforcing our rules, we can suppress these evils. If a preacher passes these things by unnoticed, let his character be arrested at the bar of the Conference; and if he persists in this course, then he should not remain in a church when he does not believe in its laws. I don't mean to arraign all of our city members, some of whom are as godly as can be found anywhere, nor would I hurt any of the consecrated men that serve our city charges, who are endeavoring to check these evils; but I do refer to the man on mission, circuit or station that is his church a law unto itself. The mission of the church is to save, not to cut off; but when forbearance has ceased to be a virtue, let us save the church and meet our obligation in the fear of God alone. If we have complied with the rules, we need fear no danger. "We have delivered our own souls." O. L. SAVAGE.

CLEVELAND, MISS.

A Day with the Choctaw Indians.

In Jasper county, Miss., Saturday, August 30, with a party among whom was Rev. Mr. Witt, a member of the North Mississippi Conference, we set out two miles distant to attend the closing exercises of an Indian school, taught by Mr. H. S. Halbert, a citizen of Neshoba county. When we arrived at the academy, standing among giant oaks, under whose branches, perhaps, the forefathers of these dusky pupils had danced around camp fires, rehearsed thrilling tales of warfare and sung hideous songs of battle, we found a school of thirty-eight bright-faced boys and girls. The exercises had commenced, and quite a crowd of patrons and spectators were seated listening with their characteristic gravity. A welcome of shaking hands was extended us by a committee—George Washington, Frenchman and Post Oak, three of the most prominent patrons. We were delighted at the intelligence and progress evinced by the classes. They were carried through recitations in orthography, reading in graded fourth readers, and the New Testament in English and Indian translations, carefully observing pronunciation, punctuation and emphasis. In arithmetic, readily working problems in the four fundamental rules. Their penmanship was beautiful, the singing wierdly charming, rendered in translations of our church and Sabbath-school music in Indian. At twelve dinner was announced, and, escorted by the committee to the long table in the yard, we found it spread with a neat white table-cloth, on which in lavish abundance were provided meats nicely cooked, light bread, biscuit, different kinds of cake and tempting dishes of various kinds, served up in epicurean style, and the coffee was pronounced perfect. A blessing was asked by George Washington, and then we were cordially invited to dine. We were served by thoughtful and skillful waiters; the other Indians, with silent respect, keeping aloof until we had eaten. After doing justice to the bountiful repast, seasoned with unfeigned hospitality we again repaired to the academy and listened to recitations and songs. When the closing hour came, George Washington requested all to bow in prayer, and from the earnestness of delivery we inferred it was eloquent. The school then marched out into the yard, formed a line, and were treated to confectionerics by their loved teacher. One of the patrons then made a short speech in Indian, eulogizing the faithfulness and efficiency of the teacher, their appreciation of his services, thanking us for our attendance and interest in the exercises of the day. Bro. Witt made a speech of encouragement, inciting them to persevere in attaining higher developments in religion, assuring them that we recognized them as a brotherhood in heralding the Redeemer's kingdom. They responded in thankful appreciation of his kind regard and Christian love. Their teacher labored the entire week, teaching six days in the literary, and on Sabbath in the Sunday-school. He is thoroughly acquainted with their language; a good English scholar; has made the Indian character a study; has taught among them a great deal, knows their capabilities and how to win their entire confidence and respect. He is engaged in a glorious work, for there are scattering bands of Choctaw Indians in Mississippi who, by culture, will abandon the heathenish traditions to which they have so tenaciously adhered; and in lieu of stated cries, funeral rites for the dead, ball plays, drinking and fighting, living in bark wigwams, will build homes, churches and schoolhouses, till the soil, conform to civilization in manners and dress, become good, responsible citizens and Christians. We commend the field to missionary and State Boards as an important one; and though not being invested with the notice that has been given to foreign Christian work, it is a home one for the benefit of those who once claimed undisputed our country as theirs.

They are a noble race, and among us, a wandering fragment of a once mighty nation who loved the graves of their ancestors and the scenes of childhood so dearly that they refused to cross the Father of Waters and occupy rich hunting grounds. Their bravery, fidelity, stoicism, their simple habits as children of nature when in wretched savagery, excited our admiration. Generations have come and gone, yet mystery has hovered over these strange people until their name carries with it a feeling of dread which attaches to ghostly and ghastly things of the past. Those of them among us have regarded with stolid indifference the pride and advance of achievement, have received no new inspiration to increasing intelligence and substantial progress until recently. By the establishment of churches and schools they are being awakened to a new interest in civilization. We should try to atone for so long past neglect by remembering them generously in future missionary enterprise and public-school legislation. M. B. REYNOLDS.

A Sample of False Reasoning.

Impressive facts are of frequent occurrence in this world of uncertainty and death, that prove beyond question that Christian men and women are seriously amenable to the indictment of religious theft. When their own theology teaches them that a lately lost son or daughter, having died unconverted, is lost eternally, they remember with relief that there is a neighbor who believes in a more benevolent and cheerful faith, and to this they now turn for comfort and light. They coolly abandon their own theology for a season, and appropriate to their spiritual use the broader and brighter hopes of another.—Universalist Quarterly, Boston, July.

If Christian men and women "abandon their own theology," as charged by the writer of the above quotation, when they have lost children that were unconverted, they ought not to be charged with "religious theft" for this change of opinion. Do our Universalist friends claim a monopoly of the truth and of the comforts it inspires? Have they cornered upon it, with a view of holding it for their own delectation? Can one be righteously charged with the crime of theft for appropriating an opinion that has been published to the world for the purpose of gaining adherents?

Admitting that some who believe in the doctrine of future punishment give it up, and embrace instead the doctrine of universal salvation, when bereaved of unconverted children, it ought not to subject them to the grave charge of "religious theft." There is no theft in the case. It is simply receiving a doctrine that has been published and urged upon their acceptance with great vehemence by the very men that now stigmatize their new converts as religious rogues. A doctrine or opinion published to the world belongs to the public. The very object of its publication is to secure the indorsement of those who have not as yet embraced it.

In the next place, if under the circumstances supposed, such changes of opinion occur (which are very rare occurrences), we are not authorized to jump to the conclusion that Universalism is true. It is simply a case in which sentiment is arrayed against the orthodox doctrine of future punishment. One's inability to reconcile himself to what God wills and does is no proof that the things objected to are not true. Such reasoning would lead to the conclusion that there are no such things as floods and cyclones and epidemics that destroy thousands of the innocent as well as of the guilty; but facts set aside such vain reasoning. If the doctrine of future suffering, or suffering in the future life, be true, cherishing a feeling of opposition to it will not alter the fact; nor does it weaken the force of the arguments drawn from the Scriptures in its support. The fact of sin accounts for suffering in this life, at least, by admission of our Universalist friends; and its possible continuance in the future life may render future suffering necessary. If sin and suffering stand related to each other as cause and effect, so long as the cause operates the effect must follow.

Now, it is a gratuitous assumption to say that death destroys sin; and if not, thousands must pass into the future life in a sinful state. Hence they have in themselves the cause of pain and sorrow. The question at issue is not as to the punishment of sin, but as to the duration of the punishment. The Universalist confines the punishment to this life; the so-called orthodox churches believe in eternal punishment in the case of the incorrigibly wicked. In choosing between these opposing views we must appeal to the Word of eternal truth. Who may, or may not, become a convert to this or that opinion, has nothing to do in settling the question at issue.

MADISON STATION, MISS.

The Elder Brother in the Parable of the Prodigal Son.

The Pharisees and scribes objected to Jesus that he received sinners. The self-constituted righteousness of the Pharisees would permit no sinner in their immediate company. For the Lord Jesus to receive sinners and eat with them was to acknowledge himself a sinner. So widely was this received as a foregone conclusion that the apostles seemed without an answer. The three parables which followed in a continuous discourse in this fifteenth chapter of St. Luke was to answer that objection. The first and second parables teach that he will not only receive, but will seek after them by all reasonable means, and bring them to himself. The third parable, embracing the subject of this writing, affords us the lesson that the sinner from his own reflections, turning to him even from the most degraded and wretched estate, will be received joyfully. There are some circumstances and persons introduced to complete the symmetry of the story, such as the servants and the dancing, which, if made to represent important features in the gospel, would strain them from their legitimate purpose, and place the parable on all-fours. The emphasis is placed on the younger son as the wandering sinner far from his father's house, penitent, returning to be joyfully received by his heavenly Father. If the elder son is meant to represent any real character, it is certainly the opposite of the prodigal. The shepherd of the sheep, all agree, represents God. The woman, with her pieces of money, also represents God. It is equally plain that the father of the two sons stands for the heavenly Father. Then there is no question but the lost sheep is the sinner, and equally unquestionable that the lost piece of money is the sinner. Nothing is plainer than that the prodigal in the last parable is the sinner. Nothing can be claimed for the ninety-and-nine sheep but that they were the righteous. The nine pieces of money remaining safe in the woman's keeping are also the righteous. To say the elder son was anything else than a faithful child and servant of the heavenly Father would be a failure to follow the whole tenor of the discourse at the expense of a part of the narrative, at least, and a violation of logic such as the Lord Jesus never committed. The anger of the elder son, his refusal to go in when he heard of the feasting, the music and dancing, was on account of the return of his younger brother. His answer to his father that he had always served him and never transgressed one of his commandments (and yet there had never been an occasion of rejoicing with him), has led some to conclude that he was the worldly, impecunious, bad man of the story, which is not the design or meaning of the parable, if it has any meaning. The absence of the expression at the end of the story, "But he would not," leaves us to a most legitimate inference that he was persuaded. "He was angry;" "he would not go in;" he was unwilling to welcome such a brother; he did not understand how the father could receive to his bosom with such demonstrations of gladness one who had sunk so low in infamy and shame, and brought such reproach upon his name. Who understands, or has ever understood, the saving power of the gospel of grace? In the early ministry of the apostles, the apostles themselves, with thousands of Jewish Christians, did not believe the Gentiles could receive the gospel, and for long years none dared to preach to a Gentile; and when Peter did go and boldly preach to the house and company of Cornelius, the brethren called him to an account for it, as committing a misdemeanor. But when Peter, to defend himself, recounted how the Holy Ghost had fallen on the proscribed Gentiles, "as on them at the first," they rejoiced with Peter that God had to the Gentiles "granted repentance." Few Christians of long experience but have seen persons profess religion, in whose conversion they had no sort of confidence. They did not understand how the grace of God could change such a man; yet the time has come when we rejoiced in the religious communion of such a one. That God can pardon the sinner at all is a mystery the "angels desire to look into." They see that he does it; but they do not understand it.

When the elder pleaded that he had ever been with the father, that he had always served him with uninterrupted faithfulness—this the father effectually admits, and adds, "All that I have is thine." He does not say this to the younger son, but he does say it to the elder. If we are to learn anything from this part of the parable, it is that "all I have is thine" is spiritual things. A life of dissipation, sin and crime had narrowed down and dwarfed the capacity of the prodigal so that he could not enter into the fullness of religious enjoyment, nor attain to the full development of ripe Christian character of one who had always been with the Lord, and had ever rendered a faithful service. It is right, as the parable teaches, to rejoice over the repentant sinner, even the very worst, because such "dead" can be made "alive," and such "lost" can be "found." To the faithful and long-trained servant and child of God it is said, "All that I have is thine;" religion, and all that religion is, is thine; or if it means what is further on—heaven, and all that heaven means, is yours. J. D. NEWSOM.

Altogether.

Why not every Methodist preacher in the State of Mississippi preach on the subject of Christian Education on the twelfth day of next October? There is something in concert of action; and as the Discipline makes it our duty to preach on the subject, why not do it at that time? Let us give all the friends of Christian education an opportunity to contribute to the endowment fund of our Millsaps College, and try to stir up some of our wealthy members to give their thousands, for this they must do if we succeed as we hope. This college is to be the pride of our State and church, or a lasting monument of our folly and stinginess. Our Methodists of means can make it a glorious success if they will; and if it fail, the responsibility is upon those whom God has blessed with means. What shall we do? Shall we make it an honor or a disgrace to our church?

HOLLY SPRINGS, MISS.

Lake Camp Meeting.

The Lake Camp Meeting commenced Friday evening and closed Tuesday evening, resulting in fifty conversions and forty accessions to the churches. Lake Camp Ground is the prettiest in the State. It is admirably adapted to the purposes for which it is used. It belongs to the Patron Union of the State; we (the church) having sold it to them, reserving the right to hold a camp meeting there annually. It has more conveniences than any camp ground in the State. The Executive Committee invited the Rev. Joe Jones to be present and assist in the meeting. Mr. Jones arrived Saturday morning and remained until the last service, doing most of the preaching. His preaching is plain, pointed, effective: at times sharp, pungent, amounting to harshness, reproving and rebuking sin with authority; at other times, pathetic, gentle and as loving as a woman. Evidently he is a man of God. The tent-holders, in a formal meeting, invited him to be present at the meeting next year. The singing was splendid—Mr. Gilreath, Mr. Jones' traveling companion, leading and conducting. The cornet was an attractive feature, and was skillfully used by him. He is a necessity to Mr. Jones in his meetings. The meeting was a great success, and in this part of East Mississippi will result in lasting good, I think. There was an interesting incident on the last day of the meeting, worthy of going down in history. At the close of the eleven o'clock service, Mr. Jones said, "We want to have a shouting time here today, and if you will do what I tell you to do, we will have it." He said: "There was a poor boy here, the son of a widow; he came here to enjoy this meeting, and his horse has died. I am not going to pass the hat around; but, like the negroes do, Come up here everyone of you that will give him something to buy another horse; come at once." There was a rush, and quickly the money was made up. In the midst of the collection, there came stepping forward an old colored woman and dropped a coin in the hat; and at that point the shout was raised. Sinners were convicted, mourners were converted and God's people shouted. It was the first time I ever saw shouting over a collection. Several negroes contributed. The best behavior I ever saw on a camp ground prevailed.

The district is moving on well. The preachers are all at their posts and hard at work. Many precious souls have been converted. The preachers and people all promise that the collections must be in full this year. The Millsaps College movement has warm friends and supporters in the district. There is almost a revolution in the district upon the subject of education. Several new church-houses have been built. Some have, others are now undergoing repairs. To our blessed Lord be all the glory!

Sam Jones Camp Meeting

The meeting on Sam Jones Camp Ground began on August 22, at eight o'clock P. M., and closed August 31. There were thirty-seven sermons preached. At some time during the meeting there were, all told, forty-one Methodist preachers present, twenty-four itinerants and seventeen local preachers. The preaching is said to be equal, if not superior to any ever heard on that consecrated ground. The meeting was good from beginning to close. It was truly spiritual and very enjoyable; the most profitable ever held here. The committee of three on pulpit services had as little trouble as any such committee ever had. We had a good supply of as willing workers as could be thrown together. There were thirteen accessions to the church. As to the number of conversions, I can not well estimate, but quite a number. The ministry and membership received great blessings, and have gone out to work in the Lord's vineyard with renewed energy and zeal. Fourteen of the pastors in Woodville district were present. Of those who were from other districts we mention: J. T. Nicholson, I. B. Robertson, J. A. B. Jones, J. W. Brown, C. W. Chrisler, H. Bradford, N. J. Roberts and G. D. Anders.

The order was mostly very good, and the congregations large. The trains stop at the camp, so the congregation was changing to some extent every day. I suppose four or five thousand persons visited the grounds during the meeting. There were, at least, two thousand present on the first Sabbath.

Rev. J. T. Nicholson took a subscription for Millsaps College, which footed up between six and seven hundred dollars. These amounts will be collected, or notes taken by the pastors as soon as possible. Bro. Nicholson preached nine sermons for us. He is a first-rate camp-meeting preacher. The tabernacle was blown down last spring, and was rebuilt and enlarged. The association that has charge of the grounds are planning for improvements and enlargments which are needed to accommodate those who come. There is an abundance of good spring water, picturesque scenery, railroad conveniences—all of which conspire to make this an important resort; besides it is the only camp ground in this part of the Mississippi Valley. Clinton Female Academy.

I see in your paper an advertisement stating that the above institute will open its next session on September 8. The property belongs to the town of Clinton, is held by a Board of Trustees, and devoted to the educating of girls and young ladies. It is undenominational, but not indifferent to the claims of religion. The principal is an educated, pious, estimable lady, and is well sustained by efficient assistants. One of these, Miss Sallie Hansey, is a graduate of the academy, and has been teaching for several years, and has proved her efficiency to teach. Mrs. Eugenia Going, a former pupil of Whitworth, is teacher of music and assistant in English literature. She has ability and skill as a teacher and the confidence of the entire community. Teaching accommodations are good. Building commodious and good, with sufficient room for out-door exercise. The government of the school is mild, firm and home-like; so that parents who have children to educate need not fear to trust them to Mrs. Munday. Board may be had with the principal, or at other homes in the town, at reasonable rates. From Ethel a branch road of the Valley Route will bring pupils directly to Clinton, which is a rural town of about eight hundred or a thousand inhabitants. There are four Protestant Churches. Since my residence in the town it has been decidedly healthy.

A FRIEND OF EDUCATION.

Opening at Mansfield Female College.

A note from Mansfield says:

The Mansfield Female College opened with a larger attendance than for years in its history, representing the States of Louisiana, Arkansas and Texas, while some are expected from Mississippi. The prospects for a large increase are very flattering. President McVoy has succeeded in gathering around him probably the choicest faculty the institution has ever had, from Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi and Louisiana. His faculty in music is certainly superior, fully sustaining the great reputation the department has hitherto maintained. By the addition of new instruments the institution is equipped and fully prepared to do the best conservatory work. Only a few vacancies remain for new pupils after the rooms are filled which are already engaged. Now is the time to enter.

Notice.

GREENVILLE DISTRICT.

There will be a district meeting in the interests of the Woman's Missionary Society at Rosedale, October 8. Mrs. Hargrove will preside. Every charge in the district is invited to send a representative. Every auxiliary in the district is urgently requested to send a delegate.

Preachers of the district are invited, and I especially ask them to encourage a full attendance of delegates and visitors.

All who expect to attend will please notify Rev. W. W. Woollard, Rosedale.

GANSVILLE CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

We are just closing one of the most glorious meetings it has ever been my fortune to direct. Last March one of my local preachers—Bro. B. H. Sheppard—was invited to preach about twenty-five miles from Gansville (his home), in the heart of a Baptist community, many of whom had never seen or heard a Methodist preacher. Bro. Jas. Garrison was the cause of his coming here, and the Lord so fructified the seed he sowed that it became necessary to organize a church, which the writer did in June. Rehoboth, the new church, started then with twelve members. On the night of August 29 we commenced a protracted meeting here, and, as we have no church-building, we preached at first in the houses of the members, and, as the congregations increased, numerically, out-of-doors until the tan-yard shed was given us by its manager, and there all this week the Lord has abundantly visited and redeemed his people. Prejudice has been killed in the hearts of many, unity and harmony instituted, and, at least, twenty-five souls have received the refreshing shower of divine grace to their salvation. Eleven accessions to date. I never saw people so hungry for Christ; never saw people drink in so eagerly the pure gospel; never saw the Spirit work so powerfully and deeply in bringing forth sound, true conversions. It would have done all my brethren good to have heard the glowing, heartfelt testimonies uttered last evening by more than a score of converts and old church members who, with tears of rejoicing, blessed God for a new, a rich experience of divine grace. Fathers and mothers blessed God for the salvation of their children, and young men and girls stated in clear, decisive language that they were determined to stand against ridicule, against sin in all shapes and forms, and serve him who had redeemed them by his precious blood.

Bro. Taylor, pastor of the Baptist Church, was with us and aided greatly in doing the Lord's work by his presence, his prayers, his tears and his shouts of rejoicing. Bros. Jones and Collins, leading Baptists, led our prayer meetings and rejoiced with us, for each had several of their children brought to Christ.

Our church is triumphant, and our sister church will now have to wake up to redoubled energy and life through the influence of this most signal victory for Christ.

NORTH BOSSIER CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

The spirit of revival is coming on the North Bossier circuit. We have held four protracted meetings. Three of the four we closed too soon, but still great good was done in them. The fourth meeting I closed last night, which was a glorious victory. God came in great power upon the people, and I never saw such a spirit of conviction come upon people in my life. I never witnessed greater agony among penitents before. I never heard more earnest cries for mercy and pardon as they packed the altar for prayer. I never saw people converted with greater power. Oh! the shouts of victory raised from souls who had struggled from the darkness of sin into light and salvation. One good feature in the work was a readiness to go to work. They would exhort their friends to be religious, lead them to the altar, talk to and pray for them; also would testify to the love of God in their souls. Seventeen were converted that we know of, and sixteen backsliders reclaimed—some of them old chronic cases. Besides these reclamations and conversions, God has graciously sanctified several of my people, and the old-time Methodist power is coming to North Bossier circuit. We received twelve into the church, organized a prayer meeting, and quite a number of new family altars were erected. We expect to have all collections in full by Conference. We are pushing the battle against sin and the devil, and expect to see quite a number of souls saved before the end of the year.

J. S. SANDERS.

[Such a work of grace ought to result in more than "all collections in full by Conference."—EDITOR.)

MARVIN CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

We held a meeting in the little village of Harrisville, embracing the second Sunday in August. It continued four days. The church was greatly revived and quickened to a higher life. Sixteen were added to the church. The following Saturday we commenced a meeting in the flourishing little town of Steen's Creek. This meeting continued nine days. It was a grand success. Several weeks before the meeting commenced the church covenanted to pray for a revival, and God did not disappoint his people, but was with us from the first in his sanctifying and soul-saving power. Our church was not only full, but was packed with hungry, thirsting souls. Every business was closed during divine service and both principal and employee took their places in the house of God. It was a glorious sight to see so much unity and Christian feeling among the different denominations; Presbyterian, Baptist and Methodist all laboring together for the salvation of souls. Twenty-two were added to the Methodist Church. The number of conversions is unknown. The last day of the meeting, at an early hour, our church-house was packed to overflowing. Many were out in the church-yard. Bro. Freeman, the pastor of the Baptist Church, came in and, in behalf of the membership of his church, tendered us the Baptist Church to worship in, as it was a more commodious building than ours. We accepted his offer.

We were assisted in this meeting by Bros. I. L. Peebles, A. D. Miller and Irvin Miller. These men of God preached with great power. We are also indebted to Sister Peebles and Miss Lillian Robinson for valuable services rendered in the ladies' prayer meeting and as organist. To God be all the praise!

Steen's Creek is on a boom. They are to have a high school there; Prof. Gilmer, principal. Several new buildings going up soon. We are to have a hotel also. This is a good place for parents and guardians to prepare their children for college.

We have just closed a four days' meeting at Richland Academy. Thirteen additions to the church and Christians quickened to a holier living. I was assisted in this meeting by Bros. I. L. Peebles and Daniel Lotlin. We expect to report at Conference: All the assessments paid in full from Marvin circuit.

Now, Mr. Editor, we are very happy in the Lord's work. Pray for us, that we may have still greater success. The circulation of the ADVOCATE is steadily increasing, and it is doing a good work for our people. May it continue to prosper!

J. F. ROBINSON, P. C.

ST. HELENA CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Assisted by Bro. Whittington, of the East Feliciana circuit, and Bros. Carroll and Hodges, local brethren of the same circuit, I have just closed a most delightful meeting at Centre and Day's Churches, combined. They are about four miles apart, and composed of pretty much the same congregation. We commenced at Centre on Saturday, August 30, and continued until Thursday, when we moved to Day's, and carried on the same meeting till Sunday, September 7, when we closed with the largest congregation that I have seen at church for years, and the interest still increasing. We had quite a number of conversions—can't tell how many; eleven accessions, and the church greatly quickened. These brethren all did us most efficient work, and much endeared themselves to my people. R. HOWARD, P. C.

WATER VALLEY CAMP-MEETING.

The Water Valley Camp Meeting closed Wednesday night, September 3, having continued five days. It was a real success. Twenty gave their names for church membership. The Christian people were truly edified. The preaching was of a high order, sound and good. None of it required a formal endorsement. Besides home help, we had Dr. W. R. Sims, Bros. T. J. Newell and T. G. Freeman.

We have planned—have the means largely subscribed for the purpose—for a substantial, ample, splendid tabernacle. The cause of Christ evidently has been considerably advanced in the efforts put forth and finance expended in the Water Valley Camp Meeting. It is delightful and profitable to worship the Master out there with the mixed multitude. J. M. WYATT.

BELZONI CIRCUIT, NORTH MISSISSIPPI.

I have just closed the third one of my protracted meetings on the Belzoni circuit this year. The first one built up the church very much, and fifteen were added to the church. The second one seemed to do but little good, and the third was as good a meeting as I want to attend. There were forty, or more, conversions, and twenty-five accessions on profession of faith, and several by letter. I have baptized nineteen children, and will baptize several more. I judge by this that Methodism is getting a good hold here. At the close of the third meeting I took a collection to build a new church, and got $450, and will soon have a new house of worship. I had at these places the help of Bros. Hargrove, French, Lowe and Nolen. They gave me good help. W. H. SANDERS.

WILLIAMSBURG CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

We held our third quarterly meeting August 23 and 24, 1890. Our presiding elder was on hand, and preached three times, to the delight of all present; and I continued the meeting two days longer, with a good result—fifteen accessions and seven conversions, and the church very much revived. This is the close of my protracted meetings. I have held five protracted meetings, and the Spirit of the Master was with us in great power at each church; and all the heads of families pledged themselves to live a better life, and to live religion at home, and to pray in their families. We have received into the church at these five meetings thirty-one members, and forty-two of our members embraced the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ, and are new creatures in Christ. We thank Rev. Henry Moore and Rev. E. J. Taylor and Rev. Bro. Ridgway for the help they rendered us. It is probable that the spiritual state of this little new work would compare favorably with older works in other places. We have great cause for rejoicing in the prosperity of this little work, for all of which we give God the glory.

Letter from Mexico.

Thinking our friends will feel an interest in our success in this difficult field, and being assured there are many praying for Mr. Weems, I will tell you of our District Conference. Indeed, I doubt if there are any better in the dear home land. After waiting and hoping for the presence of a Bishop, Mr. Weems at last determined to do the best he could alone; but, as I heard one of our preachers once express his feelings as he entered the pulpit at home, "he was swinging on a low limb." So Mr. Weems began his Conference. He had labored faithfully to instruct his preachers how to work, and they all, with not more than one or two exceptions, showed how they had benefited by his teachings. From beginning to end the Conference was a spiritual feast. In the morning, yesterday, we had a precious old-fashioned love-feast, followed by a sermon preached in the spirit of the Master. In the afternoon there were two essays read; one of "Justification and Regeneration," and the other, "A revival in every charge," read by Rev. D. F. Watkins. Mr. Weems then exhorted his brethren to look after every interest of the church, take their collections, work for their church paper, etc., telling them how to work. He said they had a right to expect souls to be converted every sermon they preached, if they asked and expected the presence of God. He wanted them to give an opportunity to persons to join the church at each service. When he concluded they arose, as one man, and one by one they clasped him in their arms, promising to go home and do more faithful work for Christ. Last night we had another sermon, after which the Lord's Supper was administered, a member received and baptized, and closed with a marriage in the church. This last event attracted a large crowd of Catholics. I never saw such a crowd in a Protestant Church in Mexico. We were packed like sardines.

The Conference has ended, the preachers all gone to their respective charges, and there was not an unpleasant thing occurred. All passed in the spirit of love and brotherly kindness. This morning some came to tell us that yesterday was the happiest day of their lives. Oh! the power of prayer! When one is far from sympathy and friends, we have to cling close to the Savior's side. When the reports were made, and the children's work was reported, I felt amply repaid for all the anxiety and suffering I have known in Mexico, and to-day, though cut off from relatives and friends, knowing that some dear to my heart have passed over the river since I left, and I can see their faces no more on earth, I can yet say, I rejoice that I have been able to do just a little for Mexico, myself—and my husband much more. There were two of the oldest missionaries of our church in the field present, and they confessed they had never seen any Conference like this in Mexico. God's promise—"I will never leave or forsake thee"—has been realized in our case to this good hour, for full well do those here realize under what difficulties Mr. Weems has labored; but, thanks be to "our Father," he has been loving and kind to his unworthy children. I have never felt such joy and peace and hope as shines upon my pathway this day. Though weary in body, my heart is all aglow. Pray for us, dear friends, and for Mexico. S. G. WEEMS.

Peculiar

To itself in many important particulars, Hood's Sarsaparilla is different from and superior to any other medicine.

Peculiar in combination, proportion and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom.

Peculiar in its medicinal merit, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown.

Peculiar in strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "100 doses one dollar." Medicines in larger and smaller bottles require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Peculiar in its "good name at home"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers.

Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad, no other preparation has ever attained such popularity in so short a time. Do not be induced to take any other preparation. Be sure to get

Wonders

Are wrought by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor in restoring gray hair to its original color, promoting a new growth, preventing the hair from falling, keeping it soft, silky, and abundant, and the scalp cool, healthy, and free from dandruff or humors. The universal testimony is that this preparation has no equal as a dressing, and is, therefore, indispensable to every well-furnished toilet.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for some time and it has worked wonders for me. I was troubled with dandruff and was rapidly becoming bald; but since using the Vigor my head is perfectly clear of dandruff, the hair has ceased coming out, and I now have a good growth, of the same color as when I was a young woman. I can heartily recommend any one suffering from dandruff or loss of hair to use Ayer's Hair Vigor as a dressing."—Mrs. Lydia O. Moody, East Pittston, Me.

"Some time ago my wife's hair began to come out quite freely.

Ayer's Hair Vigor

not only prevented my wife from becoming bald, but it also caused an entirely new growth of hair. I am ready to certify to this statement before a justice of the peace."—H. Hulsebus, Lewisburgh, Iowa.

"Some years ago, after a severe attack of brain fever, my hair all came out. I used such preparations for restoring it as my physicians ordered, but failed to produce a growth of hair. I then tried, successively, several articles recommended by druggists, and all alike fell short of accomplishing the desired result. The last remedy I applied was Ayer's Hair Vigor, which brought a growth of hair in a few weeks. I think I used eight bottles in two years; more than was necessary as a restorative, but I liked it as a dressing, and have continued to use it for that purpose. I believe Ayer's Hair Vigor possesses virtues far above those of any similar preparation now on the market."—Vincent Jones, Richmond, Ind.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1890.

The Mississippi Convention.

During the past week the convention has been discussing the report of the Suffrage Committee. Able speeches have been delivered on various phases of the subject. The plan proposed by the committee, which appears to be a sort of compromise between all plans, has found powerful opposition, and the more it is debated the greater the opposition seems to grow. The report embodies three propositions, known as the apportionment plan, the franchise plan and the electoral college plan, and each of these has found determined and able opponents. The convention seems to be agreed only on one point, and that is, that something must be done in regard to suffrage; but as to the specific thing to do, the convention is at sea. An observing friend from Mississippi, just from Jackson, told us the other day that Judge Chrisman's plan—that is, the educational or property qualification plan—seemed to be growing in favor, and also the woman suffrage feature appeared to be gaining strength in the convention. At present we can not see how all the conflicting views that obtain in the convention can be harmonized and welded into one organic law for the government of the whole State. Possibly the convention may adopt a Constitution to be submitted to the votes of the people, and in that case its adoption may be considered doubtful.

A Growing Pulpit Evil.

In some portions of Mississippi an evil practice is becoming common and popular with a class in our pulpits. I allude to extravagance, amounting to falsehood by reason of overstatement, and to real downright vulgarity. It is high time an end were put to these things. Presiding elders and preachers in charge ought to frown these things down. No amount of real or apparent good accomplished can justify coarseness and vulgarity in the sacred desk. Up to this time this evil seems to be confined principally to evangelists; and this is well, for no people could endure it in the pastor. Yet many of our young preachers are adopting this mode of speech; and no great wonder when they see and hear so much of the success of these evangelists in winning souls to Christ! They do not see or understand that these evangelists are different to other preachers only in the matter of extravagance, coarseness and vulgarity. They jump to the conclusion that the strength of Samson lies in the use of a "butcher's cleaver" rather than in the Damascus blade of God's Word. They throw down the "sword of the Spirit" and take up the "butcher's cleaver," and fall to hacking off the branches of the tree of sin. They imitate the faults rather than the virtues of their evangelistic heroes. This thing is fast becoming a great reproach to the cause of Christ and to our Methodism.

To add to our trouble, evangelists who indulge in these things receive the public, hearty and unqualified approval of seniors, elders and D. D.'s and M. D.'s. They tacitly approve the whole thing—the man and his coarseness and vulgarity. This tends to mislead young preachers. "Why," say they, "Bro. or Dr. So-and-So wrote a glowing account of him, and commended him to the church. It must be right or they would not approve it." When brethren write for the public prints, if they would approve the good and condemn the bad, it would help to cure this growing evil. It would help to cure the evangelist and tend to stop all imitators. As it is, it encourages this evil in all parties.

When a preacher spends an hour in the pulpit in a tirade against the wearing of "Mother Hubbards" by our good women, I think he is nearly "out of soap," as the old saying goes. The simple fact is, that if our women wore more "Mother Hubbards" and fewer corsets they would be better off every way. It is pure extravagance for a preacher to say, "I am going to make it so hot in this town that spittle would fry on your pavements." This is a mild way of cursing. The statement is false by reason of extravagance. It is entirely too superlative to be true. It is fashionable now to spend much time on the "arm clutch." It does not appear to be either a comfortable or convenient way to escort a lady. It is said to be both graceless and ungraceful in practice. But when a preacher says, "If a man were to lay hold of my daughter by the 'arm clutch,' I would shoot him down like a dog, or there would be a first-class funeral in town—my daughter is here; if you don't believe me, try it," he goes too far for a Christian, to say nothing of a Christian minister. If he feels what he says, he is not fit to preach; and if he does not feel it, his words are the utterance of a "bar-room bully."

I have picked out some of the sayings of this class of preachers to illustrate what I mean by a growing evil. I have taken such as might be written or spoken for this purpose. Many of these sayings dare not be printed in a family paper, and could not be uttered in a parlor. Indeed, they would be tolerated nowhere else than in the pulpit. This is a shame. It is a reproach to the gospel and to the pulpit. It is making our Methodism a stench in the nostrils of many of our best people. It ought to be frowned down and stamped out utterly and forever.

GILDEROY.

A Perplexed Brother.

We meet with some strange things occasionally in science and in art; and it has fallen to my lot in the last few days to listen to some strange things delivered by one of our ministers, who claims to believe in what is called the "residue theory." I am not an accuser of my brethren, but an advocate of sound doctrine; and as a great deal of what I heard is not sound, therefore, I write. I shall only make a few extracts from what I heard, purely from memory, that all may judge for themselves, and then make a few comments.

The brother did not underrate regeneration, as I heard others do, but said: "I admit that regeneration is a thorough work; that in justification all your personal transgressions are forgiven you; and in regeneration you are cleansed from all personal guilt, so that there is nothing against you, and there is no condemnation resting upon you. Your regeneration is thorough, as far as it can go. But, my brother, there is left in you envy, strife and division, and pride and self-will and anger; and all these can not be taken out by regeneration, and can only be taken out by the second blessing, or by the sanctification of your nature; and can not be obtained by growth, nor by the development of your Christian graces, as it is not the maturity of these that takes away the old Adam that is left in you, but by the sanctification of your nature, which is by faith in the blood of Jesus Christ, and that instantaneously. Now, mind I do not say that you are to blame for this sin that remains in you after regeneration, for you can not help it; neither does God blame you for it, for there is no condemnation resting upon you; neither can you repent for it, for you have repented of all your sins before you were regenerated. It does not come that way. Now, you can call it what you please; but I call it the 'old Adam' that is in you after you are regenerated. And it will always remain in you until you come to God for this cleansing blessing; and you must come to God and seek it as the second blessing, or sanctification, or you can never receive it; and if you do not receive it, you will go to the devil."

Then I thought: What self-contradiction, this! You are cleansed from the effects of all personal sins, and you are justified before God, and there is no condemnation resting on you, neither any blame. God does not blame you; and yet for the old Adam that is in you, you are sent to hell. If this be so, then I am both innocent and guilty at the same time, condemed and not condemned; and a man may be sent to hell simply for being connected with Adam, or for what Adam did. The atonement meets the demands of the divine law in the case of Adam, and individual sins are the cause of individual punishment. And if the regenerated man is free from individual guilt, he will be sure to be saved if he does his duty. No man can be punished in hell for what Adam did.

Again, he said: "There is a woman; she has consumption. She inherited it from her parents, and is not to blame for it. The doctor says, 'Here is a medicine that will cure you;' but the woman says she will not take it. Then she will die; not because she is to blame for having consumption; but because she will not take the medicine."

Let us look at this figure a little. As the woman got her consumption from her parents, so man got his depravity (not his personal sins) from Adam; and neither are to blame. Now, as the medicine cures the consumption, so sanctification cures the depravity? Query: Does the Bible anywhere say that sanctification cures depravity?

Once more he said: "You people who claim to be sanctified, and believe in the 'progressive theory,' you pray that God may come and sanctify you throughout. You pray to be cleansed by the blood of Christ from all sin. Now, if you are truly sanctified, or if I was sanctified, I never would ask God to sanctify me any more. How can God sanctify that which he has already sanctified? To illustrate: A child asks his mother for a piece of bread. 'There it is, my child,' and lays the bread in his hand. But the child continues, 'Mother, give me a piece of bread.' 'There it is, my child; there in your hand.' 'Mother, give me a piece of bread.' 'There is your bread, my child; take it and eat it, and go away and cease to annoy me any longer.' So it is with your coming to God for sanctification. If you are sanctified, why are you always asking God for it? I do not ask God to sanctify me, for I am already sanctified."

Then, thought I, there is no room for prayer at all to a sanctified man. As sanctification is the highest state attainable in this life, and must necessarily include all other blessings—repentance, justification and regeneration—and all other blessings attainable in these states, and I am not allowed to pray for sanctification, because I have it already. Then I can not pray at all without running the risk of asking God for something that I have, and hence be repulsed. So I must be forever shut off from the further use of the Lord's prayer, as it contains a petition for forgiveness, as I am already forgiven.

I listened to all this, and a deal more, and wondered if the preacher believed what he said. And all this, too, at a revival meeting, where there were many penitents at the altar for prayers. The people were confused and scattered, and did not know what to do, nor how to proceed.

T. H. McCLENDON.

Sicily Island, La.

Pastoral Address.

To the Preachers, Officers and Members of the Several Charges of the Brookhaven District—

Brethren: I adopt this method of reaching you with a few words, which I hope you will read and consider:

1. Remember the day set apart as Millsaps College Day, viz.: October 12. Let it be observed by all our churches. Give each Sunday-school and congregation an opportunity to contribute to this enterprise on that day. If possible, have a sermon suitable to the occasion preached in each congregation. The local preachers will help the pastors at this point. Our district is now in the lead in this work. Let us see to it that we continue to distance all the others in our zeal for Christian education.

2. Do not forget the district parsonage. For more than a year I have been laboring to establish a home for the presiding elder of this district, and up to this time we have in the hands of the treasurer only about $500. I thought in the beginning it would be done quickly and easily, and have been surprised and humiliated at the tardiness of the movement. Nearly all the pastors on the district are domiciled in homes provided by the church. There are fifteen parsonages in our bounds, but no shelter provided for the family of the presiding elder, the hardest worked man of them all.

I appeal to you in behalf of this enterprise. The future welfare of your district is involved, to say nothing of the comfort of your future presiding elders and their families. Let us finish this work without delay.

3. In several charges the Conference assessments have been provided for in full, but in some instances this is not the case. For several years our district has been steadily advancing in its financial interests. Let us come up this year with full reports all around, and without a deficit in any department. We have had a year of comparative health and prosperity. Let us show our appreciation of the blessings of God, and our loyalty to the interests of his kingdom on earth, by meeting all our financial obligations to the church in full. The church needs all we have been asked to pay, and we are well able to pay it. Let us do it promptly and cheerfully.

4. Let me urge you, officers and members of the several charges, to see that every cent of your pastor's salary is paid before he goes to Conference. In some instances this exhortation is not needed, but in others, I am sorry to say, it is. Your pastor's salary is small. In this respect our district does not measure up to the standard of some parts of our Conference. And other denominations in our midst, in some instances, surpass us in the matter of ministerial support. Our Savior said, "The laborer is worthy of his hire," and Paul wrote, "If we have sown unto you spiritual things, is it a great thing if we shall reap your carnal things?" Let me assure you that the disposition to withhold from the ministry a competent living is of the devil, and in the interest of the kingdom of darkness. God approves of what his Word teaches on this as on all subjects.

5. Let us have a full attendance of officials at the fourth quarterly meeting. Let the trustees of church property, the stewards and the local preachers be ready with their reports. I desire full statistical reports from the Sunday-schools for the use of our Conference Sunday-school Board. In the selection of stewards and Sunday-school superintendents for the ensuing year, you should have no regard for the vain ambition of those who will feel offended if left out, but have an eye single to the glory of God and the good of the church. The best workers in these departments are those who are all the time willing to retire if more efficient men can be found, and this they are willing to leave to the judgment of their brethren. A man who has not grace enough to do this is hardly qualified to fill an office in the church.

6. Let me emphasize the importance of family prayers and the circulation of our Conference organ. No home is well equipped without a family altar and a church paper. Parents who are remiss here need not be surprised when their children go astray. The great need of the times are well-equipped and well-regulated Christian homes.

The offering up of the morning and evening sacrifice by the head of the family, who is the divinely constituted priest of the house, and the weekly visits of the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE are potent influences to bring to bear on the children in their formative period, that will bring forth the happiest results in after life. God said of Abraham: "I know him that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord, to do justice and judgment; that the Lord may bring upon Abraham that which he hath spoken of him." And Joshua said of himself, "But as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord." These are examples worthy of our imitation. But to do this we must utilize all the resources at our command; and the Christian press is one of the most important of these, which, sanctified by prayer, will be a power for good in the homes of our people.

W. B. LEWIS, P. E.

Have We Blackguards in the Pulpit?

MR. EDITOR: Your cotemporary of the great church organ at Nashville has delivered his sentiments respecting "blackguardism" and "slum" smirching in the pulpit. In some directions this thing has become disgraceful, and can be tolerated no longer, at least, on the soil of Mississippi, unless our womanhood has fallen into the pit of toleration for all outrage upon what their mothers knew as female delicacy. But here is what the Rev. Dr. Hoss has to say, and I beg brethren to consider the weighty and solemn utterance.

* * * We have affirmed that the best possible statement of Christianity, as far as its saving power over men is concerned, can not be made in the terms that belong to the study or the cloister; but it is also the fact that it can not be made in terms of the slums. The notion that it is impossible to denounce sin and reprove sinners without filling one's mouth with the blackguardism of street-corner loafers and "saloon bummers," is not correct. Jesus spared none of the follies of men. Such scathing characterizations of all the forms of wickedness as those which fell from his lips have not been equalled in the annals of time. But, for all this, there is not one of his discourses that fails of fitness for reading in the public assembly or in the family circle. The pretense that we can not arrest the attention of men, and call them to a consideration of the claims of religion except by the use of methods that would disgrace a mountebank, is false. It is sure that the simple, straightforward and clean enunciation of our blessed and wholesome gospel will catch the ears and reach the understandings and stir the hearts of men as nothing else will. Other ways may create a temporary excitement; but Christ's way is the only one that contains "the promise and the potency" of permanent results.

I have heard a preacher very recently say he would make a funeral and ride in the front wagon, if the government asked him to do what takes place daily at my door without provoking any other feeling than one of gratification. And if we object, then we are not standing up to the "help of the Lord against the mighty." Alas! for the times in which our lots have fallen!

Notes.

Texas is growing all the time. A brother, writing in the Texas Advocate, spoke of a place "near the sunset!"

The Wesleyans are talking of celebrating the centenary of John Wesley's death, March 2, 1891, with appropriate memorial ceremonies.

Southwestern Methodist:

There are some preachers who have excellent gifts, but who are heady, ambitious and impatient, and who domineer over the churches they are appointed to serve. These need religion.

Our brethren must not take offense because we are compelled to shorten some of their accounts of meetings. It seems that we can not persuade them to brevity; therefore, in order to give space to others, we abbreviate the "notes" that are too long.

It has been said that our last General Conference cost the church $27,000. The levy was made upon the whole church. Now, will some of our Virginia brethren tell us how much the General Conference of 1886 cost the church of Richmond, Va.? We would like to know if it is more expensive for the whole church to bear the burden than for the church in one city to do it!

A brother, giving a rather glowing account of a meeting, says: "I then spoke of the necessity of building a church—the brethren were on fire—a subscription was immediately started, and in a few minutes $37 50 was subscribed!" The effect of the last clause of that sentence is similar to the effect of a sudden "down brakes" when you are going at the rate of forty miles an hour! That must have been "fox-fire."

Every clear thinker has reached the conclusion that the first want of the mind is truth, and every sound moralist has seen clearly that the first want of the soul is love. Then that system which puts truth into the mind and love into the soul is the system that should underlie and permeate every life, so as to enable it to reach its highest expression. The gospel is that system. Its design is to build up a vigorous and healthy life by supplying the mind and soul with their true nourishment.

We understand that the Ladies' Aid and Missionary Societies of Carondelet Street Church, in this city, are preparing a box of clothing for our mission school in the City of Mexico. It will contain, at least, seventy-five suits. Also the young ladies of the "Ready Workers" have agreed to furnish clothing for two boys of the same school for a year. Also a class of little girls, under Mrs. Mitchel, are furnishing the material and making aprons, etc., for the same good purpose. All of which is evidence of the spirit of him who left the poor in the charge of the church. "Inasmuch as ye did it unto the least of these, ye did it unto me."

Several weeks ago one of our correspondents asked for the Scripture proofs that Mary, the mother of Jesus, was a descendant from David. Several answers have been published, and several others have been received which have not been published. It seems to us that everyone has missed the question. They all attempt to answer a question which was not asked. They have attempted to reconcile Matthew and Luke in their accounts of the descent of Jesus. In all of them there appears the supposition that "Mary was probably the daughter of Jacob." Our first correspondent doesn't want suppositions, but this: Where is the Scripture which says, Mary was a descendant of David? For the reason that our correspondents have not tried to answer this, but some other question, we have not published any more on the subject.

Personal and Otherwise.

Rev. J. M. Rollins, of the St. Louis Conference, has been accepted by the Board of Missions for work in Japan. He expects to sail for Kobe, October 9.

Miss A. V. Wilson, a sister of Bishop Wilson, has been made principal of the Southern Methodist Institute, in Chihuahua, Mexico.

The people won't be satisfied now-a-days with slow coaches. There is now a daily train each way from Monroe to Shreveport. We have traveled between the two places when it took three days each way! Faster! faster! is the cry.

"Complicated inactivity" is the new name for laziness.

Bishop Keenor, looking to be in good condition for the work of his district, passed through the city last week, en route to Poplar Bluff, Mo., the seat of the St. Louis Conference, which opened its session yesterday.

Will the brethren please write the notices which they want to appear in the ADVOCATE on a separate sheet of paper; otherwise we are put to the trouble of doing it.

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. Wm. L. Linfield reports: "Our meeting at Mt. Hermon closed yesterday. It resulted in fourteen accessions and the erection of several family altars. Much good was done, and we are thankful."

—Rev. J. H. Smith writes from Newport, Miss.: "I have just closed my last protracted meeting for the season. We have had fifty conversions, and thirty-six accessions to the church. Think our assessments will all be paid by Conference. Pray for us."

—Rev. J. A. Leech reports: "The three meetings held on Byhalia circuit, North Mississippi Conference, resulted in 115 conversions, 103 accessions to our church, and 63 adult baptisms. Many lukewarm Christians revived, and we hope the church is more fully enlisted in the work of the Master."

—Rev. W. T. Barnett, Arkahutla, Miss., writes: "Revival season is over; the church is on a higher plane. Twenty-five conversions, and twenty-five additions to our church. Expended on two churches, $190, and parsonage, $75. Glory to God in the highest; peace on earth, good-will toward men."

—Rev. M. E. Tumlin reports from Nettleton: "The work of God is prospering on the Nettleton circuit. The fire of God is burning at every appointment. Sinners are being converted, and thirty-five have recently been received into our Methodism. Praise be to God! Pray for us as the work goes on."

—Rev. G. A. Mandeville writes from Gansville circuit, Louisiana Conference, that at a meeting held at Rehoboth thirteen had joined the church; one young man baptized by sprinkling, and one by immersion; "four precious souls entered by faith into the land of Canaan," and a committee appointed to raise funds to build a house of worship.

—Rev. W. D. Dominick writes: "Meeting at Oak Ridge and Belle Hill closed with fine results. About fifty conversions and fifty-one accessions. Raised $500 at Belle Hill to build a church; will increase it to $1,000. Oak Ridge is going to build a large, commodious house of worship. Many family altars were erected, and there will be a large increase of subscribers to the ADVOCATE. Bro. Lovett was with us and preached with power."

—Rev. J. R. Gerald writes from Carthago circuit: "We have just closed a meeting at Liberty Church, and received twenty-three members. God poured out his Spirit upon saint and sinner. Thank God we have some among these that are called to preach, and old Carthage circuit will no longer be blank for local preachers. Myself and wife cast our lot with this people, making in all twenty-five in the last eight days. We began our meeting August 30; closed September 7. We had no ministerial help at all."

—Rev. W. B. Lewis, presiding elder of the Brookhaven district, gives a good account of his district in the following brief note: "The four camp meetings on my district were attended with the power and demonstration of the Spirit, and resulted in much good to the churches and in many conversions. Other protracted meetings have been held with good results. There have been many additions to the church; several young men have been licensed to preach; and finances are coming up well in most places."

—Rev. J. T. Moody writes from Durant, Miss.: "Rev. T. Y. Ramsey, superannuated member of the North Mississippi Conference, has been quite sick for three weeks. Bro. Ramsey resides in Durant, Miss., and is much loved by all the people of the town. His noble sons and daughters and good wife are untiring in their attention to him, and every want is immediately supplied. His faith is strong, prospects bright, and his soul is happy. Let his many friends remember him in prayer."

—Rev. H. Bradford writes from Meadville circuit: "I send the good news from our circuit. The bad I keep at home. Congregations good. Reverence and attention increasing. Our Sunday-schools are in good shape, and improving all the while. We have built one new church at Oak Grove, and preparing to build another at New Providence, near where we have just organized a Sunday-school of thirty members. Congregational singing has improved wonderfully. The Ladies' Aid Society at Nebo has collected and expended about seventy-five dollars in repairs on our church at that point. We are praying for a revival that will make us all pure, liberal and steadfast. We do not want any more booms, but a gradual growth."

—Rev. J. W. Tucker writes of Amite circuit, Mississippi Conference: "We have held all our protracted meetings for this circuit, except at Liberty and Cedar Grove. At Mt. Vernon, 'in the hill country,' we have received up to date five persons. At Homo Chitto Chapel the church is being revived, spiritually; also three candidates for admission. At Salem we had a very good meeting, considering the rain and sickness at the time. In due time our protracted services were held at Woodland, where we had a feast of spiritual refreshing from day to day, resulting in nine accessions to our church. During these meetings we witnessed quite a number of bright conversions, who, as far as I know, are doing well. Thanks to Bros. W. W. Simmons, H. R. Ellis, G. Huff, and the local brethren and faithful laymen, for services rendered. Pray that we may continue to do all things well."

Millsaps College Day.

ADDITIONAL NOTICE.

I have received a number of letters making inquiry as to the collection for the endowment fund on Millsaps College Day. It is expected that each pastor and Sunday-school superintendent will take up a cash collection on that day. Try and get some amount, however small, from each member of the church and each pupil in the Sunday-school. A dollar from each member in the State would yield us a handsome sum. Pastors can also take advantage of the occasion to secure notes from those who have not heretofore subscribed. CHAS. B. GALLOWAY.

Meridian District.

Dear Brethren: It is expected that in every pastoral charge in this district Millsaps College Day will be observed, and a cash collection taken up by the preacher in charge at the church or churches where he may preach that day—Sunday, October 12. Do not fail in this duty. Let every preacher do his best by precept and example, if he has not already set an example of liberality in behalf of this college. If this day be properly observed, the Board of Trustees will be able to locate the college this fall. All together, brethren!

T. L. MELLEN, P. E.

Notice.

To the Preachers of the Jackson District:

It is important that a zealous effort be made to improve Millsaps College Day (October 12), and use it to the best advantage. Methodism in Mississippi has nothing before it to-day of equal importance to this college enterprise; and the Jackson district, foremost in everything else, has not kept pace with some of the other districts in this work. Let there be a grand rally all over the district.

Deliverance.

"When the tale of bricks is doubled, Moses comes."

To many a hopeless sufferer, looking for no earthly relief, the deliverer comes in the form of the Compound Oxygen Treatment. But judge for yourself. DRS. STARKEY & PALEN:—"Your Compound Oxygen Treatment saved my life. My husband is a physician, and it was through his advice I was induced to use it." MRS. DR. F. W. STONE, Kansas City, Mo., Feb. 6, 1889. DRS. STARKEY & PALEN:—"It is some eighteen months since I used your Compound Oxygen Treatment for bronchial trouble. Doctor said my case was hopeless, but now I am able to say I am free from it. Your Compound Oxygen Treatment certainly did relieve me wonderfully." MARTHA D. TWEED, Buffalo, Washington Co., Pa.

You will find all the evidence you desire in our book on Compound Oxygen. It gives a full history of its discovery, nature, and results. We court investigation. This work is sent free. The Clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders.

The Episcopal Diocese, of New York, has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and the Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

MALARIA

OVERCOME BY

DR. KING'S

Royal Germetuer.

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 2, 1890.

I have been for several years constantly subject to malarial fevers. The best medical treatment has failed to remove from my system the malarial poison that produced them. I have had to use an average of forty grains of quinine per week for years. The fevers would invariably return in a few days, if it was discontinued. The quinine was doing great harm to my nervous system, but I had to keep it up as my only hope. Recently I commenced using Dr. King's Royal Germetuer. It has done me more good than all the medicine I have ever taken. I have not had a fever since commencing its use, nor found it necessary to take a dose of quinine. It has toned my nerves, built up my strength and given me a buoyancy and healthfulness of feeling that I have not known for years. My experience justifies me in saying that this wonderful remedy is all that is claimed for it, if not more.

Our Young People.

Tom's Prescription.

Margie lay out in the hammock, with dancing shadows changing the tints of her hair; and, when Tom came whistling by, he wouldn't have known her, lying so still, with her face buried in the meshes of hemp, if it had not been for that very shadow-flecked hair. Tom felt sure that nobody had just such gold-brown hair as Sister Margie.

"Hallo! 'Sleep?" he asked.

No answer.

"'Sleep, sis?" he called again; and then, as the little pink figure remained motionless, he grinned a genuine, broad, boyish grin, and picked from the tall grass near him one particularly long bit, which seemed to have gone to seed bountifully, just for his benefit. Stepping nearer he bent the green spray, and let it fall dabbingly about her pretty ear. He expected a sleepy movement from her in return, and was startled past bounds when she gave one vicious spring, and sat bolt upright, facing him with red, tearful eyes.

"By gum!"

That was Tom's strongest expletive, and the occasion seemed to warrant it. Who ever saw sunny Margie with tears on her cheek and gloom on her brow unless something terrible had happened to bring it about?

"Why, Margie, what is the matter?"

"I wish I was dead, that's what."

"Well, Margie Matthews! If I ever heard anything as wicked as that! You, to say such a thing—you, who have everything in the world to make you happy! Doesn't papa give you everything you want almost before you want it? Doesn't mama think you the dearest girl in the world; and don't we four boys spoil you to death, you ungrateful child? Haven't you a lovely home, no end of friends, a piano and a horse and—and—everything?"

"Ye-es," from Margie, tearfully.

"Then what else do you want?"

"Nothing. I've got too much now. Oh dear, oh dear! I'm so unhappy!" And down went the pink gown and the gold-brown hair into the hammock again.

"Well, if I ever!" gasped Tom. "You'd better study yourself, and see what's at the bottom of all this. There must be something."

"No, there isn't anything," came brokenly from the hammock; "and I have studied myself too much already. I'm sick of it. The more I try to be happy, the more I can't. I'm tired of everything! What do you do, Tom, when you get tired of everything?"

Tom would have laughed if Margie had not been so tragic. "Well," he said presently, "I don't think I ever got tired of everything; I don't have time. If I haven't the cow to milk, there's water to carry up, or cook's in a hurry to have the peas shelled, or the weeds need thinning in the garden, or something, always."

"Always work?" asked Margie, a shade less doleful.

"Well, no, not always; but, you may depend on it, I don't get tired of the time that isn't work-time, for there are dozens of things to do, even if you don't count the fish just aching to be caught down in Mill Creek."

"Tawm," called a voice from the back porch; and now Tom did laugh.

"There's an illustration, Margie. Now I wanted to go for those fish right away—haven't had a fish for a week; but there's Chloe yelling, and I know it's peas or beans or something. She's always in a hurry on Thursdays."

Tom dashed over the low fence, and Margie heard him clattering up the steps of the back porch. "Well, I never thought of that," she said, rising slowly, and brushing the little damp curls from her face. "No time to be blue! Why, what an idea! I believe I'll—yes, I will;" and, in a flash, Margie had darted through the little gate and up the steps after Tom. There he sat, a mock-heroic expression on his freckled face, stringing beans for dear life.

"Please, Tom, let me! I want to."

"Too hot for you, child."

"Why, no, it isn't, Tom; it's cool as can be here on the back porch in the shade. Do let me, and you go and see if you can't catch enough fish for breakfast. You know how fond I am of fish."

The mention of fish was too much for Tom; and he jumped up with sudden alacrity, pulled a chair into the shade for Margie, handed pan and basket to her, and was off.

Such an army of ideas as marched under that gold-brown hair in the time it took to string the beans! It was a very determined little lady who faced Mama Matthews in the library, half an hour later.

"Mama, isn't it the ninth flower-mission day?"

"Yes, Margie."

"And doesn't it mean all sorts of things as well as flowers, for the hospitals, jails, and asylums?"

"Yes; we are to send reading matter and delicacies for the sick, besides the flowers, on this flower-mission day."

"Well, please let me help this time. I never have, you know, mama. Let me make some blanc-mange and lemon gelatine, and arrange some of our own fruit and flowers."

"But it is such hot work for you in this—"

"Oh, mama, don't! You work in hot weather. Why shouldn't I? I do want to."

Mrs. Matthews smiled at her small daughter's vehemence, and Margie knew that a smile from mama always meant a favorable settlement of affairs.

All day Friday, she was busy concoeting the daintiest, clearest gelatine jellies, which in tiny glasses were set away in the refrigerator to cool; and, on the Saturday morning, she was up at daybreak, tying with white ribbon the very sweetest bunches of daisies, pansies, roses and honeysuckles, all fringed with grasses and ferns, wet, cool and beautiful.

Tom and John and Archie and Ned all helped gather strawberries, and then climbed to the very tops of the cherry-trees for the ripest and reddest of the glowing fruit.

"Who ever would have thought," Ned said, admiringly, "of fixing them up like that? They look doubly good to eat down in the little leaf baskets, and some sick fellow will find his lost appetite coming back to him when he sees your pretty gift."

That night at sunset, a very tired girl, in a loose pink gingham, sat in the hammock, when brother Tom, spying her from afar, came up to ask, "Aren't you nearly dead, sis, after all this work and rushing about through the hot sun?"

Margie smiled lazily. "Not a bit of it," she said. "I feel very lively indeed, if I am tired; and yet, when I think of it, I suppose I am nearer dead than I was Thursday morning, when I wanted to die. Tom, honestly, had you ever seen such an idiot?" And then, though she laughed, her eyes looked suspiciously bright, as she continued: "Bless your old heart, Tom! You put me on the right track. I'll never be such a selfish goose again. I want to live in this world just as long as the good Lord will let me. It's a beautiful world, Tom; and how much there is to do in it!" Just then, the tea-bell tinkled merrily; and Margie wasn't a bit too tired to race to the house, and get there ahead of the long-legged brother, who said, when he caught his breath: "Well, for a tired mission-girl, you run pretty well. Hurrah for you, Margie! I don't believe you'll ever be 'tired of everything' again."

And I think she never was.—Maude Rittenhouse, in the Housewife.

Fault-Finding.

Don't get in the habit of it. It's the easiest thing to do, but the hardest thing to stop, in the wide, wide world. It ruins your temper, and spoils the shape of your mouth. Try and see the good rather than the disagreeable in the people and your surroundings. You would not go into a friend's house and find fault with what she does, with what she has, and her ways of living. What right have you, then, to find fault with those who are more than friends to you—the people of your own blood? If there is a grace that we are all stingy with, it is that of giving praise, and yet it is one with which we ought to be lavish. Why should you tell your friend her bonnet is becoming, when you have never said this to your sister? Why should you go out to tea and praise your neighbor's muffins, when you have forgotten to tell mother how good hers were? Why should you announce how much Mr. Wilson over the way knows, when father is a great deal better informed man, and it has never entered your little head to whisper quietly to him how much you appreciate his wisdom? You keep your ability to discover faults for the home, while the eye that should look for virtues is closed tightly till you go out. Don't wait until some one has gone from you to tell of their virtues. Don't wait until your sister is far away in another land to tell how helpful, how pretty, or how courteous she is; and don't wait until the weary hands are crossed, and the long sleep has come, before you let your mother know what a beautiful blue is in her eyes, how tender is her heart, and how dearly you love her. Tell it all now; now, when the walk through life is hard, and the sunshine of praise is yearned for to brighten it, and to warm and encourage the pilgrim by the wayside.—Ladies' Home Journal.

CHARACTER IN THE FAMILY CIRCLE.—Home life is the sure test of character. Let the husband be cross and surly and the wife grows cold and unamiable. The children grow up saucy and savage as young bears. The father becomes callous, peevish and hard. The wife bristles in self-defense. They develop an unnatural growth and sharpness of teeth, and the house is haunted by ugliness and domestic brawls. This is not what the family circle should be. If rude to any, let it be to some one he does not love—not to wife, brother or parent. Let one of the loved ones be taken away, and memory recalls a thousand sayings to regret. Death quickens recollection painfully. The grave can not hide the white faces of those who sleep. The coffin and green ground are cruel magnets. They draw us farther than we would go. They force us to remember. A man never sees so far into human life as when he looks over a wife's or mother's grave. His eyes get wondrous clear then, and he sees as never before what is to love and be loved: what it is to injure the feelings of the loved. It is a pitiable picture of human weakness when those we love best are treated worst.—Selected.

HOW TO MAKE LIFE HAPPY.—Take time; it is no use to fume or fret or do as the angry housekeeper who has got hold of the wrong key, and pushes, shakes, and rattles it about the lock until both are broken and the door is still unopened.

The chief secret of comfort lies in not suffering trifles to vex us, and in cultivating our undergrowth of small plensures.

Try to regard present vexations as you will regard them a month hence.

Since we can not get what we like, let us like what we can get.

It is not riches, it is not poverty, it is human nature that is the trouble.

The world is like a looking-glass. Laugh at it and it laughs back; frown at it and it frowns back.

Angry thoughts canker the mind and dispose it to the worst temper in the world—that of fixed malice and revenge. It is while in this temper that most men become criminals.—Selected.

Warm weather often causes extreme tired feeling and debility, and in the weakened condition of the system, diseases arising from impure blood are liable to appear. To gain strength, to overcome disease, and to purify, vitalize, and enrich the blood, take Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Inventing the Phonograph.

The common phrase, "It is in the air," simply means that many men are thinking about the same subject, and that some of them foresee vaguely, as though opaque glass, something that an inventor may yet make a fact. Steam navigation was "in the air" thirty years before Fulton launched his steamboat upon the Hudson. Twenty-six years before that launch, the grandfather of Darwin published his "Botanic Garden," which contained this prophecy:

Soon shall thy arm, unconquered steam! afar
Drag the slow barge, or drive the rapid car.

Mr. Lathrop, in his "Talks with Edison," published in Harper's, for February, quotes several references, made long before the invention of the phonograph, to the possibility of an instrument recording sounds.

When the daguerreotype appeared, Ralph Waldo Emerson wrote to a friend, "We make the sun paint our portraits now; by and by we shall organize the echoes as we now organize the shadows."

The daguerreotype also suggested to Lieutenant Maury this wish, expressed in a letter in 1844: "What a pity it is that M. Daguerre, instead of photography, had not invented a process of writing by merely speaking through a trumpet at a piece of paper! Instead of saying, 'I wrote you a letter last Monday,' the phrase would have been, 'I spoke to you a ream.'"

Jean Ingelow, the poet, published fifteen years ago a fairy tale, in which she described an imaginary contrivance which she called the "acoustigraph," designed to record and reproduce music.

Tom Hood, in his Comic Annual of 1839, propounded the following query: "In this century of inventions when a self-action drawing paper has been discovered for copying invisible objects, who knows but that some future Niepece, or Daguerre, or Herschel, or Fox Talbot, may find out some sort of Boswelish writing paper to repeat whatever it hears?"

Not one of these fanciful preshadowings of the phonograph had ever been seen by Edison. The idea of the phonograph germinated in his mind, and, after years of culture, developed into the greatest of his inventions. It grew out of a rough automatic recorder, invented by Edison to serve a temporary purpose.

While working as a telegraph operator—reading by sound—in Indianapolis, he found that he was unable to keep up with the operator in Cincinnati, one of the quickest dispatchers in the business. The necessity of taking what that operator sent made Edison an inventor.

He arranged the old Morse registers in such a way that by running a strip of paper though them the dots and dashes were recorded on the first instrument as fast as the Cincinnati operator dispatched them, and were transmitted to him through the other instrument at any desired rate of speed. The words would come on one instrument at the rate of forty a minute, while Edison would grind them out of the other at the rate of twenty-five—a number he could readily write out on "the manifold."

By this rude automatic recorder Edison was led to invent the phonograph. He had worked out an instrument which would repeat a message any number of times and at any rate of speed. While experimenting with the telephone, this idea occured to him:

"If the indentations on paper could be made to give forth again the click of the instrument, why could not the vibrations of a diaphragm be recorded and similarly reproduced?"

He rigged up an instrument, and pulled a strip of paper through it, at the same time shouting, "Halloo!" A friend then pulled the paper through again, while Edison listened, and heard a distinct sound which a strong imagination might have translated into the original "Halloo!"

His friend wagered a barrel of apples that he could not make the thing go. Edison made a drawing of a model, took it to an instrument maker, and told him it was a talking-machine. The man grinned, thinking it a joke, but soon had the model ready. Edison arranged some tin-foil on it, and spoke into the machine—the maker looking on incredulously. But when Edison arranged the machine for transmission, and both men heard a distinct sound, the doubting instrument maker nearly fell down from the shock, so frightened was he. Edison himself was a little scared; but he was glad to get the barrel of apples from his skeptical friend. This was Edison's first practical experiment on the phonograph.—Youth's Companion.

Obituaries.

BROWN—DAVID J. BROWN, who was the third son of Mr. Samuel and Mrs. Elizabeth Brown, was born in Blenville parish, La., in October, 1851, and died within one-half mile of his birth-place, August 15, 1890, being nearly thirty-nine years of age. He lost his father when about nine years of age. He kept house and conducted the interests pertaining to his mother and family for a number of years; but some years past his Christian mother also died, and left him as the only one to care for his three sisters.

David J. Brown was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for twelve or fifteen years before his death; during which time he was a faithful and consistent Christian. He was confined to his bed in his last illness about twelve days; but bore all his afflictions with great patience. He spent much of his last moments pleading with his sorrowing sisters, and begging them to weep not for him. But a short time before his sainted spirit bid its long adieu to his tenement of clay, he seemed all at once to be looking anxiously in a certain direction; and when asked by his sister what he was looking at with such intense interest, he replied, "I am looking at mother and Mary." It did seem to him heaven's door was partly opened, and his eyes were allowed to see the spirit of his dear old mother in company with the sainted spirit of his sister Mary.

But soon after uttering the sentence, "I see mother and Mary," his own blood-washed spirit was allowed to take its everlasting flight. More than this the writer of this sketch could say, and yet keep in due bounds of truth. LONE BOY.

CHATHAM—On Monday, August 18, at 1 30 A. M., death visited the home of Bro. W. C. Chatham, and took from him his loving companion, N. E. CHATHAM, who was born September 3, 1848, near Lexington, Miss., and married to W. C. Chatham, February 20, 1868. To them God gave ten olive plants; four of whom had gone on before to welcome dear mama. Sister Chatham was sick five weeks, and bore her sickness and troubles with Christian fortitude. No one ever heard a murmur from her. She always had a kind word for everyone, and was a help to the poor and needy.

The departure of Sister Chatham leaves a number of devoted friends to mourn her death. The church has lost a consistent member, the neighborhood a noble neighbor, the family an affectionate wife and devoted mother. We thank our heavenly Father we mourn not as those of no hope of meeting, but of a fond hope of soon greeting her in the "sweet by-and-by." Sister Chatham's last words were "praises to God."

One who loved her dearly.

Whereas, It has pleased our all-wise Father in heaven, in the dispensations of his providence, to remove by death from our society Sisters ANN SIMPSON, SUSAN SULLIVAN and MARY DOCKERY; therefore, be it

Resolved, That while we miss them, their labors and good counsel, as well as their Christian and missionary spirit and examples, we bow with humble submission, and gratefully acknowledge the hand of God in it all, and pray that he will overrule the same for our good and the fuller development of the work they loved, and in which we are now engaged.

RICHARDSON—WILLIAM RICHARDSON, son of James Z. and Helen M. Richardson, was born March 3, 1879, and died August 19, 1890. Eleven years were these fond parents made happy with his bright smiles; then he was called above to join those brothers and sisters that had gone before. Little Willie is the sixth child of these parents that has been called from this world of care and sorrow to a world of endless joy. This little flower faded in the bud; but, by the light of the heavenly home and the care of its Creator, it will put forth again in all of its beauty, and bloom in the world to come.

Amid tears and a deep-felt sorrow, we laid the body of little Willie to rest, with a perfect confidence that we shall meet him again, if we will live the life of the faithful. G. Z. R.

SELMAN—The following resolutions were adopted, August 24, 1890, by the New Salem (Miss.) Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Sunday-school:

Whereas, Mr. T. E. SELMAN, a member of our Sunday-school, died August 10, 1890, age twenty-four years; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we bow with humble submission to the will of the God of providence in the death of our brother, knowing that our loss is his eternal gain.

Resolved, That our heartfelt sympathy be extended to the bereaved family and relatives in this their sad affliction, and ask them not to weep as those that have no hope. E. M. BEASLEY,
For Committee.

BRISTER—Mrs. M. P. Brister, wife of A. T. Brister, was born in Yazoo county, Miss., April 25, 1846; died July 2, 1890, at her home, near Dalesville, Natchitoches parish, La. Sister Brister joined the Methodist Church in 1884, and lived a faithful member till death. She loved the church, and her house was the preacher's home. She leaves a husband and three children and many friends to mourn her loss. But may we not mourn as those who have no hope, but live so as to meet in the sweet by-and-by!

J. C. CARNLINE, P. C.

SPANN—Died, on Monday, October 7, 1889, the sweet little baby-boy of George and Maggie Spann, aged nine months and three days. Little GEORGE was a lovely baby, and fondly did the parents cherish the beautiful little life. He gave promise of much to cheer and brighten their hearts and home. After many weeks of afflictions the tired little one upon mama's lap, christened with mama's tears, fell asleep in the arms of Jesus. GURTY.

Sunday-School Lesson.

(Hurlburt and Simpson's Lesson Commentary, Phillips & Hunt, New York.)

LESSON XIII.—September 28.

TEMPERANCE LESSON.

Dan. v, 1-8.

TIME.—B. C. 538.

PLACE.—The royal palace in Babylon.

1. Belshazzar—The number of the king's guests—a thousand lords (grand officers, mighty ones) is not remarkable, when it is remembered that, according to Ctesias, the Persian king provided daily for fifteen thousand persons at his table; that, according to Curtius, Alexander the Great invited ten thousand to a wedding feast, and that Ptolemy Dionysius supported a thousand soldiers of the army of Pompey the Great from his kitchen. The sense of security which this feast implied must be accounted for by their confidence in the assumed strength of the city. Plainly it was supposed to be impregnable. According to the genuinely Oriental custom, the wine-drinking or carousal follows upon the feast proper. At such times, especially at a court like the Babylonian immediately prior to the Persian period, the banqueters may have given way to all excesses of dissolute frivolity.

2. While he tasted the wine—While under its influence. Under the effects of wine men will do what they dare not do when they are sober. To bring the golden and silver vessels out of the "treasure-house of the gods," in which they had been deposited by Nebuchadnezzar, according to chap. i. 2. His father Nebuchadnezzar—That is, his forefather. So "Jesus...the son of David, the son of Abraham." Daniel does not intimate that other kings mentioned by other writers did not reign between Belshazzar and Nebuchadnezzar. The joint, yet independent, testimony of two contemporary Hebrew prophets, who had the best means of information, is more trustworthy than that of the heathen historians, even if there were a discrepancy. But what seemed at first to be discrepancy, recent investigation has turned into a confirmation of genuineness, for the real harmony must have been undesigned. Wives...concubines—Not usually present at feasts in the East, where females of the harem are kept in strict seclusion. But the Babylonian court, in its reckless excesses, seems not to have been so strict as the Persian. Xenophon confirms Daniel, representing a feast of Belshazzar where the concubines are present.

3. The aggravated feature of this profanation of the sacred vessels of the temple is that it is essentially an exaltation of the idols above Jehovah, who had succumbed to them in battle, and whom they had despoiled.

5. Fingers—The appearance of the fingers immediately awakened the thought that the writing was by a supernatural belng, and alarmed the king out of his intoxication. The candlestick—The candelabra, where the mystic characters would be best seen. Barnes makes it the candlestick taken from the temple of Jerusalem, the nearness of the writing to it intimating that the rebuke was directed against the sacrilege. The plaster—The wall of the banquet-hall was not paneled nor draped, but rather a simple light-colored "wall of lime or plaster," such as the ruins of the palaces at Nineveh still exhibit in great number. The wall—Written in cuneiform letters on slabs on the walls, and on the very bricks, are found the perpetually recurring recitals of titles, victories, and exploits, to remind the spectator at every point of the regal greatness. It is significant that on the same wall on which the king was accustomed to read the flattering legends of his own magnificence he beholds the mysterious inscription which tells his fall.

6. Joints of his loins—The vertebræ of his back. This, like the change of color in the countenance, is the natural effect of terror. His thoughts troubled him—Many a sinner has had a like experience, and other thousands must have it. He calls for the magicians, who more than once had been detected in imposture. He neglects God and Daniel, whose fame as an interpreter was then well established. The world wishes to be deceived, and shuts its eyes against the light. It is an appalling scene when a sinning mortal knows that the great God has come to meet him in the very midst of his sins! How changed the scene from the glee of his blasphemous revelry to this paleness of cheek, convulsion of frame, remorse of conscience, and dread foreboding of doom!

Observe in this story a picture of strong drink. (1.) Drunkards despise God and show contempt for God's law. (2.) Drunkards are careless of their own safety, drinking even while their lives are in danger. (3.) Drunkenness awakens God's warning, which comes to drunkards now as it came to Belshazzar. (4.) Drunkenness brings entire and absolute ruin, as it brought to the Chaldean king.

GRANT'S FURNITURE STORE

NEW STORE, AT 114 Camp St. NEW ORLEANS. NEXT DOOR TO ADVOCATE OFFICE.

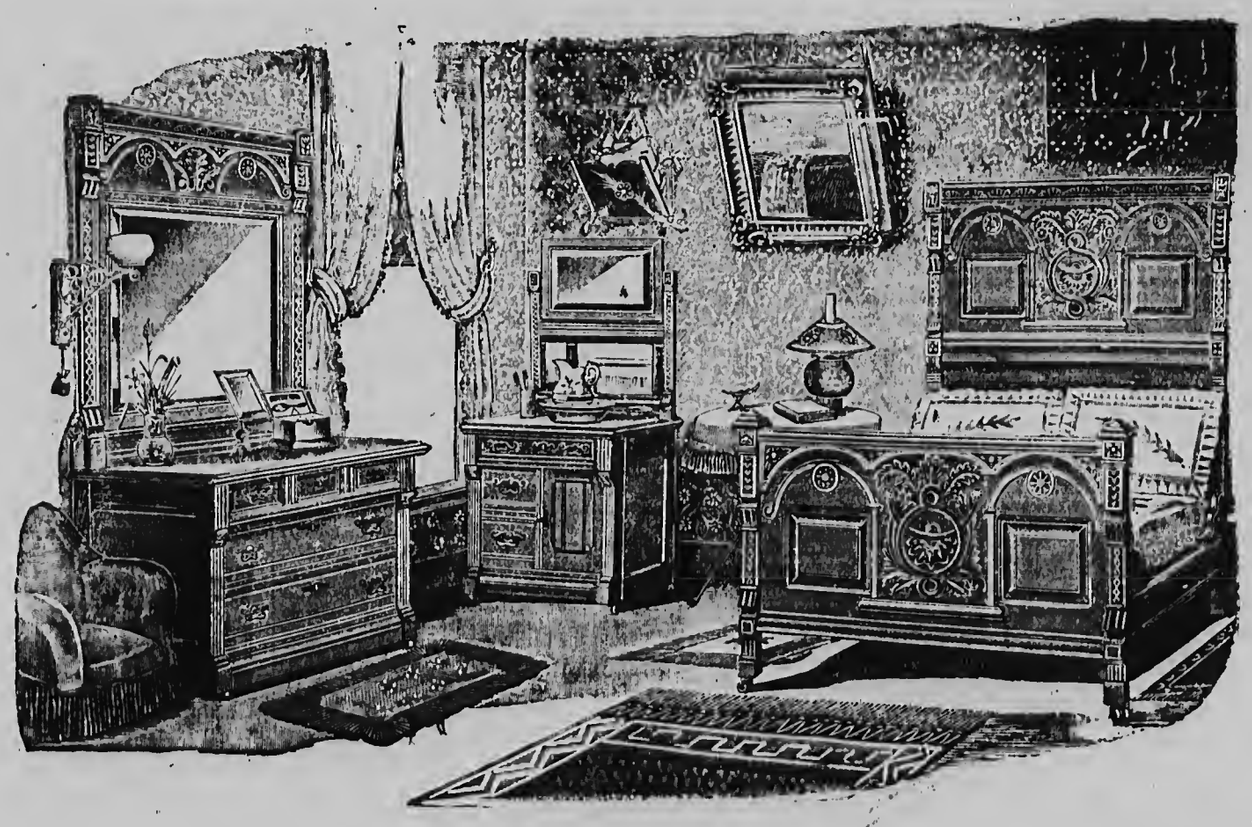
BEAUTIFUL PARLOR GOODS.

I have one entire floor devoted to the display of these goods alone, and have over sixty different varieties to select from. Complete Suits anywhere from $35 to $650, and odd pieces—such as Sofas, Divans, Easy Chairs, Patent Rockers, Window and Reception Chairs—at as low prices in proportion as the Complete Suits. I have these goods in Cherry, Mahogany and Walnut, and can give you your choice of any of the following coverings: Crushed, Embossed, Plain and Silk Plushes, Hair Cloth, Mohair, Raw and Spun Silks, Satins, English Tapestries, French Velours, Petit Point, Brocatelle or Damasks. I make a specialty of these goods, have many of the patterns made specially for my own trade, and can offer a greater variety at lower prices than any other house in the South.

NEW STOCK

In all departments, and every grade of goods, from the cheapest to the most expensive, in endless variety. I have all the latest and most fashionable designs, and, as I have only purchased from factories whose goods I have been selling for the past six years, can and do guarantee every piece of Furniture that leaves my establishment.



LOW PRICES

are the order of the day, and I propose to sell strictly reliable goods at a lower price than has ever before been quoted in the South. My store has long been known as "The Cheapest Furniture House in New Orleans," and this season I intend to add to the reputation it has gained in this respect. I only ask a chance to save you money.

HANDSOME BEDROOM SUITS.

A very extensive assortment of these goods in every style; and whether you wish to pay $40 for a Complete Suit of twelve pieces, or from that price anywhere up to $1,000, I can sell you what you require. I have these goods in Black Walnut, Natural and Dark Cherry, and Natural and Dark Mahogany, or in imitation of any of these woods, and can furnish the very latest, neatest and most artistic designs.

I have also a large and carefully selected stock of Hall, Library, Dining-room and Kitchen Furniture; Reed, Rattan and Wicker Chairs, Rockers, Lounges and Cribs; Brackets, What-nots, Easels, Music Stands and Fancy Top Tables; Carpets, Carpet Strips, Matting, Shades, Curtains, Curtain Poles, and everything necessary to furnish a house completely throughout.

LARGE SALES.

I have a large city trade, and am shipping goods extensively to every Southern State. My country trade has increased very rapidly during the past year, and the facilities which my new store affords me for carrying a larger and better stock will enable me to still further extend it, and to give complete satisfaction to my customers.

W. S. LAORONE, P. E.

NOW the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect in every good work, to do his will, working in you that which is well-pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ; to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen.—Hebrews xiii, 20, 21.

Presto! Change! Gray and faded beards made to assume their original color by applying Buckingham's Dye for the Whiskers. It never fails to satisfy.

BUT if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.—I. John i, 7.

We the undersigned, do testify that we have used Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar for years, for all throat and lung troubles, with the greatest benefit. For coughs and colds it never fails. When taken according to directions, it cures our children of croup and whooping-cough, and for serious lung troubles it always gives relief.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

A convention of delegates from Southern States, to consider the question of direct trade from Southern ports to Europe, met in Atlanta, Ga., on September 10. Steps were taken to organize companies to promote direct trade.

The steamer Teutonic, in an ocean race with the City of New York, made the run from Queenstown to Sandy Hook Light in 5 days, 19 hours and 5 minutes.

The amended Tariff bill was passed in the United States Senate, on September 10, by a party vote, the Republicans voting solidly for its passage. It now goes back to the House with the Senate amendments.

The anti-Lottery bill, which passed the House some time ago, was passed in the Senate, September 16. It goes at once to the President for his approval.

President Harrison is taking a deep interest in the financial situation. He devotes a great deal of his time to telegraphic correspondence with Secretary Windom as to the best means of relieving the present stringency in the money market.

The Ladies' Unsectarian Society, of this city, will soon establish a hospital for women and children. Liberal public support is expected.

President Harrison is enjoying a vacation at Cresson Spring, Pa. It is expected that he will return to Washington about the end of this week.

The Yellow Pine Convention, which met in St. Louis, completed its work on September 13, and adjourned to meet in New Orleans, December 9. The committee on prices reported in favor of an advance from 75 cents to $2 per 1,000 feet. The committee on weights reported three different standards for three different classes of lumber. Schedule A, the lightest weight, was to apply to Missouri, Arkansas and the short-leaved pine districts of Texas; Schedule B, the next heaviest weight, was to apply to Louisiana and the long-leaved districts of Texas; schedule C, the heaviest weight, was to apply to the States east of the Mississippi river.

The Maryland Law School has determined that it will admit no more colored students. The white students of the law, medical and dental departments of the university sent a petition to the faculty, protesting against the admission of any colored students to the law school.

The Ways and Means Committee (of the House), on September 13, began the formal consideration of the Senate amendments to the Tariff bill. The Louisiana delegation were admitted to the room when the sugar schedule was under consideration, and united in a strong objection to the date (March 1, next) when it is proposed that the changes made in that schedule shall take effect. They represented that the effect of adherence to that date would be ruinous to the planters, who would then have just garnered their crops and who would be compelled to sell them in a market brought down in price by free sugar. They proposed an extension of the time to July 1, next, or failing in that, asked that the new rates take effect immediately upon the approval of the bill.

The annual convention of the American Association of General Passenger and Ticket Agents is to be held in Denver, September 16.

FOREIGN.

Several members of Parliament, all anti-home rulers, have appealed in the colums of the London Times for donations in behalf of many boycotted farmers and shop keepers whose business has been ruined.

The floods are increasing in Austria. Many houses are inundated. The facade of the exhibition building has collapsed, having been undermined by the rising waters.

The United States man-of-war Baltimore, with the body of Ericsson, the inventor, on board, reached Stockholm, Sweden, on September 12.

It is said, in regard to the persecution of Lutherans in the Baltic provinces of Russia, that three pastors have been banished and sixty-six are on trial, mostly on trivial charges. The Russian government is doing all it can to stamp out the Lutheran religion, as the members of that church are suspected of leaning toward Germany.

The Bulgarian government has refused to pay the total amount of the claim presented by Russia for payment for arms and ammunition to Bulgaria during the war with Turkey, on the ground that the amount due is 100,000 roubles less than the sum demanded.

The Pope is not pleased with Cardinal Manning's latest utterances on the labor question. His Holiness is said to have expressed the opinion that the cardinal was being led by personal sympathy to endorse the labor programmes, which are not entirely in harmony with the settled attitude of the church on such questions.

The Queen of Roumania, who has been sojourning in Wales for health, has accepted an invitation to visit Queen Victoria at Balmoral. Her royal spouse will shortly join her there.

An immense meeting of dock laborers was held in London, on September 12, at which donations were made by all the dock unions for the strikers in Australia.

The United States minister to Russia, in response to a letter of inquiry addressed him by a prominent rabbi, denies the reported outrages against Hebrews by the Russian authorities.

The extension of the Triple Alliance treaty to May, 1897, has been accepted by Emperor William at the request of the Austrian government. The draft of the revised treaty prepared by Count Kalnoky increased the guarantees of both Germany and Italy to support Austria in the event of a Russian invasion of the Balkans.

The German authorities at Bagamoyo, Zanzibar, have published a notice permitting everybody to engage freely in the slave traffic, and only prohibiting the exportation of slaves by sea. The Arab slave dealers are also authorized to recover runaways.

Generation after generation have used and blessed Johnson's Anodyne Liniment. Try it.

The Fair and the Sabbath.

The American Sabbath Union has prepared an earnest appeal to the commissioners of the World's Columbian Exposition to be held in Chicago, asking them to decide that the Exposition shall be closed on Sundays. It is understood that the commissioners will meet in Chicago on October 7. The officers of the Union, in making this appeal, are seeking the co-operation of all the friends of the Sabbath throughout the land. Individuals, local churches, institutions of learning, and all organized societies of whatever kind, are invited to send their communications to the secretaries of the American Sabbath Union, No. 23 Park Row, New York, who will see that they are forwarded to the commissioners before the above date. A matter affecting so vitally the welfare of the nation ought to claim the immediate attention of all patriotic citizens. Very truly,

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury,

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is tenfold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, and acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co.

Sold by Druggists. Price, 75 cents per bottle.

Letter No. 17.

ARRIVAL AT VENICE—THE GONDOLA—THE CANALS—THE STREETS OF VENICE—SAN MARCO SQUARE—A NIGHT SCENE—THE CAMPANILE—ST. MARK'S CATHEDRAL—THE HEALING STATUE.

I always desired to approach Venice in the evening. I had read in some book, whose name I have now forgotten, of the rowing by gondola to Venice, and, as they neared the bespired and bedomhed city, near the hour of sunset, there came over the waves to them the sound of distant church bells. Then Byron's words were clinging to me:

"Tis sweet to hear
At midnight, on the blue and moonlit deep,
The song and oar of Adrian gondolier,
By distance mellowed, o'er the water's sweep."

But, instead of the evening, I arrived at five in the morning; and instead of the approach to the city by boat, the cars now carry us over the lagoon that separates Venice from the main-land by means of a railroad bridge four or five miles in length.

But this is the only change. The long, black railroad line that goes from Venice to the shore has not sufficient arterial capacity to bring back continental life in sufficient force and quantity to change the city of the Doges. The cars bring you only to the border of the city where Venice sits, bird-like, upon her one hundred and seventeen islands. The song which I heard as a boy—

"Beautiful Venice, beautiful Venice,
The Bride of the Sea"—

can be sung as truly now as then. In a few minutes I was in a gondola, gliding up the canals to the hotel. The bells were ringing in different directions, and their sound, floating up these channels of water, was sweet and musical to hear.

But the gondola! It is a long, narrow boat, twenty-five feet in length and three or four in width. The high-peaked prow bears a broad battle-axe, which looks formidable, but is harmless. In the center rises a canopy of white or colored cloth, or a miniature cabin of block-wood latticed on either side to exclude the gaze and to receive the air. The stern, which ends sharply like the prow, is decked over from gunwale to gunwale for the distance of four feet. On this little platform the gondolier stands and propels the boat, not by sculling or by rowing, but by a method seen nowhere else than in Venice. An oarlock, one foot and a half high, rises from the right gunwale of this boat, and five feet from the stern. The gondolier, with his face to the bow of his boat, rests his oar in the lock, and pushes the handle from him, while, with a dexterous side movement of the paddle, he keeps the boat in line. There is no serpentine track made, but a swift and straight movement. The motion is delightful, and the sensation of gliding swiftly and noiselessly past door-ways, up canals, down between endless lines of overhanging houses, under arches and bridges, is one delightful and difficult to describe. The noiselessness is a striking feature in the gondola trip. The boat makes no noise, and the people in it keep silence. A luxury of silence falls on the person indulging in the ride. Yonder is a young lady gliding by, reading under her white canopy; yonder goes a gentleman smoking; others are silently looking out as they glide by. The only sound is the occasional dip of the oar, or the voice of a gondolier calling out in warning to another. Behold me, on this and two other occasions, shaded by a canopy, and resting on soft cushions, gliding up and down the canals of this wonderful city!

One of the great charms of Venice is its deliverance from many city noises. No deafening rattle and roar of cab and wagon and float here. Here is a city whose streets are made of water, whose carriages are boats, and whose dust is the rippling waves. As you go about in the gondola the first and last impression upon you is that Venice looks like a submerged or overflowed city. The feeling, or rather the appearance, is that the water has rushed over the streets to a considerable depth, and everybody is now in boats from necessity's sake.

Another fact, that you have from the canals no sign scarcely of the pathways and lanes that traverse Venice in every direction. All you see are arched bridges of stone, over which you notice people occasionally tilting up from unseen depths on one side and disappearing into unseen depths on the other. Then, again, you see very few people in their windows and doors as you pass up the canals. This gives the feature or appearance of forsakenness to the city, and adds another peculiarity that helps to make it unlike all other communities in the world. Let it not be supposed that Venice is sparsely settled. On those house-covered islands swarms a population of one hundred and forty thousand people. Let it not be supposed, again, that Venice has no thoroughfares but her canals. Of these canals she has one hundred and fifty, crossed by as many bridges; and these water avenues go in every direction, with all the windings and twistings of a serpent. But, in addition, Venice has a number of lanes (I can not call them streets) that wind and wander through the city equal to the canals. They do not run by the side of the canals, but cross them by the stone-arched bridges. They are paved with stone, or asphalt, and are from six to twelve feet wide. Fancy these streets with houses on each side six stories in height. The least excitement on these Lilliputian boulevards creates a perfect jam and blockade. The rooms on the lower floor constitute the shops and stores. They average ten and twelve feet in length and depth. But they are all attractive and inviting, and it is a constant charm to wander along, looking into their well-arranged show-cases by day, and their brilliantly lighted windows at night.

Mercería street is the main business thoroughfare of Venice. It is twelve feet wide, and the course is like a zig-zag bolt of lightning in a cloud. But it is a fascinating street for all that. If the pedestrian will look up at the windows as he perambulates these little avenues, he will discover where a good many of the people are.

Venice has, perhaps, eight or ten small squares. They are quite diminutive, not all attractive, but seemed to be placed here and there through the city in order that the inhabitants may come out occasionally, and turn around, and stretch their arms, and take one good, long breath. The great square of the city, famous and popular, is the San Marco Piazza. This is located on the southeastern corner of Venice; is two hundred yards long, and about one hundred wide. The east side is formed by St. Mark's Cathedral and the Palace of the Doges, while the other three sides are shut in by great palatial blocks once occupied by the nobility, but whose arcades are now filled with stores and cafes. Fanned by the breezes of the Adriatic, whose waves roll in thirty or forty yards of the place, and visited four or five evenings in the week by the military band, which plays deep into the night, the San Marco Square is a most popular promenade and resort for the Venetians. In passing through the place on several evenings I was confident five or six thousand people were before me.

One night scene remains as a striking picture in my mind. The square was crowded with thousands. Dark-faced Italian men, and black-eyed women of Venice, with bare head, and with mantilla and fan, were standing, sitting, or walking in every direction. Hundreds of people sat at little tables, that were encroaching far upon the square, eating ices and sipping wine. A high wind was blowing in from the sea, clouds were scurrying across the face of the sky; but it seemed only to add an impetus to the scene of life and gaiety going on in the square. The military band, composed of sixty or seventy instruments, stood in a large circle in the center, playing a piece that for weirdness and melody and minor chord thrillings, I have no descriptive word. The faces of the musicians were almost entirely concealed by the heavy feather plumes that drooped forward, and moved and fluttered in the night wind. The shadowed face was in keeping somehow with the music. It was a strain made up of dirge notes taken from winter winds, and of cries of lost birds, and of the moans of long waves breaking on barren and uninhabited shores. It finally seemed to me to be a lament over Italy. Poor Italy! Poor priest-ridden, poverty-stricken Italy! Just as it seemed that all hope was gone, the music suddenly changed, and burst forth into new realms, and began to walk up an ascending stairway of joy and triumph. I saw in the piece that spring had succeeded to winter, that somebody had found the birds, and that a whole colony of people had settled on the uninhabited shore. In a word, I saw that the sun was rising, people had got back from long journeys, and everybody was shaking hands. As I walked back to my hotel I prayed in my heart that Christ might be the hope of Italy, and that he alone may be the cause of its joy and triumph, if triumph and joy it ever has.

Just in front of St. Mark's Cathedral rises the Campanile, a tower three hundred and twenty feet high. Napoleon Bonaparte rode on horseback up its peculiar plane-like steps to the top. What a man he was for going up high, and then coming down again! What was true of the King of France in the select poems of Mother Goose, is true of its Emperor as well. Not being an emperor, I walked up the thirty-six inclined planes to the summit of the tower. What a view! The Alps robed in purple in the west. In the north the railroad, like a black cord or cable, ties us to the European shore, to keep us from floating away. To the south swells the Adriatic Sea, over which the fleets of antiquity sailed, where Cæsar came near drowning, and over which Paul sailed as a prisoner. To the east the Adriatic still. And Venice at our feet. Yonder winds the Grand Canal, like an inverted letter S, through the city, dividing it into two parts. Midway its extent springs the white arch of the Rialto, a bridge made out of a single block of marble. The surface of the canal is covered with gondolas moving swiftly in every conceivable direction.

As we notice the city, at a distance of five miles from the land, rising up, Venus-like, from the sea, we begin to see how impregnable it used to be in the Middle Ages from its situation, while its fleets swept, eagle-like, around it in defense.

We paid a visit to St. Mark's Cathedral. Poets and sculptors and painters and imitative Americans rave over the beauty of the building. It is, beyond question, lovely. Ruskin, in his Stories of Venice, may be consulted by the curious. The floor of the cathedral has been thrown into undulations by an earthquake years ago. The solemn handwriting of God is allowed to remain. They claim to have under the altar the body of St. Mark. As they are certain about it, I did not investigate. In a corner of the church is a small black marble statue of the evangelist. I saw four men rub their hands over it, and then rub their bodies in various places. Each man had his peculiar afflicted spot. As they did this they dropped a copper coin in a box near the statue, in payment of the homeopathic cure. The fourth man rubbed the statue vigorously, and then as earnestly rubbed a portion of his body just beneath his chest, which convinced me that his misery was altogether abdominal. He next felt in his pocket for his centime, and, behold! the penny was not there. He looked dismayed and a little foolish, and then slowly departed. Here comes up some interesting questions. Would the tutelary saint heal on credit? Would the statue part with its healing gratuitously, considering the circumstances? Or did the statue let out its pain-easing power, ignorant of the fact of the man's impecuniousness? If we could have followed that man and found out how his pains were, doubtless these solemn and important mysteries might have been explained.

I have reached the limits assigned me, and have not written half of what I desired to say about this beautiful, fascinating and historic city. Most reluctantly I withdraw my pen from the paper and sign my name.

Thoughts for Millsaps College Day.

Some extracts from leaders of public opinion in Church and State may be helpful to pastors in preparing sermons and addresses for "Millsaps College Day," October 12, 1890.

"Education is the cheap defense of nations."—Edmund Burke.

"Moral education is the bulwark of a State."—Fenelon.

"Culture untouched by religion has no redeeming power."

"Whenever culture of intellect outstrips the culture of conscience, disaster follows."

"Popular intelligence with popular unbelief ends in popular corruption."

"There can be no freedom without morality, no morality without religion, and no religion without the Bible."—Hon. Josiah Quincy.

"Reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principles."—George Washington.

"A Bible and a newspaper in every house—a good school in every district—all studied and appreciated as they merit, are the principal supports of virtue, morality and civil liberty."—Benjamin Franklin.

"Any system of school training which sharpens and strengthens the intellectual powers without supplying moral culture and religious principle, is a curse rather than a blessing."—Victor Cousin before the French Chamber of Peers.

"The United States must be religious in order to be free. Society there must be destroyed unless the Christian moral tie be strengthened in proportion as the political tie is relaxed; and what can be done with a people who are their own masters, if they be not submissive to Deity? Despotism may govern without religious faith, but liberty never."—De Tocqueville.

"The belief in the moralizing effects of intellectual culture is absurd."—Herbert Spencer.

"I have always been strongly in favor of secular education, in the sense of education without theology; but I must confess I have been no less seriously perplexed to know by what practical measures the religious feeling, which is the essential basis of conduct, was to be kept up in the present utterly chaotic state of opinions on these matters without the use of the Bible."—Prof. Huxley.

"Literature, Science, and Revelation—this is the trinity of graces that, through the church, shall bless and exalt the human family."—Bishop Granbery.

"The church is not yet half awake to the great thought that God intends it to redeem the world from ignorance as well as from sin—that he intends, through the church to renew the world in knowledge and in holiness alike."—Dr. Alexander Martin, president of De Pauw University.

"True culture culminates in religion. True philosophy has God as its postulate; true science reaches God as its conclusion. The education, therefore, that is to prove a valuable factor in civilization can not afford to be indifferent to the claims of divine truth. . . . I believe in the education that fits men not only for life, but for eternal life."—Dr. Francis L. Patton, president of Princeton College.

These extracts might be multiplied indefinitely. It is hoped that these "thoughts" may provoke thought, and, in connection with the "facts" given recently, help to make "Millsaps College Day" a blessing to Mississippi.

Millsaps College Notes.

Rev. M. L. Burton writes that Bro. Jesse Thompson, Sr., has offered through him the following books to the Millsaps College library: "Park's American Biography," 24 volumes; "Monotto's Valley of the Mississippi," 2 volumes; "Works of Daniel Webster," 6 volumes; "Statesman's Manual," 3 volumes; and "Poetical Encyclopædia," 1 volume. Such contributions are gratefully accepted, and the agent will gladly pay express or freight charges upon the same.

Rev. P. A. Johnston, presiding elder of the Brandon district, has sent to the agent this week notes and cash amounting to $60. This is not the first, nor second, nor third time that this progressive and faithful friend to the cause has sent us such an evidence of his active interest. Why is it that some presiding elders and pastors send remittances of notes and cash frequently, and others never do?

Rev. J. T. Nicholson preached last Sunday at Paulding, and, in response to his appeal for Millsaps College, the congregation subscribed $192 towards the endowment fund.

The agent presented the cause at Benton last Tuesday, and secured a subscription amounting to $153 45.

The "College Day" idea grows in favor, and appearances indicate that the day will be very generally observed. In how many ways will good be accomplished by its faithful observance by our pastors and superintendents!

1. Our people will become committed to the enterprise.

2. Information will be imparted upon a most important and sadly neglected department of our church work.

3. Ambitions will be aroused and interest enkindled that only eternity can limit.

4. The amount raised in cash and endowment notes will banish from the minds of the least hopeful all doubt of the success of the effort.

A. F. WATKINS, Agent.

The Anti-Lottery Bill.

The following is the Anti-Lottery bill passed by Congress:

No letter, postal card, or circular concerning any lottery, so-called gift concern, or other similar enterprise offering prizes dependent upon lot or chance (or concerning schemes devised for the purpose of obtaining money or property under false pretenses), and no list of the drawings at any lottery or similar scheme, and no lottery ticket or part thereof, and no check, draft, bill, money, postal note, or money order, for the purchase of any ticket, tickets or parts thereof, and or of any share or chance in any such lottery or gift enterprise, shall be carried in the mail or delivered at or through any postoffice or branch thereof or by any letter carrier; nor shall any newspaper, circular, pamphlet, or publication of any kind containing any advertisement of any lottery or gift enterprise of any kind offering prizes dependent upon lot or chance, or containing any list of prizes awarded at the drawings of any such lottery or gift enterprise, whether said list is of any part or of all of the drawing, be carried in the mail or delivered by any postmaster or letter carrier.

Any person who shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited, or who shall knowingly send or cause to be sent anything to be conveyed or delivered by mail in violation of this section, or who shall knowingly cause to be delivered by mail anything herein forbidden to be carried by mail, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500, or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment for each offense. Any person violating any of the provisions of this section may be proceeded against by information or indictment and trial, and punished either in the district at which the unlawful publication was mailed, or to which it is carried by mail for delivery according to the direction thereon, or at which it is caused to be delivered by mail to the person to whom it is addressed.

The Postmaster-General may, upon evidence satisfactory to him that any person or company is engaged in conducting any lottery, gift enterprise or scheme for the distribution of money or of any real or personal property by lot, chance or drawing of any kind, or that any person or company is conducting any other scheme or device for obtaining money or property of any kind through the mails by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations or promises, instruct postmasters at any postoffice at which registered letters arrive directed to any such person or company, or to the agent or representative of any such person or company, whether such agent or representative is acting as an individual or as a firm, bank, corporation, or association of any kind, to return all such registered letters to the postmaster at the office at which they were originally mailed, with the word "fraudulent" plainly written or stamped upon the outside thereof, and all such letters so returned to such postmasters shall be by them returned to the writers thereof, under such regulations as the Postmaster-General may prescribe. But nothing contained in this section shall be so construed as to authorize any postmaster or other person to open any letter not addressed to himself.

The public advertisement by such person or company so conducting such lottery, gift enterprise, scheme or device, that remittances for the same may be made by registered letters to any other person, firm, bank, corporation or association named therein, shall be held to be prima facie evidence of the existence of said agency by all the parties named therein. But the Postmaster-General shall not be precluded from ascertaining the existence of such agency in any other legal way satisfactory to himself.

The Postmaster-General may, upon evidence satisfactory to him that any person or company is engaged in conducting any lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme for the distribution of money or of any real or personal property by lot, chance, or drawing of any kind, or that any person or company is conducting any other scheme for obtaining money or property of any kind through the mails by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations, or promises, forbid the payment by any postmaster to said person or company of any postal money orders drawn to his or its order, or in his or its favor, or to the agent of any such person or company, whether such agent is acting as an individual or as a firm, bank, corporation, or association of any kind, and may provide by regulation for the return to the remitters of the same named in such money orders. But this shall not authorize any person to open any letters not addressed to himself.

The public advertisement by such person or company so conducting any such lottery, gift enterprise, scheme or device, that remittances for the same may be made by means of postal money order to any other person, firm, bank, corporation or association named therein, shall be held to be prima facie evidence of the existence of said agency by all the parties named therein; but the Postmaster-General shall be precluded from ascertaining the existence of such agency in any other legal way.

What It Means.

The Anti-Lottery bill, which, on Tuesday, passed the United States Senate without a dissenting vote, after passing the House with equal unanimity, is stringent and far-reaching, and hurls a blow upon the Louisiana Lottery Company from which it can never recover.

The signature of the President is, of course, a foregone conclusion. The very instant he signs the bill it will be the law of the land, and any infraction of its provisions will subject the offender to punishment. Federal laws are in full force immediately after the President's signature, unless the law itself states a future date as the beginning of its operation. The present law takes effect at once.

It punishes by imprisonment for not more than one year for each offense, or by a fine not to exceed $500, or both, any person who deposits or causes to be deposited, or who sends or causes to be sent, any prohibited lottery matter to be conveyed or delivered by mail. It punishes the mailing of letters, postal cards and circulars concerning lotteries, and also the mailing of lists of lottery prizes and of lottery tickets. It punishes the mailing of checks, drafts, money, postal notes or money orders for the purchase of lottery tickets. It also punishes the mailing of any newspaper, pamphlet or other publication containing any lottery advertisement or list of lottery prizes.

When it is remembered that under the old law it was not an offense to order a lottery ticket by mail, the severity of the blow now inflicted to the Lottery Company will be realized.

For who will now be rash enough to place in the hands of the Lottery Company evidence fully sufficient to secure his conviction, and to send him to prison for a year, by mailing the Lottery Company a letter ordering a Lottery ticket, and sending the money for it?

One of the most effective provisions of the new law is the clause which allows prosecutions either by information or by indictment, and which renders the offender liable to prosecution either in the district in which the prohibited matter is mailed, or in the district to which it is mailed.

It is clear that under this provision the lessees, officers and employees of the Lottery Company who may violate the law, and the editors, managers and employees of newspapers who may contravene it, may be called to account in any of the districts to which they may mail their criminal matter.

The Postmaster-General is given discretionary power to cause all registered letters which are addressed to the Lottery Company, or to any person, bank, etc., which he is satisfied is the agent of the Lottery Company, to be stamped "fraudulent," and returned to the senders. The same discretionary power is given to the Postmaster-General as to postal money orders. These provisions were specially aimed at the New Orleans National Bank, and must necessarily terminate its career as the receiver of the Lottery's mail.

We think the Anti-Lottery League is to be congratulated that so many of the suggestions made by it in its appeal to the nation have been embodied in the new law.

That the law will be rigidly enforced there can be no doubt. The whole governmental machinery of the United States will be invoked to stop the use of the mails for Lottery purposes, and no single judge can stay its execution. The President and the Postmaster-General are determined to enforce the law in every State of the Union, and those who desire to escape trouble had best heed the warning.—New Delta.

"NOW I LAY ME"

The Wichita (Kan.) Eagle says the following poem was left at the office by an unknown man, who came to ask for work

Near the camp fire's flickering light,
In my blanket I lie.
Gazing through the shades of night
At the twinkling stars on high.
O'er me spirits in the air
Silent vigils seem to keep,
As I breathed my childhood's prayer,
"Now I lay me down to sleep."

Sadly sings the whip-poor-will
In the boughs of yonder tree,
Laughingly the dancing rill
Swells the midnight melody.
Foemen may be lurking near,
In the canyon, dark and deep—
Low I breathe in Jesus' ear:
"I pray the Lord my soul to keep."

'Mid those stars one face I see—
One the Savior turned away—
Mother, who in infancy
Taught my baby lips to pray.
Her sweet spirit hovers near,
In the lonely mountain brake—
Take me to her, Savior, dear,
"If I should die before I wake."

Fainter grows the flickering light;
As each ember slowly dies,
Plaintively the winds of night
Fill the air with saddening cries.
O'er me they seem to cry:
"You may never more awake."
Low I lisp: "If I should die,
I pray the Lord my soul to take."

The Town Clerk of Ephesus.

BY W. H. ANDERSON, D. D.

"Ye ought to be quiet, and to do nothing rashly."—Acts xix, 36.

This excellent advice is part of the short, effective speech of the town clerk of Ephesus, when the mob, influenced by blind passion under the pretense of religious zeal, "with one voice, about the space of two hours, cried out, Great is Diana of the Ephesians." We know nothing of the name of this town official, or of his character, except as presented in his shrewd, effective speech, full of knowledge of human nature, and the means of quieting the passions of the mob, excited by greed and desire to punish those who interfered with the traffic of their idol goddess, Diana, the patron saint of their city, the source of its great wealth and notoriety. The speech exhibits the keen shrewdness of the holder of office, and his great sagacity in quieting the excited crowd. There is official authority exercised, as it was his business to be present and make a correct record of public meetings and their acts. He admits that Paul and his companions were opposed to images made with hands; but their "image" of Diana "fell down from Jupiter." He soothes thus their pagan prejudices, while he appears as the friend of those for whose blood they panted. What a noble vindication he gives of the Apostle Paul and his associates: "These men are neither robbers of churches, nor yet blasphemers of your goddess." He excites their alarm: "For we are in danger to be called in question for this day's uproar, there being no cause whereby we may give an account of this concourse." He refers to the law, and advises them to proceed prudently and not violently. He gives most excellent advice, worthy not only of a pagan, as he was, but of a genuine Christian: "Ye ought to be quiet, and to do nothing rashly." Noise and violence establish no truth, vindicate no principle. The excitement of passion often misleads or hushes the direction of correct reason, sober judgment. The results are regrets for hasty action, oftentimes unjust and cruel. There is profound philosophy in this advice. Excited passion is exhibited through expression of countenance, and especially through boisterous speech. The tongue keeps time with the quickened heart-beat. One of the effects of excited passion is rashness. Passion is blind; prejudice usurps the throne of reason. It requires purpose and effort, persistently employed, to keep down excitement, especially in a crowd of excited persons. The hand of prudence and self-possession must hold the safety-valve to prevent the outburst of rash, irrational action. This, when frequently practiced, becomes an element of character, a safeguard against unprudent, violent, hasty action. Religion should be the reliable balance-wheel of the intricate and delicate machinery of human conduct. We never regret putting the curb on passion, and letting prudence and piety drive our chariot. Our profoundest regrets in our thoughtful, prayerful moments arise from yielding to improper impulses antagonizing the teachings of reason and religion.

This nameless official, whatever may have been the selfish or personal motives of his conduct, deserves our admiration for his heroic defense of Paul and his associates. The grand truth that God will raise up friends for his servants when fearlessly, but lovingly, doing their duty, comes out into the open sunlight. "The beasts of Ephesus" are toothless and clawless to injure God's servants, even in the mob of Ephesus, one of the largest, most beautiful, learned and wicked of classic cities. Good deeds embalm themselves in the memory of God, although the names of the doers may not appear on the page of history.

Let us study the advice of the official of Ephesus. It is simple, lucid as a sunbeam, in accordance with right and right reason. It is easy to be understood, and within our reach, by patient effort and the divine help. "He that ruleth his own spirit is greater than he that taketh a city." Noblest heroism is seen in the exercise of self-discipline; and in the practice of self-sacrifice and self-denial for Christ's sake, religion shines forth her divinest loveliness, and bows her knee and life in homage of the Son of God, the Savior of men.

If this advice of the Ephesus official were fully carried out in its true spirit, what happy homes would girdle our redeemed world! The Saharas in society, and even in the church of God, would put on Eden bloom and beauty. Violence and cruelty would die out of human action and of human vocabulary. Love would reign under the direction and control of divine grace, and put its girdle of beauty around our blood-crimsoned earth, binding all hearts in unity and all souls to Christ.

"Cases for Discipline."

This is the subject of a timely article from the pen of the Rev. R. G. Porter in the ADVOCATE, of September 4.

All concerned know that it is a pressing necessity at this juncture to be faithful to our vows in the matter of discipline. We also know that there has been sad neglect of duty in the past, and long immunity has brought the church to a crisis.

Here is the question: Whose fault is it? A large per cent. of cities have become accustomed to lay the whole burden of neglect and failure on the pastors. Bro. Porter suggests two sources of failure or neglect to enforce discipline—the neglect of the pastor or the want of co-operation from the church. These are many times both to blame; many times it is the one and the other.

There are many times and places in which a pastor is forced to inaction by the want of co-operation from the church. Bro. Porter says: "If we are not pretty well rid of these things in the next four years, it will be because the pastors are not faithful in the administration of discipline, or because the church will not sustain them in this important work." Several times has the writer tried to arraign persons in the method prescribed by the Discipline, and has failed to get a committee that would work. In such cases if the pastor proceeds, he must go through an extra-judicial process.

But there is another source of failure recognized by the Discipline, and I do not hesitate to say that I think it one of the most fruitful sources of the evils which we have to fight. It is the neglect of the presiding elders to attend to this function of their oversight. One of the most positive functions of a presiding elder is to have the discipline administered in his district. Ans. 6 to Ques. 1, page 77, of the Discipline says: "To take care that every part of the Discipline is administered (enforced) in his district." I will not make the assertion that it is common, but I do say that in many cases this is a dead letter in the church statute book. To visit the pastoral charges once a quarter and preside at the Quarterly Conference and ask the routine questions, is the ultima thule of the functions of the presiding elder. If the pastor rises to the discharge of his duties, it becomes his duty to court the consent of his presiding elder to an executive procedure rather than to obey the mandates of superior authority. I have never known a case of procedure to begin at the dictation of a presiding elder, and many preachers are timid in the undertaking of such a task, and consequently the law is practically inoperative. I do not mean to insinuate that the presiding elder is the one to initiate the proceedings. This is extra-functional. But he can and ought to see that the pastor does his duty and give him the prestige and authority of his influence and position, for without this the pastor can do but little in dealing with sin in high places. The presiding elder wants to remain neutral, not willing to bear the brunt of the opprobrium that may arise from the world. A general might just as well relegate the whole responsibility of a battle to his subordinates. There would be a much more easy adjustment of the law of the church with the host of offenders if the pastors could feel the weight and power of their presiding elders back of them, and their hearty sympathy manifested in hearty co-operation, and if the people could see the high authorities of the church leading in the crusade against vice.

A pastor is put down at an appointment where the law is ignored, even by the most "influential members." All the collections and salaries depend on the "principal" members being let alone. The Discipline is under foot. The presiding elder will admit that. But begin to urge him for his endorsement of a court of correction, write to him in your perplexities and ask his advice in ink, and often then he becomes like Mephibosheth, "lame in both feet"—he can not come to the rescue.

There are many back-wood preachers, with but little experience, who ask their presiding elder to help them; but, failing to get the guidance they need, they drift into the regular style of negligence. There are other preachers who are not going to offend the patronage of the fashionable and gay and wealthy unless they are urged into proceedings by higher authority.

My position is, that the correction of the vices that now infest the church is largely in the hands of the presiding elders. If they give their prestige to the administration of the new law on the subject of vice, it will be a success. If not, it will be a failure, and things will move on as before. The time should come when the preacher in charge should cease to have to bear all the blame for the disorders in the church.

The Adventist Literature.

The Adventist problem deserves more than a passing notice from our press. The whole country is being flooded with their literature, and it is the most cunningly written fallacy I have ever read. The main fault with the brethren will be to think it is so foolish that it is unworthy of notice. I confess to some lethargy here myself. It does seem that no sensible person could entertain their ideas, and on this account I find very little literature written to show the fallacy of their doctrines. As I have had them to contend with all this year, and as I know they are making desperate efforts to spread their dogmas, I will try to give in brief their leading points of faith:

1. They claim this to be the final age of the world; indeed, this is the millenium, and the Savior is liable at any time now to come.

2. That ever since some time in the fourth century when a Pope, they say, changed the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week, Christians have kept the wrong day; that the Sabbath was not changed at the resurrection of Jesus, but was changed more than three hundred years after his death.

3. That the souls of the lost are not immortal, as the pulpit has fallaciously taught so long, but that instead of "everlasting" punishment, the souls of the damned, as well as their bodies, are totally annihilated.

4. Baptism by immersion is the only scriptural baptism.

These are some of their main features, and I would advise my brethren of the Southeast Louisiana parishes to study these and preach upon them. Their canvassers go from house to house with their literature and, without telling what it is, sell it to the unsuspecting. The name of one of their works, "Bible Readings," has been sold, to my knowledge, without letting the purchaser know what he was getting. All the works that I have seen are written in violation of all rules of testimony. They ask leading questions, and answer with a quotation from Scripture. Why don't some of our able writers get out a book in reply to them that could be sold for twenty-five, or fifty cents. A logical, scriptural reply would find a ready sale and do good.

Henington Camp Meeting.

The nineteenth annual camp meeting of Henington Camp Ground, near Crystal Springs, Miss., closed on September 3, having begun on August 28. This year's meeting with the one of last year have been two of the most successful in the history of this camp ground. At this meeting there were thirty-nine accessions and more than fifty conversions, and a great burial of war-hatchets. One D. D. remarked if many more were buried, the hills of the grounds would become mineral. Whatever may be said of this, it is one of the best evidences of a successful meeting. Whenever men living at variance with each other can reach the point to have their differences settled upon Christian principles, there can be no better evidence of a genuine work of the Holy Spirit. There was a full supply of ministers; over twenty in attendance during the meeting. Among them Bishop Galloway, W. C. Black, D. D.; R. J. Jones, J. W. Chambers and a number of others, whose names space forbid mentioning, who did good and faithful preaching.

A good part, however, of the preaching was done by Rev. John Boring, of Holston Conference, and that inimitable "Gilderoy," alias R. G. Porter, of North Mississippi. Bro. Boring was recommended to us by Rev. G. R. Stuart, of Cleveland, Tenn. We have not been disappointed in his selection. Bro. Boring is a remarkable preacher in many respects. He is in his sixty-second year, and can preach twice a day without seemingly any appearance of failing. His preaching is distinguished for certain features: that of plainness and simplicity. No one can fail to understand him. He begins in a conversational style, never allows himself to become boisterous, but as he advances seems to grow in stature and improve in appearance. He makes no effort at oratory, yet often is very eloquent. His arguments are all taken from the Scriptures, with which he is remarkably familiar, quoting them at pleasure, giving book, verse and chapter to establish his positions. He never scolds, never dogmatic, but all he says is in a spirit of love and humility. Love, humility and simplicity seem to be his chosen weapons of warfare in his great work for the Master. No one can fail to be impressed who listens to him with the thought: He is one of the purest and best of men, deeply consecrated and thoroughly imbued with the responsibility of his calling. He is a teacher in the true sense of the word. He analyzes and explains the Scriptures and illustrates them in his own words and actions. His hearers, from the strong down to the humblest member of the church, can learn from him. Oh! for more such men and preachers! Many of us feel we are wiser and better by his coming among us. May the Lord prolong his life many years in his great work!

Bro. "Gilderoy," as we here now call him, preaches in one sense a deal as he writes—something usually new and fresh; he never tires you. If men are called for any special work, he is among the children. They can never forget what he says to them; his illustrations are so child-like. He shows the power of habit by telling on himself the one he formed in early life of spitting in his hands in everything he attempted to do. This followed him to the pulpit, and he often caught himself spitting in his hands as he would begin to preach. He tells the boys they can't fudge and get to heaven. He is a rare boy who would fail to catch the thought: to fudge is to cheat—to cheat is sin, whether in playing marbles or anything else, however innocent the act or play may be. The lesson is an important one to those of mature years.

Our camp meeting has been a success in more ways than one. The order was unusually good for the large number in attendance. We contracted the heaviest expense the present year for many past, amounting to about seven hundred dollars. We felt anxious as to the result. We are glad to report with a small balance in our favor last year, our gate fees and other receipts the present year. All our expenses have been met with a small margin to our balance. This certainly bespeaks the importance of the gate-fee system, however much it may be opposed by some. A fee of only twenty-five cents to enter the entire meeting is felt by no one, and prevents the oppression of the few, which was the result in all our former plans. It is certainly the plan to adopt if camp meetings are desired to be perpetuated.

Juvenile Missionary Paper.

It is probable that the Woman's Missionary Society of the North Georgia Conference will take the initiatory step of beginning, at an early date, the publication of a juvenile missionary paper. Careful survey of the field is already being made, and many things promise rich success. Should the paper be established, and others of the Conferences join the movement, there would be no reason to doubt its ultimate success. The field is broad.

From the Work.

BLAIRSTOWN, LA.

My first meeting was at Oak Grove. Bro. W. W. Simmons and Bro. N. J. Roberts were with me, and everything was ripe for a revival when they arrived. And they did some Holy Ghost preaching, and captured the hearts of all. This was one of the best meetings I ever witnessed; it lasted five days. Then I moved over to Clear Creek, and had Bro. J. Wilson Brown with me, and he did some very fine preaching. Church at this place revived. Then I moved over to Gilead, and opened my batteries there, and we had quite a revival of religion there. Bro. Norton, of East Baton Rouge, was with us. On Tuesday was our quarterly meeting occasion, and Bro. McDonald was on hand and gave us a very clear and forcible sermon on baptism, after which he administered the Lord's Supper to a large number of communicants. After the close, next day, moved over to Olive Branch, and a gracious meeting we had there. Bros. Ira B. Roberison and G. D. Anders were on hand, and we stormed the stronghold of Satan, and drove him from the last ditch. Church greatly revived and strengthened; sixteen family altars erected, a class meeting and a prayer meeting and a second Sunday-school. I went, the fifth Sunday in August, to Cregg's School-house, where Bros. A. E. White and Will Cregg had invited me, and who had been conducting a Sunday-school and prayer meeting all the year. These are faithful lay brethren. As a result of this meeting twenty-two joined—six before make twenty-eight; and I organized a church, took up a collection to buy them a register, and at no distant day this will be a strong church. My fifth, and last, meeting up to date, just closed at Independence, was a grand meeting. The Holy Ghost came down in power at the very first. Bro. B. Jones, of Clinton station, did the most of the preaching; and it would have done your soul good to have seen this old father in Israel pleading with sinners to turn from the error of their way. Every word was a telling shot; and, at times when the Holy Ghost would come with power, his appeals were eloquent. He is a fine preacher, though I am told he is eighty-two years old. Fifteen converted, and eight joined. As a result of these meetings sixty joined the different churches named, and about that many were converted; also thirty-five children were baptized; and Christianity in old East Feliciana is stronger to-day, perhaps, than ever before. Fox fire religion, in a measure, has been destroyed. I have all my Conference claims in hand; every dollar of the preacher and presiding elder will be paid. I believe this circuit can boast of as true and faithful a Board of Stewards as any work, and they pride themselves in going the whole hog, as the old saying goes. I have also secured thirty-two subscribers to the ADVOCATE, and raised about $175 cash for parsonage and other purposes. How will this do for one of the young preachers? A good business town, coupled with a big lot of energy and industry; filled with the love of God, desiring the salvation of souls above everything, and keeping humble and at the foot of the cross, goes, according to my experience, a long way in a preacher's make-up.

J. R. WHITTINGTON.

UTICA CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The Lord has wonderfully blessed us in our revival meetings on this circuit. I began a meeting at Reeves Chapel on the fourth Sunday in August, and continued for three days. The meeting resulted in some bright conversions, thirteen accessions to the church, and the erection of several family altars. Bro. V. D. Skipper assisted me in this meeting, and preached with great power. On the first Sunday in September I began a meeting at Cayuga, and continued for five days, preaching twice a day. Bro. Skipper came to me on Tuesday, in the spirit of the Master, and preached me five strong sermons. Sixty-two joined the church, about eighty conversions, and all present promised to lead better lives. Men from seventy to children of tender years were received into the church; in some instances whole families. The larger per cent.—in fact, most all—were grown people; many of them in middle life. This was the most spiritual meeting I ever attended; hardened sinners accepted salvation, and are now asking blessings at their tables and praying in their families. This was, indeed, a "time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord." We have received one hundred and fifty into the church up to date. We praise God for the victory, and give him all the glory.

N. J. ROBERTS, P. C.

AMERICUS CIRCUIT.

We have just closed an interesting meeting of four days at Sunflower School-house, in the neighborhood of Cross Roads. Commenced Friday night before the first Sunday in September. Bro. Lyman R. Roberts was alone in the meeting until Monday night, when Bro. D. C. Rolls, from Leeksville charge, came to his relief. Bro. D. C. Rolls preached at Sunflower School-house, Tuesday, at eleven o'clock, on the subject of a revealed Savior; and Tuesday night, at Cross Roads Church, his text was Rev. xxii, 17: "And the Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." Had a large congregation. The meeting resulted in a great deal of good. Our church here is improving on some lines, and the people are becoming more liberal and more spiritual. As we go on our way rejoicing, pray for us.

HILLSBORO, MISS.

I have just closed a protracted meeting at Hillsboro. The meeting was a grand and glorious success. There was a work done here that will tell out upon the destinies of many in the future. There were nineteen accessions to the church, and many backsliders reclaimed. Bro. Smiley, from Homewood, was with us, and did honor to himself for the efficient services rendered. Our presiding elder was with us, and preached two soul-stirring sermons; also Bro. Walter Meadow, from East Pearl. We go on our way rejoicing. Pray for us.

R. H. BARR, P. C.

CORINTH DISTRICT, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The third round of Quarterly Conferences has been made, and not without some results. Three or four new churches on the way. Four charges are at work for a parsonage. We meet next Saturday to locate a district parsonage. There have been about 350 accessions to the church. The finances are better than usual at this season of the year. We have here and there a good appointment and some good people.

The other side: Some churches have not paid anything to the support of pastor or been represented at a quarterly meeting this year, and no complaint from the pastor. Local preachers, stewards, Sunday-school superintendents and other members of the Quarterly Conference have not attended, and yet the Quarterly Conference says, "No complaints." Only a few family altars, and hundreds that do not ask a blessing at their tables. If some of you will pop a few questions to your large and appreciative congregations, you will see what you will see. A higher standard of moral and intellectual culture must be instilled into the minds and hearts of this people if we ever succeed. There seems to be a stupid indifference among the whites to education. There are whole families, and numbers of them, that never see inside of a school-room. My prediction is, that if we do not get hold of our poor and uneducated white people, it will not be long before we will have a question more distressing and vicious a thousandfold than the race problem.

The negro has aspiration and inspiration to educate, and this is worth more than lands or money. The negroes, born slaves, since the war have learned to read and write by the hundreds. How many white men have done this? Passing a cabin a few days ago, on Saturday evening, I saw a negro man doing what I never saw a white man do any day of the week; sitting in the shade of a tree studying a speller or reader. Said an ex representative to me, "On this ridge, six or eight miles long, there are eleven white men that can read and write, and twenty-two that can not. More than two-thirds of the negroes can read and write." That Constitutional Convention has undertaken an impossible thing. This question will never be settled by legislative restrictions or qualifications. If education and Christianity can not solve it, nothing else will.

If I were a general or a colonel, and could suggest nothing better than some of them do, I would cut the tail off my name and get out among the helpless and oppressed and grow another one. What we need now is consecrated brain work, a pure, sound literature at a small cost, and better educational facilities for the masses. If we do not put more of our money into brains, the next generation will not have either.

MONTGOMERY, LA.

I am thankful that I can send good news from this portion of the Lord's vineyard. We had a glorious meeting at Dunn's, lasting a week. Some conversions; seven added to the church. My son did faithful service. Bro. R. M. Hern was with us a part of the time. I held a four days' meeting at Shady Grove. Five added to the church, and several conversions. Bro. Mandeville was with me in the Spirit of the Master at Winnfield, from Friday night till the next Friday. He was filled with the Holy Ghost, and preached a full salvation. God graciously owned his word. About twelve happily converted (one an old man of seventy-one), eight entered by faith the rest of perfect love, and nine were received into the church. After Saturday we had four services a day, including a six o'clock prayer meeting. On Thursday we had a nine o'clock love-feast, which made five services the last day of the meeting. We asked for fifty dollars for the pastor, fifteen dollars for Conference claimants, and four dollars for additional lights—all of which was cheerfully given in cash and good subscriptions. We also collected privately twelve dollars and twenty-five cents for our faithful helper.

We are building a new church at Atlanta, which we hope to have in readiness for our last quarterly meeting.

We had a pleasant service at Montgomery yesterday (September 14). Asked for fifteen dollars missionary money, which was freely given.

LESSON I.—October 5.

PARABLE OF THE VINEYARD.

Luke xx, 9-19.

GOLDEN TEXT.—He is despised and rejected of men.—Isa. liii, 3.

TIME.—Tuesday of Passion week, April 4, A. D. 30. The closing day of Christ's public ministry.

PLACE.—The Temple at Jerusalem.

9. To the people—The parable was spoken to the people—but at, with reference to, against, the chief priests and scribes. Bengel suggests that he addressed it to the people, to guard against interruption on the part of the chief priests. A vineyard—St. Luke omits the special isolation, etc., of the vineyard. Judea was formerly a land of vineyards. To husbandmen—Namely, (1) the Jewish nation; (2) their rulers and teachers. By his going into a far country he means his great long-suffering. I should rather say, this represents and partially explains "the eternal silences"—God's apparent withdrawals from the earth to test the fidelity of his children. For a long time—The nearly two thousand years of Jewish history. In this long time they learned to say, "The Lord hath forsaken the earth."

10. At the season—The fruits had had abundant time to come to maturity. The wine-press and the tower Luke omits. He sent a servant—The various servants are the judges, the better priests, and the prophets. That they should give him of the fruit—The payment is in kind, on the metayer system. Beat him and sent him away—The language paints the general treatment of the prophets; Isaiah, Jeremiah, Zechariah the son of Jehoiada, being the most conspicuous instances.

11. And again he sent another—Literally, And he added to send another—a Hebraism. Entreated him shamefully—There is a gradation in their impious audacity. In St. Matthew it is (1) beat, (2) killed, (3) stoned. In St. Mark, it is (1) beat, and sent away empty; (2) wounded in the head and insulted; (3) killed. And when more servants are sent they beat some and kill some.

12. Cast him out—For an abundant historical justification of this description, and as showing that the past ingratitude of the people is not painted here in colors a whit too dark, see 1. Kings xviii, 13; II. Kings vi, 31; II. Chron. xxiv 19-22.

13. What shall I do?—A picture of human perplexity representing the grief of the heavenly Father over his rebellious children. I will send my beloved Son—Who took on him the form of a servant. Our Lord's teaching respecting his own divine dignity advanced in distinctness as the end was approaching. It may be—Literally, perhaps. This "perhaps" belongs, of course, only to the parable, but it (1) indicates their free will, and (2) enhances their awful crime to represent it as having seemed all but inconceivable.

14. That the inheritance may be ours—"They killed that they might possess, and because they killed they lost." The priests and scribes considered the nation their property, and they slew the Son that they might hold it for themselves.

15. Cast him out of the vineyard—This may involve an allusion to Christ suffering "without the gate." The prophecy was meant, if possible, at the last hour, to prevent the guilt of its own fulfillment.

16. He shall come and destroy these husbandmen—St. Luke agrees with St. Mark in putting these words into our Lord's lips, and not, as St. Matthew does, into those of the bystanders. On the assumption that those who gave the answer, which our Lord would seem to have repeated, were some of the scribes and Pharisees, we may see in it either a real unconsciousness that they were as men on whom the punishment was to fall, or, more probably, an affected horror, by which they sought to disguise the conviction that the parable was meant for them. They would not admit, in the presence of the multitude, that they winced at this intimation that their designs were known. Looking at the words as coming from the scribes, their answer, like the speech of Caiaphas, was an unconscious prophecy, in which were wrapt up at once the destruction of the holy city and the transfer of the privileges that had belonged to Israel to the Gentile Church, which was to grow into Catholic Christendom. The Lord of the vineyard would not be robbed of its fruits, and sooner or later would find faithful and true laborers. Give the vineyard to others—"Lo, we turn to the Gentiles." God forbid—No other English phrase could well be substituted for this, but it is worth mentioning that the name of God does not appear in the original, and that the ejaculation is simply, as it were, a negative Amen, "So be it not." Its insertion here is peculiar to St. Luke, nor does it occur elsewhere in the Gospels. St. Paul uses it frequently, as in Rom. iii, 4, 6, 31; vi, 2, 15, et al. The cry of horror must be supposed to have come from others than those who, in St. Matthew's report, had themselves pronounced the sentence. When the hearers said, "God forbid," their thoughts were not upon the severity of this punishment, but upon the enormity of the murderous crime thus punished. Their souls recoiled with horror at the suggestion of such awful guilt. This must be the point to which they referred, for Christ's answer assumes this.

17. He beheld them—Rather, looking fixedly on them, to add solemnity to his reference to their own Scriptures. The stone which the builders rejected—This is a quotation from Psa. cxviii, 22; comp. Isa. xxviii, 16. The stone is regarded both as a foundation stone and a stone at the angle of the building binding the two walls together. These words made a deep impression on St. Peter. In the primary meaning of the Psalm the illustration seems to have been drawn from one of the stones, quarried, hewn, and marked away from the site of the temple (Kings vi, 7), which the builders, ignorant of the architect's plans, had put on one side as having no place in the building but which was found afterward to be that on which the completeness of the structure depended, that on which, as the chief corner-stone, the two walls met and were bonded together. The Psalmist saw in this a parable of the choice of David to be king over Israel; perhaps, also, of the choice of Israel itself out of the nations of the world.

18. Whosoever—This rejection of the corner-stone when translated into history is the murder of his beloved Son. Shall fall upon that stone—As the Jews did from the first. Shall be broken—Literally, shall be sorely bruised. It shall fall—As it did on the finally impenitent Jews after Christ's ascension. It will grind him to powder—Literally, it shall winnow him, with obvious reference to the great image which "the stone cut without hands" smote and broke to pieces, so that its fragments became "like the chaff of the summer threshing-floor, and the wind carried them away." A man's dashing himself against this stone laid on the earth means rejecting him during the time of his humiliation. In the second part of the verse, where this stone is represented as falling from the top of the building, the subject is the glorified Messiah crushing all earthly oppositions by the manifestations of his wrath.

19. The chief priests and the scribes... sought—A statement which is here the more remarkable since it serves as a proof that the increasing bitterness of his enemies did not proceed from misunderstanding in reference to the discourses of our Lord, but, on the contrary, from the fact that they understood them only too well, and felt themselves thereby mortally wounded and outraged. The more light there was before their eyes, so much the more hatred in their hearts. We see they are in the way which at last leads to the commission of the sin against the Holy Ghost. Maddened into rage, the chief priests and scribes at this moment made a desperate rush to seize the Lord Jesus, for they saw that his parable was leveled against themselves; but their fear of the people compelled them to desist. Against them—This decidedly shows the primary sense of the parable. As yet they hardly realized its wider significance. So when the priests and rulers saw that Jeremiah spake against them, "Come," said they, "and let us devise devices against Jeremiah.... Come, and let us smite him with the tongue." After this parable our Lord added the parable of the marriage of the king's son. Thus in three continuous parables he convicted the priests and scribes (1) of false professions; (2) of cruel faithlessness; (3) of blind presumption. This, with their public humiliation about John's baptism, made them thirsty for speedy vengeance.

Witness to the Truth.

The New York Journal of Commerce is one of the newspapers that often has an editorial which stalwartly defends Biblical Christianity, without championing sectarianism in the slightest degree. The following sentences upon "Bearing witness to the truth" are nobly written:

The kingliest office ever held by one of human birth is that of witness-bearing to the truth. The man who is faithful in this comes nearest to the king of the nations. "Art thou a king, then?" asked the haughty Roman of one who had spoken of his kingdom. The answer is a study for a lifetime. "I am a king. To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth." The kingly office and witnessing to the truth are here held to be synonymous. There is a world of encouragement in this for every man of humble birth, of lowly estate, of scanty means. No matter how poor his home, how meagre his fare, how circumscribed his influence, how desolate his lot, he may assume the royal prerogative and exercise the kingly functions. He need not have a throne, or a jeweled crown and glittering robes, nor even a sceptre, but if he bears witness to the truth he has come to a regal estate. The question of the Roman, "What is truth?" was asked in contempt and was left unanswered. But the witnesses all know enough of it to qualify them for their high calling. Every one who hears the voice of him whose "kingdom is not of this world" is "of the truth," and all who follow him in their testimony come into the royal likeness. The witness to the truth is not, as many seem to suppose, a partisan authorized to assume the reins of power, to collect armies, to enlist a host of followers and put them in martial array, to engage in sanguinary battles, to dominate wrong and error by the use of the gun, the sword, and the bayonet, and to drive all forms of evil out of the world by a superior force skilled in strategy and the machinery of war. Truth is a reformer, truth is a liberator, truth is an elevator, truth is a purifier; but as an armed warrior it is utterly powerless before the defiant will of man. Those who go forth to war in its name may assail with keenest blades the victims of falsehood, but they will make no impression on the strongholds of error. Omnipotence itself can not lead an unwilling captive to embrace the truth. He stands intrenched beyond the utmost stretch of the mightiest power that would coerce his resisting choice. To witness for the truth, therefore, is not to engage after this fashion in a hostile assault upon the evil that is prevalent in human hearts and manifested in human life. This is the hardest lesson the world has yet to learn. It is so easy to denounce, to assail with reproaches and bitter scorn, the follies, the heresies, the evil devices, the shortcomings of those who cling to falsehood and error, that every champion of the truth is anxious to get up into the chariot with Jehu and imitate his exterminating zeal. We do not now refer to those who make their pronunciation of shibboleth the sole test of righteousness, and would slay with the sword of their vengeance, as the Gileadites did, all who can not sound the letters after the same fashion. But the real friends of truth are far more prone to show their love of it by fighting for it than by witness-bearing. If it were an earthly monarchy this might be excused, as the first King said. "If my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight." The kingdom is "not from hence," and, therefore, it needs witnesses and not frantic zealots to war in its behalf with sword and spear. If we study the character of him who came from a throne loftier than is found in any human court to bear witness to the truth, we can see in a concrete form the lesson which those who seek this kingly office must learn, each for himself, before he essays to practice in the high vocation. The witness must be a lover of the truth for its own sake, and make it the guide of his life.—Watchman.

Education and the Lottery.

The cry of the Lottery, through its mouthpiece, the Progressive League, is "education." The State is being flooded by this last-named organization with its "leaflets," in which the State is slandered and her school system is belittled and decried, and its pretended object of attracting immigration is sought to be accomplished by telling those who might be disposed to become settlers here that if they do so they will bring their children to a State barren of educational advantages to grow up in ignorance. The Lottery strives to drive the people of Louisiana to its support by working upon the most sacred feeling of the human heart—parental love. It hopes, by holding before the eyes of the parents the fear of ignorance for their children, to conceal from them the pitfalls of vice and immorality and crime which it is preparing for the coming generation of Louisianians. To this end the Lottery and its minions paint the most woeful picture of Louisiana's destitution of even a rudimentary common school system.

Is that picture true? Is our common school system worse than that of our neighbors? And is it standing still or worse, deteriorating? To both of these questions, thank God, we can answer, and answer truthfully, "No." For an answer to the last question we turn to the school statistics found in the annual report of the State superintendent of public education made in this year. There we find the following figures: comparing the statistics for 1889 with those for 1880, what do we find? In 1880 there were enrolled pupils, 54,312; in 1889, 132 593; an increase of 78 281, more than double. In 1880 there were teachers, 1,286; in 1889, 2 670; an increase of 1,384, more than double. In 1890 there were schools, 874; in 1889, 2,276; an increase of 1,402, nearly three times as many. In 1880 the money expended for public schools was $411,858 37; in 1889 $704 586, nearly double as much. Does this look like retrogression? In 1880 the amount expended for the common schools was less than half a million dollars, in 1889 it was nearly three quarters of a million. Does this look like retrogression? Is not this substantial evidence of a steady and sound and healthy growth?

But aside from this evidence of growth by comparison with our own past, how does our school system compare with that of the other Southern States? Investigation of their reports shows that the public-school teachers of Louisiana are better paid than the teachers of Alabama, of Tennessee, of Mississippi, of North Carolina, and of Virginia. It shows that the public schools of Louisiana are in session for longer terms than those of any other Southern State except Virginia. What have the Lottery hirelings and the Lottery's newspapers and the Lottery's Progressive League to say to these facts and figures? They have been dealing in glittering generalities, they have been making vague and random assertions, they have been preaching and writing and publishing and spreading broadcast slanders upon the school system of the State either in woeful ignorance or willful disregard of the facts. They have now been confronted with a solid wall of irrefutable facts and unmistakable figures. Will they persist in their course of misrepresentation?

Louisiana has a better public school system than any of the other States which passed through the horrors of reconstruction. The figures prove it, and the unsupported assertions of a thousand Progressive Leagues, prepared by paid employes of the Lottery Company, printed on the presses of the Lottery Company and paid for by the money of the Lottery Company, can not controvert it.—New Delta.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury,

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is tenfold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, and acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally, and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co.

Dyspepsia

Makes many lives miserable, and often leads to self destruction. Distress after eating, sick headache, heartburn, sour stomach, mental depression, etc., are caused by this very common and increasing disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla tones the stomach, creates an appetite, promotes healthy digestion, relieves sick headache, clears the mind, and cures the most obstinate cases of dyspepsia. Read the following:

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. In an hour after eating I would experience a faintness or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. Hood's Sarsaparilla did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced. It relieved me of that faint, tired, all-gone feeling. I have felt so much better since I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, that I am happy to recommend it." G. A. PAGE, Watertown, Mass.

DON'T GIVE UP

The use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. One bottle may not cure "right off" a complaint of years; persist until a cure is effected. As a general rule, improvement follows shortly after beginning the use of this medicine. With many people, the effect is immediately noticeable; but some constitutions are less susceptible to medicinal influences than others, and the curative process may, therefore, in such cases, be less prompt. Perseverance in using this remedy is sure of its reward at last. Sooner or later, the most stubborn blood diseases yield to

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

"For several years, in the spring months, I used to be troubled with a drowsy, tired feeling, and a dull pain in the small of my back, so bad, at times, as to prevent my being able to walk, the least sudden motion causing me severe distress. Frequently, boils and rashes would break out on various parts of the body. By the advice of friends and my family physician, I began the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla and continued it till the poison in my blood was thoroughly eradicated."—L. W. English, Montgomery City, Mo.

"My system was all run down; my skin rough and of yellowish hue. I tried various remedies, and while some of them gave me temporary relief, none of them did any permanent good. At last I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, continuing it exclusively for a considerable time, and am pleased to say that it completely

Cured Me.

I presume my liver was very much out of order, and the blood impure in consequence. I feel that I cannot too highly recommend Ayer's Sarsaparilla to any one afflicted as I was."—Mrs. N. A. Smith, Glover, Vt.

"For years I suffered from scrofula and blood diseases. The doctors' prescriptions and several so-called blood-purifiers being of no avail, I was at last advised by a friend to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I did so, and now feel like a new man, being fully restored to health."—C. N. Frink, Decorah, Iowa.

Growth in Religion.

The Holy Ghost, by the pen of the Apostle Peter, has exhorted Christians to "grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." By the Apostle Paul he has given the same exhortation in various forms. It is evident from these Scriptures that there is such a thing as growth in religion.

In the material world growth is development from a seed or germ. It is enlargement by natural process and is hindered or assisted by external conditions. It is augmentation, tending to reproduction. Grace is the divine love manifesting itself in the bestowment of positive blessings. Or, rather, it is the influence which these blessings exert upon the heart and life. Knowledge is acquaintance acquired by association and experience. The terms "grace and knowledge" include every blessing within the circle of the redemption scheme. To grow in these is to enlarge along all the lines of religion. It is to advance further and further into an actual acquaintance with the divine love in its manifestations in the heart and in the world, and an enlarging reproduction of the virtues of piety in the daily living.

In the natural world growth depends largely upon external conditions. The soil and atmosphere must be in proper condition to enable the plant to draw the life enlarging properties from them to itself, and the plant must have vigor to assimilate these properties to the supply of its own wants. So in the religious world growth depends a good deal upon external conditions. These conditions are the "means of grace," the neglect of which is sure to dwarf the religious life, just as their proper use is sure to develop and enlarge it. Just at this point the value of church services and family worship and private devotions comes prominently to view. The Christian who neglects these will not grow, except in the direction of littleness.

In the natural world the best and most vigorous growth is the result of cultivation. We have the evidences of this all around us every day. As the "full corn in the ear" depends upon the care and attention bestowed upon the cultivation of the stalk, so the full development of the virtues of religion is in proportion to the care and attention bestowed upon their cultivation. Indeed, there is very little robust piety that is not the result of cultivation. We do not mean that religion can be acquired in the way that a science is acquired. We mean that progressive religion is the result of the cultivation of a germ implanted in the heart, which can not be said of a science. That germ is regeneration, a seed sown in the heart by the Holy Spirit. It is merest nonsense to talk of growth in religion where this is lacking. It would be extreme folly for a farmer to talk of reaping a harvest of wheat from the weeds that grow spontaneously in an uncultivated soil. The fact that Christians are exhorted to grow in grace shows that there must be some grace as a germ whence growth may take its start. If a man has no grace, it is clearly impossible for him to grow in grace. He has no starting-point. In the Christian religion the starting-point is regeneration. A science may be acquired by study and perfected by the practical application of its principles, but religion is a development from within. It is an increase and growth of the germinal principle of the new birth, and this increase is augmented or retarded according to the use or non-use of the means of grace.

From observation we have come to the conclusion that there are many Micawbers in the religious world—people who are taking things easy with the expectation of "something turning up," by which something they will be immensely helped forward in their religious life and experience. This is a delusion of the devil. Growth in religion never happens. It is never the result of accident. As in other departments of the world's work, so in religion men and women are what they work to make themselves. Men work for riches, for learning, for position. Ambition and aspiration and energy and toil go before and lead to every attainment of excellence and worth. Those who toil up through manifold difficulties to the mountain top only reach the point for which they started from the vale below. So those who have reached high elevations in religion did not come to that point by accident. They started for that point, and worked earnestly until they reached it. On the other hand, the giddy, worldly, pleasure-loving followers of Christ have simply reached the point in religion at which they aimed. Either by neglect of duty or misuse of privilege or non-use of opportunity, they have made themselves what they are. When a farmer plants and cultivates one acre of ground, he ought not to expect to reap the harvest of a dozen acres! If he has the means and implements to cultivate well a dozen acres, and yet only cultivates one acre, he ought not to expect anything from the nine neglected acres nor anything from the means and implements which have remained idle. So it is in religion. The results attained are simply the outcome of the aim and work. The law of the Christian life is growth by the diligent use of the means in reach. Growth comes in no other way.

Letter from Mexico.

MR. EDITOR: As it is the wish of our Mexican brother, who was the secretary of our District Conference, I translate his letter to El Evangelista for your columns, feeling that it may be of interest to our friends to learn from the pen of a native preacher of the work in Mexico. Below I give the translation of his letter:

MEXICO DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Conference of this district convened in the Temple of Messiah, Mexico City, August 29-31, of the present year; the presiding elder, Dr. J. M. Weems, presiding. He gave ample time to the religious services, and the examination of subjects presented for consideration constituted the object of interest in this meeting. All the preachers attended, manifesting great joy for having fulfilled the duties committed to their care. Although Bro. Weems is new in mission work in this field, and also in the field that composes his district, yet, with the precision of an old worker and gifts of a true watchman, he knew how to direct in the right way all the subjects that have come under his spiritual administration to this time. We must confess, without depreciating the work of other presiding elders and their preachers, that, owing to his activity in the work, the power of his preaching, wise counsels and good manners, as also to the efforts of the pastors who work with him, we have received in these ten months of our ecclesiastical year a very great blessing from God in this country. We expect, and with good reason, that in future the soil will be better cultivated, and more ripe sheaves gathered for the garner of the Lord. May God bless this purpose!

Although perfectly evident to us, that you may understand the spirit that ruled this body from beginning to the end, I believe it to be my duty to make known the fact to all the Christian people, that it may redound in good to each of the members in particular; by the resolutions already formed it may be a stimulus and example to others also. Owing, in a great measure, to the wise and Christian exhortations of the presiding elder, and to ready answers to many and fervent prayers, we were prepared for this meeting, and, finally, for the presence and direction of the Holy Spirit that was among us in all our deliberations. With great strength of will, Bro. Weems, putting his conscience and God as witnesses, promised to comply with the duties of his ministry, even more faithfully in future. In regard to reports from the work, all were satisfactory, as they correspond with what was expected from the decided perseverance with which the work was performed. During this period there were one hundred children baptized, and two hundred and ninety-seven received into full connection with our church.

The amounts assigned us for collections for various purposes amounted to $324 50, which has not all been collected as yet, but will be by Conference, as the preachers made themselves responsible.

The reports of the committees on Quarterly Conference records, spiritual state of the church and Sunday-schools were full this time in a most perfect manner. The examination of those subjects was careful and considerate. Essays were read on the following subjects: "Sin and Repentance," by D. Paz; "Justification and Regeneration," by C. Martinez; "At What Age Ought Children to be Converted and to Become Members of the Church?" by D. O. Montselvo; "Revivals in all the Churches," by D. F. Watkins; "The Minister of the Gospel an Example to the People in His Work and Private Life," by J. R. Oliva, and "Temperance according to the Holy Scriptures," by A. Blanco. These essays met the acceptation and commendation of the Conference for their literary order, and the spiritual, religious and instructive doctrines unfolded with strong and energetic words. May they act as a powerful lever to all who heard them, to raise them, in the providence of God, to new life, ready and prompt to serve him to the end that they may do great good, and continue doing. Some of them will be published in the El Evangetista, the organ of our church. The religious services held during the Conference were the best we ever had. Almost all the ministers took part in the opening services; in all of which was noted in a marked manner the respect and attention to the reading of the Bible, the joy of the hearts speaking to God in prayer, and their abnegation in his divine presence. There was preaching the twenty-ninth and thirtieth, at night. On Sunday C. Martinez preached at eleven, and M. Obregon at night. Their preaching was highly instructive, their themes well adapted and treated; the former spoke of the Supreme Being (the Lamb of God), of whom we ought to preach, and the latter took for his subject, "In and through Christ alone there is grace and salvation."

The services of the Sabbath were as follows: Love-feast at nine o'clock in the morning, preaching at eleven, prayers at three o'clock in the afternoon, and the Lord's Supper at night, that left us hungering for divine justification. The assemblage at night was so numerous the church could scarcely seat them.

Finally, the Conference was dismissed, and each and all of its members renewed their vows to serve God as workmen that needeth not to be ashamed, promising to pray one for the other, that their vow may be accomplished, and to this end he who writes these lines asks the prayers of all who may read them.

D. PAZ.

I send you this letter that you may see how our native preachers feel about the work being done, and I join my petition to that of Bro. Paz, asking the Christians at home to pray for them and us.

The Production of Non-Church-Goers.

Some time ago an article appeared in the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate over the signature of J. P. Hassler, M. D., which we transfer to our columns, and invite the attention of our pastors and Sunday-school superintendents and teachers to it. That there is an evil that is doing much damage, is apparent to the most casual observer, and that it ought to be corrected "goes without saying;" but how to remedy it is a grave question. But the very gravity of the question ought to be the incentive to make everyone interested put forth the best energies and give the deepest thought to its solution. The article is one of many answers to a question sent out by the editor as to the reason that more young men are not converted.

Young men are not converted because they are not in our congregations to hear the gospel. They are not there because for years we have been producing a generation of non-church-goers, even within the very walls of the sanctuary. Sunday-school children are not present in church services because they are not expected there, and by the pews, at least, are not largely desired. The moment a Sunday-school is dismissed, the stream of small humanity turns, not into the house of worship, but with practical unanimity toward their homes. The consequence is that the children, our boys especially, grow up not only without the habit of church attendance, but with an established habit of non-attendance which shapes their future lives. Hence, when they merge into manhood and leave the Sunday-school, their graduation is not into the church, but into the throng upon the streets, and into such places of pleasure and amusement as may be open to them. If any thinks this is an incorrect picture of the modern Sunday-school and the trend thereof, let him try his own "Kodak" on the institution, and the next Sunday count the number of boys present at church.

It strikes me that a proper inquiry is: Whereunto will this thing grow? In the coming generation who will take the place in the church of the men to-day? Whom are we training for the positions then to become vacant? Shall the church of the future be defined to be "a body of faithful women, in which the pure Word of God is preached and the sacraments duly administered?" We were told, in the unpretending past, that the Sunday-school would be "the nursery of the church," a "feeder to the church," and all that. Most strangely it has proved rather to be the railway switch whereby the trains of young passengers have been "shunted" off the main track leading into the sanctuary.

The query rises: What are the compensations? Does the end crown the work? Is the teaching in our Sunday-schools of a character to justify the surrender of public worship and the hearing of the gospel? Do the children go there to hear and learn the Word and become better thereby? Do they come to love that Word, growing into willing hearers thereof, in the great congregation? Or, do they go for social pleasures, the merry music, the general good time? And, moreover, are the lessons always what they should be, healthful to morals and helpful to the religious life?

There can be no comment on the tendencies of our Sunday-school work like that which confronts us in this great evil, namely, that practically Sunday-school children are not attending church, and young men are not joining the church. Facing this fact, who can contemplate the future without apprehension?

Some months ago considerable attention was given to an Episcopal rector in New York, and no little sarcasm spent on him, because of his decision to abolish the Sunday-school in his church. May it not be possible that more of us agree with the rector than would, at first sight, care to acknowledge it? May it not be that a majority of our own clergy would endorse the declaration of pastor, presiding elder and bishop, that "if children must omit either, it is better to omit the Sunday-school than the preaching service and the stated worship of God." If anything can be demonstrated, this has been—that children do not attend both services. This, also, has been proved, that while the church has abandoned her children to the Sunday-school, the children in turn abandon the church, while we are perplexing ourselves with the conundrum, "Why are the young people not converted?"

Pulpit Vulgarities.

We have fallen upon a time when it is considered a drawing power in the pulpit to use extravagant and vulgar language; that to give a proper rebuke to sin and reach the sensibilities of the thoughtless class, violent, threatening, bullying, indecent forms of speech must be freely indulged in. But as I look over the numerous reports of revivals at a hundred churches in the different Conferences, I ask, By whom and how were these revivals conducted? And I find many of them reporting ten, thirty, and one something near seventy-seven souls converted. More than two thousand souls have been thus brought to Christ within the few past months, and our dear Christian people greatly edified. And by whom and how? By our young preachers, who assisted each other. No famous and no infamous evangelist had anything to do with these precious meetings.

The work has been done by the preaching of the Word in simplicity and sincerity and in the demonstration of the Holy Spirit; and I will warrant that no false, vulgar, bullying or lying extravagance of statement, no defiance of law, no violent and unjustifiable assault, or insulting caricature of brother ministers, no immodest and coarse, indecent utterance fell from the lips of anyone of them in all the sermons and addresses delivered.

In all that vast amount of work I can believe that no lady said, "I will never hear him again, nor suffer my daughter to hear such stuff;" no gentleman even said, "No female of my family can attend such teaching." No! no! not once; and it has come to the hour to call a halt, or our beloved church will reel under such ministrations and sink into disgrace.

Mary a Descendant from David.

The Scripture proof is in Luke i, 27. Mary is the same as Miriam, and suggests relation to Moses and Aaron also. [Mary's cousin, Elizabeth (Luke i, 36), was a descendant from Aaron (Luke i, 5). How could these simple truths be overlooked?]

During the present year I have baptized twenty—infants and adults—and received twenty new members. There are five or six other applicants for membership.

J. A. PARKER.

[Does the verse referred to above mean that the "Virgin" was of the "house of David," or that Joseph was of the "house of David?"—ED.]

Notes.

Miss Willard has appointed Wednesday, October 29, as a day of thanksgiving and prayer for the W. C. T. U.

We have now a "Senior Book Agent." We shall be hearing soon of "our senior presiding elder;" then of "our senior preacher in charge;" then of our "senior class leader!" It's the fashion, don't you know?

"Orange," in Wesleyan Advocate:

We may wince, and whine, and talk cant as much as we will, the fact remains: we can not keep up first-class pulpits on fourth-rate pay. He who tries to keep to her best a registered Jersey on the food and care given to a sassafras ridge scrub, kills his cow.

A great deal of the "goody-goody" stuff that is uttered from the pulpit does not contain truth enough to convert or edify a human soul.—Nashville Advocate.

Why not "complain" of the "inefficiency" of such preachers to their Conferences?

During the year more than three millions of dollars have been given to colleges in this country in the form of endowment. That is good, but not as good as it ought to be. There are many thousands of rich people who give nothing in this way, and it is a shame to them, or ought to be.

The church has been fixing her eye and heart so strongly on her growing material resources that she has forgotten, in a measure, the nature, the secret, and the power of prayer.—Nashville Advocate.

That is a "pretty sweeping assertion" for a paper that reports 5,953 conversions in one week! We don't accept it at all!

Conference will soon be here. Let the officials of every church take it upon themselves to see that everything ends in the right way. If your pastor has not raised the whole amount assessed, go out among the people and help him to do so. If he has not received his salary, then stir around and gather in the shekels that he may go to Conference, "owing no man anything but love."

We have received the Minutes of the Eleventh Annual Meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of the North Mississippi Conference, held at Senatobia, Miss., June 28. This society has been doing good work since its organization, in the way of collecting money and adding to its membership. The first year it raised $186 50; last year it reported $3,209 32. Since its organization it has remitted to the treasurer at Nashville, $15,849 39.

A very important question is becoming larger every day, and that is, the supply of ministers to meet the demands of the people. It is said that about 800 ministers a year are graduated from the various theological schools, and the supply from other sources is scant. There are now, according to a Baptist paper, 10,000 pastorless Baptist Churches in the United States. Other denominations are continually calling for more men, and many fields are unoccupied. The question is a serious one.

The number of cotton mills in operation in the South is 270, with 1,665,191 spindles. These mills consumed during the past year 546,363 bales of cotton, being 65,000 more than the consumption last year. In ten years there has been an increase of 172 mills, 1,257,931 spindles, and 358,146 bales of cotton consumed. This is rapid progress, and reveals the fact that the South only needs to utilize her pluck and capital, and she will "forge ahead" of every section of the country, and command the whole situation.

The Watchman, in an editorial, "Keeping Track of Events," has this paragraph, which we commend to those who take the secular paper in preference to the religious paper:

We have no doubt that most men who have compared the real information which they have gained from a thorough reading of a daily paper six days in a week, and from an equally thorough reading of a first-class religious paper for the same week, would say that in the latter they found more than six times the information as to the world's progress and stimulating comment upon it—and that from the Christian point of view—that they found in the six or seven issues of the daily paper.

Our Conferences will soon be in session. Many of our preachers will be moved to new fields. In the Louisiana Conference thirty men are certain to be moved, and maybe more. Speaking of such removals, the London Methodist Times mentions one thing which may be some compensation for the necessary evils attending removals: "It gives the minister an opportunity to make a fresh start. It is often very difficult and sometimes impossible to correct an initial blunder, to undo a public mistake, to alter a particular policy in the locality where the error occurred. But in a new sphere we may revolutionize our methods, we may practice the wisdom we have learned by painful failure, we may disentangle ourselves from all personal and official relations which have not proved helpful to the work of God."

The Mississippi Convention.

During the past week the convention, sitting as a committee of the whole, after a free and full discussion, passed the elective franchise bill reported by the special committee on that subject. The only provision of much importance in the bill is the educational qualification, and this seems to us to have been pretty effectually negatived by the alternative, "or he shall be able to understand the same when read to him or give a reasonable interpretation thereof." The whole section is as follows:

On and after January 1, A. D. 1896, the following qualifications are added to the foregoing: Every qualified elector shall be able to read any section of the Constitution of this State; or he shall be able to understand the same when read to him; or give a reasonable interpretation thereof.

The convention, in committee of the whole, also adopted the supplemental report of the same committee, fixing the representation of the several districts. It remains to be seen whether the convention itself will ratify the action of its committee of the whole. Strenuous effort will, doubtless, be made to defeat the action.

Personal and Otherwise.

The trustees of Dr. Talmage's Church have borrowed $125,000 from Russell Sage to rebuild their Tabernacle, and yet the membership is large and wealthy. We think they have a wrong sort of religion.

Dr. C. K. Marshall, of Vicksburg, Miss., will fill the pulpit in Carondelet Church, next Sunday.

We omitted, last week, to put the initials "J. M. B." to the article on the first page, entitled, "A Bimetallic Currency." As it has been credited to the editor, this correction is made that the writer of it may have his dues.

Rev. J. J. Tigert has resigned his chair in Vanderbilt University, and transferred to Southwest Missouri Conference, and, it is said, goes to Walnut Street Church, Kansas City.

Those papers which have been fulminating in the editorial columns against the Lottery and speaking for it in their advertising columns can no longer straddle the fence.

Zion's Herald, in a lengthy leader, argues that fasting as a Christian duty can not be proved by the teachings of the New Testament.

A contributor to one of our exchanges says, "There are some folks who seem to measure their spiritual stature and growth by their ability to make prayer meetings and class meetings uncomfortable for other folks." Too true!

An exchange gives this bit of advice: After you have weighed your neighbor in the balance, drop a nickel of fairness in the slot of self-examination and ascertain your own moral avoirdupois.

A presiding elder writes: "At each Quarterly Conference I stress the ADVOCATE subscription, and the brethren try to do their duty—in some instances." We have to work for the paper, like we work for anything else, continuously. This presiding elder pursues a good plan "at each Quarterly Conference."

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. Hervie Mellard writes: "Held a meeting at Springfield, La., September 13 and 18, which was of great power. Bro. Mitchel, of the ADVOCATE, was with us three days, and preached with the strength of the Spirit. Bro. Boyes, of Ponchatoula, La., was of much service also. Results: the church greatly strengthened, several conversions and eleven accessions."

—Rev. M. J. Miller, writing from Trenton, Miss., says: "We have just closed a good meeting at Trenton. Results: 14 accessions, the church greatly revived, and 5 have taken up the cross of public prayer. To God be all the glory now and evermore! I thank God and the brethren who assisted me in the work, and take courage. Pray for us. God bless you and the ADVOCATE!"

—Rev. E. T. Donson reports from Live Oak circuit, Mississippi Conference: "Everybody is praising God at Live Oak to-night. The joy of salvation has been restored unto the church, and sinners have been converted unto God. Forty-four accessions at this place added to the thirty-six at Pine Grove give us a total of eighty on this charge so far this 'quarter.' 'Praise ye the Lord.'"

—Rev. H. L. Vaughn writes of Pope station, Miss.: "I have completed my round of protracted meetings, resulting in 21 conversions, and 25 additions to our church. The temperature considerably raised in the spiritual thermometer of the membership, I trust, to such a height that it will not fail when winter comes on. We have had a good time this year; a kind, good people to serve. We are attending to the Master's work as best we can. Expecting a good time on College Day."

—Rev. D. L. Cogdell writes as follows: "Since my last report of the good work on the Carrollton circuit, North Mississippi Conference, we have received 51 into the church; 21 adults and 10 children have been baptized."

—Rev. G. R. Ellis writes from Talisheek: "Through the mercies of God I am on foot again from a hard spell of sickness. Preached yesterday my first sermon since I was taken sick, in a new church erected on the work since our last Quarterly Conference. My sickness has thrown me back considerably with my work, but hope to catch up before the close of the year. You have no idea how grateful I feel to God that I am again permitted (from the sacred stand) to talk to the people of Jesus' wondrous love. Pray for me, that I may be a more useful man than ever before."

—Rev. T. B. White writes from Mansfield, La.: "I write to ask the prayers of God's people for and in behalf of our meeting, which commences here with Rev. Dr. Godbey, of Kentucky, September 28, and to be joined by the Louisiana Holiness Association, October 6, and to continue indefinitely. We need a revival of Holy Ghost religion. Ezekiel's vision is pertinent. 'The valley which was full of bones.... and behold, there were many in the open valley; and lo! they were very dry.... Come from the four winds, O breath, and breathe upon these slain, and they shall live.' Pray for us."

—Rev. J. L. P. Sheppard writes us as follows from Homer, La.: "I have been engaged for two weeks past in meetings at Arizona and Lisbon. We had gracious seasons at both places, and especially at Arizona was the power of God manifest. Quite a number of conversions, and the whole church quickened. Family altars will be the rule, I trust, and not the exception. I am, at the present writing, engaged in a meeting at Homer. I expect Bro. Faunt LeRoy to-night. It has been raining here every day for a week. Farmers complain of damage to the cotton. Homer is still growing; carpenters and masons are all busy. Our schools have opened finely here and at other places in the parish. God speed the cause of education!"

—Rev. H. P. Lewis writes: "The Lord is taking our young people. Less than four weeks ago, Bro. Covert Wilkins was called away; now, September 20, Sister Nellie Swayze, a good young lady, seventeen years of age, daughter of O. H. and Alice Swayze, is gone—both good and true Christians. Nellie joined the church a little over a year ago, since which time she has taken a deep interest in Sunday-school and church. God bless the bereaved family, and comfort them in this dark hour! We are in the midst of a protracted meeting here in Benton. This is the third time we have been called to bury the dead while engaged in protracted meetings this summer. Who next? Bros. Watkins, Woodward, Drake and Reagan have rendered good service in our meeting. God bless these brethren! Our meeting has not been what we hoped it would be, yet much good has been done. We have had some of the best preaching I ever listened to. May it prove to be seed sown in good ground! How we need a great awakening among our people! Lord, send it."

Notice.

To the Preachers of the Greenville District, North Mississippi Conference—

Brethren: By order of Bishop Galloway, the twelfth of October has been appointed as "Millsaps College Day." The wisdom of this appointment can not be questioned. It is the work of an ecclesiastical strategist, who knows when and how to strike. Let us make this a red-letter day by preaching on "Christian Education," and taking collections for the college. The district is already alive with interest for this great enterprise of the church. Succeed we must, and succeed we will. Let all pull, and all together.

R. M. STANDEFER.

GREENVILLE, Miss.

Amen!

I desire to record my "amen" to Bro. Black's timely and able article on "The Service of Song," in the last ADVOCATE. I hope that every preacher and Sunday-school superintendent will read and re-read it. Preachers and people need stirring up on the importance of using our own inestimable hymn book in all of our church services. I, with many others, thank Bro. Black, and hope that he will write again on the same topic.

A Missionary Supported by the Mississippi Conference.

In the Missionary Reporter, of August, last, there is an editorial about a column long—"Fifty Missionaries for China"—from which I make the following extract. Rather lengthy, I admit; but no less of it will bring the matter properly before our minds. Speaking of the call for "fifty missionaries for China," Dr. John says:

The United States alone out of its 80,000 preachers could easily spare 1,000 men for this field. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, out of its 4,000 itinerant preachers could easily spare the fifty for whom Dr. Parker calls. With its 1,200,000 members, Southern Methodism can easily bear the burden of their support.

To send a single missionary to China and support him for one year will cost $1,200.

There are men in our church who could spare that sum from their income, and not surrender a single luxury. There are some churches in our connection well able to assume the support of a missionary in addition to the support of their pastor. There are Conferences that could sustain a score of missionaries if the heart of every preacher was aflame with zeal for the spread of the Redeemer's kingdom. "As much as in me is," was the measure of the great apostle's endeavors when his eye looked out on the great mission field. When will that spirit move the hearts of the preachers and people of our day?

When I read those three paragraphs the thought came to me like an inspiration, Why can not the Mississippi Conference, with its 128 pastoral charges, 140 itinerant preachers (including superannuates, etc.) and 36,000 members, support a missionary in one of our foreign fields in addition to its regular claims? I believe there are many of these pastoral charges that would gladly join in this work if it were properly presented, and I know that wherever we have a missionary spirit in our Sunday-school superintendents, we could get a hearty response from that portion of our 16 000 Sunday-school scholars.

In the first editorial of the September number of the Reporter we find it will take $750 a year to support an unmarried man, and $1,200 a married man, in one of our fields. We preachers ourselves, totally independent of assistance from the church, ought to meet this claim. The total amount paid for ministerial support in the Mississippi Conference last year was $64,225 43. Waiving for the present all arguments to the contrary, I believe the Lord requires of us one-tenth of our income. Then of this $64,225 43, $6,422 54 is the Lord's.

Every preacher in the Mississippi Conference could pledge himself for $10 a year, and raise it from his congregation, if possible; and that is far preferable; or, failing in this, pay it himself, and we have the amount secured.

I know it will be said that some of our preachers are on poor circuits, and barely get a living, and, therefore, could not afford it. God made no distinction in his tithe law under the Mosaic dispensation between rich and poor, and he doesn't do it now. The reason so many of us have such a hard time getting along in this world is, we borrow the Lord's money and never pay it back, and this is one way he has of getting even with us. "Be sure your sin will find you out," is as true to-day as when Moses uttered it thirty-five hundred years ago. I hold that no man, preacher or layman, rich or poor, has any right to spend the one tenth of his income, however small, on himself or family; it is the Lord's. Give it to him, and he "will render double unto thee" (Zechariah ix, 12). No man in the Mississippi Conference, with two exceptions; received less than $100 last year, and then missionary appropriations raised these salaries to from $200 to $250. There is, therefore, no one of us but who could afford to pledge himself for this amount; raise it if possible, or pay it to the Lord out of his portion.

Brethren, what say you to this?

Port Gibson Female College.

The friends of Port Gibson Female College will be glad to know of the successful beginning of the present session. The college opened last Tuesday, the sixteenth instant, with the largest enrollment in its history of many years. Pupils are coming daily, and others are expected. The prospects of the college were never so good as they are now. All departments are filled with competent teachers, while Miss Compton brings to her position, as president, the highest energy, judgment, capacity and all the qualities requisite for successful management.

Our Young People.

SUCH A MISTAKE.

I once knew a young dog, most aristocratic,
On questions of pedigree quite a fanatic;
He would hold up one paw,
And tell you, "Why, law!
He's the most ill-bred creature that ever I saw;
He doesn't know what his great-grandparents were;
He hasn't the spirit of an average rat;
He is nothing at all in the world but a cur,
And the wretchedest kind of a cur at that!"

One day in the drawing-room languidly strolling,
His eyes round in search of acquaintances rolling,
Pray, what should he see
But a dog, whose degree
Was clearly as vulgar and low as could be;
His coat was of dirty white, mottled with yellow;
So rough and unkempt, so unlike his own;
He was fat and bow-legged, a most ill-looking fellow,
Of the sort that would quarrel for half a bare bone.

He had, too, a weazened, ill natured expression,
As though he were suffering acute indigestion;
Said the young dog, "Oh! dear;
How did he get in here?
The footman's neglected his duty, that's clear,"
And he growled as he walked away, stately and slow:
"Oh! society's come to a terrible pass!"
For how in the world was the young dog to know
'Twas himself he had seen in a long looking glass? — Wide Awake.

A Boy's Hands.

What can a boy of fourteen years of age do that will yield him money?

I am looking at the photograph of a boy in Appleton, Wis., of this age. He had become a good penman, and was skillful in map-drawing; he was employed in the office of a surveyor for two months, and was then offered one dollar and fifty cents per day.

This is not an extraordinary looking boy. I believe there are thousands of boys that have hands just as good as his and who would jump at a chance to earn one dollar and a half per day, in a nice, clean office. Yes, there are boys everywhere that are anxious to find something to do, and they need some helping words, and they shall have them.

I have taken some pains to inquire about this boy, and I find that he is very courteous and polite. Now that is sure to be a great point, though you may not think so. For when a man is going to employ a boy he will pick out a polite boy rather than a rude one. You who are looking for employment should study the book of politeness. Some boys have neglected to learn the common rules of politeness, who know their multiplication table perfectly. I know a boy who came into a village and made many friends among the older people in a week's time; he was a very polite boy.

I am told this Wisconsin boy is an earnest, steady boy. You see, a boy who is to be of use to others must have a purpose before him; he must feel that he is going to live in a manly way, in a careful way. What is the main fault in boys? Why, carelessness, of course. I am told this Wisconsin boy is a very careful boy.

But, after all, that boy is going to do something that will be worth a great deal to his employer, for the boy has educated his hands. Now that is very important, and I want every boy who is looking for employment to look at his hands. Have you done so? Then look at them again. What can those hands do for you? If you have not educated them, begin to-day. Can not you train your hands to earn money for you?

This Appleton boy trained his hands to use a pen; so can you. Some years ago, a subscriber to this paper sent in a map that was pinned to the wall of the editor's room. A teacher saw it and offered $5 for a map like it. There was another boy who had learned to use his pen.

I saw a boy in Philadelphia who had carved two panels out of a block of walnut—his first attempt. They were sold for $3. He had learned to use his hands, you see.

I saw a boy in Fresno, Cal., that had learned to set up type at home from an "amateur case," and had been able to get employment and then to travel to that distant town. I suppose he was paid $10 per week, and yet I judge he was only about 17 years of age.

So I counsel boys to stop and think; to think carefully over the matter, and decide what they will teach their hands to do. There is something you can do that will yield you money. To sit down and whine is of no use. Fix on some employment that will be in demand; fix on some one that is not already full. Then determine to be skillful in that. But I ought to tell you that this Appleton boy is intending to stay but a short time in this office; he intends to go to school again. That is wise. Many a boy makes a mistake by giving up going to school and seeking business, for the hands are dependent on the brain. "Successful in school, successful in the world," is the old rule.—Treasure-Trove.

A Brief Harangue on Talking Slang.

This "sermonette" is especially for you, dear girls. The advice could be put in three words—don't do it. Possibly there might come an occasion—say, once in a lifetime—when a good round bit of the genuine article "slang" would prove funny. But to hear vulgar words used by a gentle girl is almost invariably shocking. I remember passing two girls in the street, and hear one of them say, "I'll bet you a quarter." It gave me a shiver. And when a group of school girls fill their conversation—as, alas! they often do—with one slang phrase after another, the effect on an outsider is painfully disagreeable.

The habit of talking slang grows rapidly. It is like reporting a bit of scandal. Have you never noticed if you say an unkind word against a neighbor, how quickly a chance comes to say another? And with just that same appalling ease a habit of using careless coarse words increases. Weeds grow rapidly.

There is plenty of good strong English to give expression to wit, drollery, indignation, or sympathy, without recourse to the phrases which belong to horse-jockeys, gamblers, tipplers, and vagabonds. The street Arab picks up slang as he does the ends of old cigars from the gutter. Surely a well-bred girl is not on the same level in her speech and manner. Why should she use vulgar words any more than she would stain her hands?

There ought to be something akin to flowers in a fresh young girl. She need not be prudish nor priggish. No one wishes her to say 'prunes and prisms" to coax her lips into the proper curves. But refined and dainty in speech as well as in dress she surely ought to be. Won't you please think about it for five minutes, and see if you do not agree with me?—Harper's Young People.

A Funny Problem.

It was a warm, sleepy afternoon, and the scholars in Miss Plummer's school looked and acted as if they wished four o'clock would hurry along.

The class in mental arithmetic were lazily droning through their lesson, when Deacon Day popped his cheery face in at the door. All the children loved him, and were glad when he came to visit the school.

Perhaps he saw they needed something to wake them up, so when the class was through with the lesson, he gave them this problem.

"If eighteen cows were going through a narrow gate where only one could pass at a time, which cow could look back and say: 'There are eleven pairs of horns behind me?'"

The class thought busily for a minute; then up came Tommy Tuft's hand.

"Which one, Tommy?" asked the deacon.

"The seventh."

"No."

Another minute of study, then Celia Brown put up her hand.

"What do you think, Celia?"

"I think it might be the eighth, for when the cow turned her head to look back, her own horns would be behind her, wouldn't they?"

"No; it isn't the eighth," the deacon said.

About this time little Johnny Hartshorn, on the front seat, began to snicker.

"What are you laughing at, Johnny?" asked Miss Plummer.

"Cows—can't talk!" giggled Johnny.

Deacon Day laughed, too, then.

"Johnny has answered it;" he said. "None of the cows could do it, of course."

Then all the scholars laughed and woke up for the rest of the day, and Deacon Day bowed himself out.—M. C. W. C., in Companion.

Young Tommy is a very talkative boy. The other day his uncle promised him ten cents if he would go an hour without speaking a word. Tommy wanted the dime very bad, and set out bravely to keep perfectly still from five to six o'clock. He watched the clock very uneasily and eagerly, however. By and by the hands pointed to 5:30. Tommy looked up, and exclaimed at the top of his voice: "Well, half of the time's gone, anyway!"

Household.

Restlessness among Women.

One outcome of the increasing activity of women in the world of affairs is a restlessness among those confined to domestic circles who have no special gift for work outside. They hear of women in colleges, women in the professions; they know of women following pursuits that were once the exclusive province of men, and they are uncomfortably conscious of their remoteness from such distinction.

"I do not want to spend my life cooking and washing dishes," protest these malcontents. When asked what they would do instead of housework, the answer is vague and purposeless from the fact that they have neither natural not acquired ability for other work. When such women yield to discontent they either develop into slatterns of the most pronounced type in dress and work, or spending all they have for personal adornment, promenade the streets, haunt the dry goods shops and essay to be butterflies with neither beauty nor usefulness as an excuse for being.

There are other women who chafe under the bondage of domestic life because they desire to cultivate some especial gift. One has a passion for music, or a taste for painting; another has thoughts that burn for expression through the pen; still another has an aptitude for teaching, or a craving for knowledge. The daily demands of the family preclude an indulgence of these tastes, and in time smooth brows take on lines of discontent and sweet voices grow querulous. The round of domestic duty is performed with fidelity, but there is little joy in it when the soul of the worker is not in the work.

For both sets of restless women there is a remedy: Correctly classify and value domestic work.

It is not true that housework is unfitting a lady; that any work, considered as work, is degrading. To the woman who has thought herself clear on the subject an idle, aimless life is shameful. She believes that she should do a share of the world's work, and that the work bounded by the kitchen walls is as honorable as any outside them. The home depends on it, and the home is the foundation of all that is best in the family, in society, and in the State. The woman who, by her fidelity to what is called menial work, achieves a well-conducted, happy, love-enshrining home, though her hands are red and her nails worn to the quick, is worthy of all honor. She is honored by the few, and it depends on herself whether the world, also, shall honor her. If every woman whose duty binds her to the kitchen would magnify her office by herself, believing in the importance and dignity of her work, it would not be long before others would acknowledge it. A grander result would be the change from useless discontent to a life of conscious usefulness, better work, and a greater sum of human happiness. The quickened spirit, moreover, might find a way to taste of other springs of joy and satisfaction. Who knows?—The Housewife.

HARD THOUGHTS OF GOD.—The devil seeks to lay burdens on us: hard thoughts of God; doubts; distrustful worry about having failed, made mistakes, etc.; all that robs us of a childlike confidence in God, all this is the devil's work. The ideal childlike state is, to go back to our Father at once, when we have grieved him, and say: "Father, I have sinned; I am heartily sorry; forgive me, for Jesus Christ's sake;" but not for a moment to let the thought remain, "I am not forgiven."

"What! fallen again? Yet cheerful rise; Thine Intercessor never dies."

Do not be so conceited as to be surprised when you have fallen. Say to yourself: "It only shows me what I am, and how great is thy love. I come back to thee, 'just as I am,' and I believe in that love."—Wilkinson.

As much miracle a straw, so does beauty admiration, which only lasts while the warmth continues; but virtue with its goodness and real worth, like well-tried gold, never lose their power. Scientific.

Storms and Cloudbursts.

Neither dikes nor reservoirs could prevent the ravages of sudden floods, and no naval architect has thus far devised a plan for the construction of a completely storm-proof ship, but experience has at least taught us to avoid perils which we can not resist. The meteorological observatories of sixteen different nations have been very busy in the course of the last fifty years, and if the direction of a storm could be predicted as successfully as its imminence, disastrous floods and hurricanes would rarely come unexpected. A gale originating in the plains of Western Kansas, and keeping a straight eastward course as far as St. Louis, Missouri, may suddenly turn southwest on striking the valley of the Mississippi, and thus save Ohio and Pennsylvania from the predicted visitation. Rain clouds that have discharged their torrents all along the Gulf coast from Tampico to New Orleans and drenched the plains of Alabama, may refuse their showers to the table-lands of Northern Georgia, and dissolve away into fleecy specks of vapor where their moisture was perhaps most sorely needed in a more condensed form. The most approved indications of rain may prove delusive in mid-summer; still the observations of many years have facilitated the art of weather-prediction by quite a number of tolerably reliable general rules. Thus storms have been found to have a tendency to blow from regions of high to regions of low barometrical pressure, and to be preceded by a rise and followed by a depression of temperature. North of the equator the curves of cyclones turn from right to left; on the Southern Hemisphere from left to right, and often seem to spend their fury in the foot hills of a high mountain-range, but manage to resume their work of devastation on the plains beyond. Counter-currents have a tendency to delay, rather than neutralize, far-traveled gales, and only a few months ago four steamers and a multitude of sailing vessels were saved by the official meteorologist of Singapore, who kept his storm signals hoisted in spite of all temporary appearances of clearing skies, till on the third day the retarded storm burst with a fury sorely rued by all vessels that had disregarded the prediction.—Dr. Felix L. Oswald.

Thunder.

One of the most terse and succinct descriptions of a natural phenomenon is that recently given by M. Hirn, in which he says that the sound known as thunder, is due simply to the fact that the air traversed by an electric spark—that is, a flash of lightning—is suddenly raised to a very high temperature, and has its volume, moreover, considerably increased. The column of gas thus suddenly heated and expanded is sometimes several miles long, and as the duration of the flash is not even a millionth of a second, it follows that the noise bursts forth at once from the whole column, though from an observer in any one place it commences where the lightning is at the least distances. In precise terms, according to M. Hirn, the beginning of the thunder-clap gives us the minimum distance of the lightning, and the length of the thunder-clap gives us the length of the column. He also remarks that when a flash of lightning strikes the ground it is not necessarily from the place struck that the first noise is heard. Again, he points out that a bullet whistles in traversing the air, so that we can, to a certain extent, follow its flight; the same thing also happening with a falling meteorite just before striking the earth. The noise actually heard has been compared to the sound produced when one tears linen. It is due really to the fact that the air rapidly pushed on one side in front of the projectile, whether bullet or meteorite, quickly rushes back to fill the gap left in the rear.—Scientific American.

BUT if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin.—I. John i, 7.

"Seeing is Believing."

And the best lamp ever made, like Aladdin's of old, a "wonderful lamp!" A lamp absolutely non-explosive and unbreakable, which gives a clear, soft, brilliant white light of 85 candle power! Purer and brighter than gas light, softer than electric light, more cheerful than either! That lamp is

"The Rochester."

And with it there is no smoke, no smell, no broken chimneys, no flickering, no sweating, no climbing up of the flame, no "tantrums" nor annoyance of any kind, and it never needs trimming. Its founts (oil reservoirs) being tough rolled seamless brass, with central draft, it is absolutely unbreakable, and as safe as a tallow candle.

Only five years old, and over two million of these lamps in use. It must be a GOOD lamp to make such a telling success. Indeed it is, for lamps may come and lamps may go, but the "Rochester" shines on forever! We make over 2,000 artistic varieties,—Hanging and Table Lamps, Banquet, Study, Vase and Piano Lamps,—every kind, in Bronze, Porcelain, Brass, Nickel and Black Wrought Iron.

Ask the lamp dealer for it. Look for the trade-mark stamp: "THE ROCHESTER." If he hasn't the genuine Rochester and the style you want, or if no lamp-store is near, send to us for free illustrated catalogue (and reduced price-list), and we will box and send you any lamp safely by express, right to your door.

FAULK—Death has once more been in our midst, and called to his eternal home Bro. DAVID FAULK, Sr.—one of the oldest members of the West Monroe charge. Bro. Faulk was born on July 2, 1817, in Ouachita parish, La. He never left his native parish. In Ouachita he fought the battles of life, universally loved and honored by all who knew him, as an honest man and a Christian gentleman. His house was the home of the itinerant preacher. Many of the preachers of the Louisiana Conference remember the hearty welcome and the prophet's room in this Christian home. Bro. Faulk was twice married. He first married Miss Lucy J. Knox, who preceded him to the better world many years. His second marriage was with Margaret O. Wiseman, who still survives him. Bro. Faulk united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, when he was a young man, and served the church as steward, Sunday-school superintendent and trustee, and was faithful in all entrusted to him.

He was truly the friend of the preacher and God. He knew God in the pardon of his sins, and loved to tell "what great things God had done for his soul." Bro. Faulk loved to commune with God; therefore, he was a praying man, he had his family altar, from which prayers ascended to God, morning and night, with great fervor and devotion with his family. He was an affectionate husband, a devoted father, a true friend, a kind neighbor, a good citizen and a zealous Christian. He loved his church and her doctrines.

Owing to his extreme age, his mind commenced to fail him, his memory was bad; but at no time did it seem that he ever forgot Jesus and his duty to his Lord. His sickness was protracted. I visited him on one occasion. I asked him was he ready, if it was the Lord's will to take him. His remarks were, "That has been the chief object of my life to prepare for death." I again asked him if Jesus was with him. He said, "If it was not for him, I could not bear my sickness." On another occasion I called on him. He knew me, but could not call my name. I asked him did he know Jesus. He said, "Yes, for many years." At various times during his sickness, even when his mind would seem to be gone, he would get up. When asked what he wanted, he would say to hold prayers. He would take his seat, while one of his sons would read a portion of God's Word. At the close he would bow with reverence and with fervor, and pray for each member of his family. I visited him a short while before he died. I saw his hearing was giving way. I told his wife to prepare for the worst; that God had commenced to tear down the old tabernacle; that he was closing the shutters. Like David of old, he had served his generation, and on August 17, 1890, he fell on sleep at the ripe old age of seventy-three years one month and fifteen days. He awaits the trump of God, to summon him to his home in the city of God. May his mantle fall on his sons!

C. T. MUNHOLLAND.

BICKHAM—THOMAS W. BICKHAM was born in Washington parish, La., December 29, 1827. He joined the Methodist Church under the ministry of the Rev. James H. Shelton in 1851, and was converted soon after at an annual meeting at Warner's Camp Ground, in the same parish. In his young manhood he was happily married to a daughter of Judge Lemuel Lewis, of Marion county, Miss., who, with several children, survive to mourn the loss of a good husband and father.

He was industrious in his habits, upright in his life, charitable in his disposition, and hospitable in his home. Ever ready to extend a helping hand to the needy, liberal according to his means in the support of the institutions of the church, he was known as a good man among the citizens of Zion. He delighted to have his pastor and other ministers in his home, and it was equally pleasant to them to rest under his hospitable roof, and mingle with the members of his Christian family. But he has gone from us to a better world. He fell on sleep, June 25, 1890. May his wife and children, in the consolations of the gospel, follow on, and meet him again in heaven to part no more forever!

W. B. LEWIS.

HAMILTON—SUSAN HAMILTON, daughter of Samuel and Francis Rutledge, was born in Alabama, May 15, 1810, and died at her home, Hazlehurst, Miss., June 27, 1890, aged fifty years one month and twelve days. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, in early life. She was married to G. B. Hamilton, December 14, 1859, and was the mother of nine children—four dead and five living. She was an affectionate and indulgent mother. Her illness was short, her death was sudden; but from the life she lived and the remarks she made to her daughter a few days before her death, we have all reason to believe that she has gone to that home where death and parting will be no more. May the God that comforts the hearts of those that mourn comfort the heart of the bereaved husband, and bless the heart-broken children, and bring them an unbroken family around his throne!

R. J. FAIRCHILD.

LEWIS—Died, in Opelousas, La., Friday morning, August 22, 1890, CHARLES WILLIAMS LEWIS, second son of Thomas H. Lewis, aged twenty-two years ten months and sixteen days.

Charlie was a promising young lawyer, in co-partnership with his father at the time of his death, and taking high rank among those of his profession at the Opelousas bar. Cut off in the very bloom of a promising young manhood, his death has cast a gloom over the business affairs of his father especially, who regarded him as his eyes and his hands. May our heavenly Father sustain and comfort him and his afflicted family in their great loss!

Charlie was a good son; always affectionate to his parents, never in his life giving them a disrespectful word or look. He had a most kind, forgiving disposition, careful never to wound the feelings of others, and quick to forgive and forget an injury done him by anyone. During the whole period of his painful illness he never complained, though his sufferings were intense, and constantly manifested the most grateful feelings to the kind friends and relatives that ministered to him. Just before he breathed his last he thanked the physicians and friends who nursed him.

He attended Sabbath-school in the Methodist Church at Opelousas when a small boy, and the lessons he learned there came back to him in his dying moments. When asked if he was afraid to die, he answered, No; and when asked by his father if at that moment he trusted in God, he answered that he did, and that he had not forgotten the precepts of his childhood. He seemed to have unquestioning faith that he was going to heaven.

Charlie was held in high esteem by the community at large, and his funeral services were largely attended by all classes. May the death of this promising young man lead the afflicted family to a holy life and to heaven is the prayer of their PASTOR.

DELBRIDGE—A brother beloved has departed to his home in heaven. Very early in the morning of July 7, 1890, the summons came to J. D. DELBRIDGE, at his residence in the vicinity of Oxford, Miss. He had retired in his usual good health. One sharp pain was all he suffered in his quick passage across the dark river.

The deceased was born in Brunswick county, Va.; married Miss Jane C. Collier, who survives him. They lived together over fifty years. God gave them six children—five sons and one daughter. His was the first death in the family. He moved to Lafayette county about 1845. He was seventy-one years six months and twelve days old.

Bro. Delbridge was a man of unblemished character; of unwavering fidelity to his obligations to God and man. He did what he could to honor his divine Master and to promote his cause. He had the good-will and confidence of all men; yet he was known to be against evil and for the good, the true, the pure always. He was a strong, true, good man—a man of God, whether at home, in the church, in business, or in society. His whole life was an ornament to his church and an example to all. He used hospitality towards all men. For many years he lived in Oxford, where he was host, affable and kind, to many students of the university who boarded in his house. To them this notice will bring the shadow of a true sorrow for the death of their friend. Especially will this be so to some who found favor at his hands in their struggle to get through college; and to the preachers who, as students, were drawn to that house by the warm hearted Christian sympathy they found in Bro. and Sister Delbridge. To his pastor he was always the genuine friend and true helper. A noble life was his here; an immortal crown is his above the stars.

W. T. J. SULLIVAN.

WILKINS—J. COVERT WILKINS, son of William and Lou Wilkins, was born in Benton, Miss., July 7, 1870, and died August 26, 1890. Covert, as he was familiarly called, joined the Methodist Church under the ministry of Rev. Inman W. Cooper, at Bowman's Chapel, in the year 1884, and lived a consistent Christian life.

He was a model young man; highly esteemed by all who knew him, liberal in the support of the church, a friend to all, both rich and poor. He was exceedingly kind to his widowed mother, his brother and sisters. He was the light of his home.

He was one of the brightest and best Sunday-school scholars, never absent from his post of duty purposely. He was our Sunday-school secretary here in Benton until December last, when he moved to Deasonville, near New Hope Church. He was soon elected Sunday-school secretary in New Hope Sunday-school, which office he filled with perfect satisfaction until he left that community in July. He went to Greenville, Miss., to keep books for Messrs. Heard & Co., which position he filled with ability up to the time of his sickness and death.

When the summons came, he was ready and willing to go. Funeral services were conducted by Rev. John W. Chambers at the residence of Judge R. Bowman, in Yazoo City. The sympathy of our entire community is extended to his grief-stricken mother and family in their bereavement.

H. P. LEWIS.

The Clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders.

The Episcopal Diocese, of New York, has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and the Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

GRANT'S FURNITURE STORE

NEW STORE, AT 114 Camp St. NEW ORLEANS. NEXT DOOR TO ADVOCATE OFFICE.

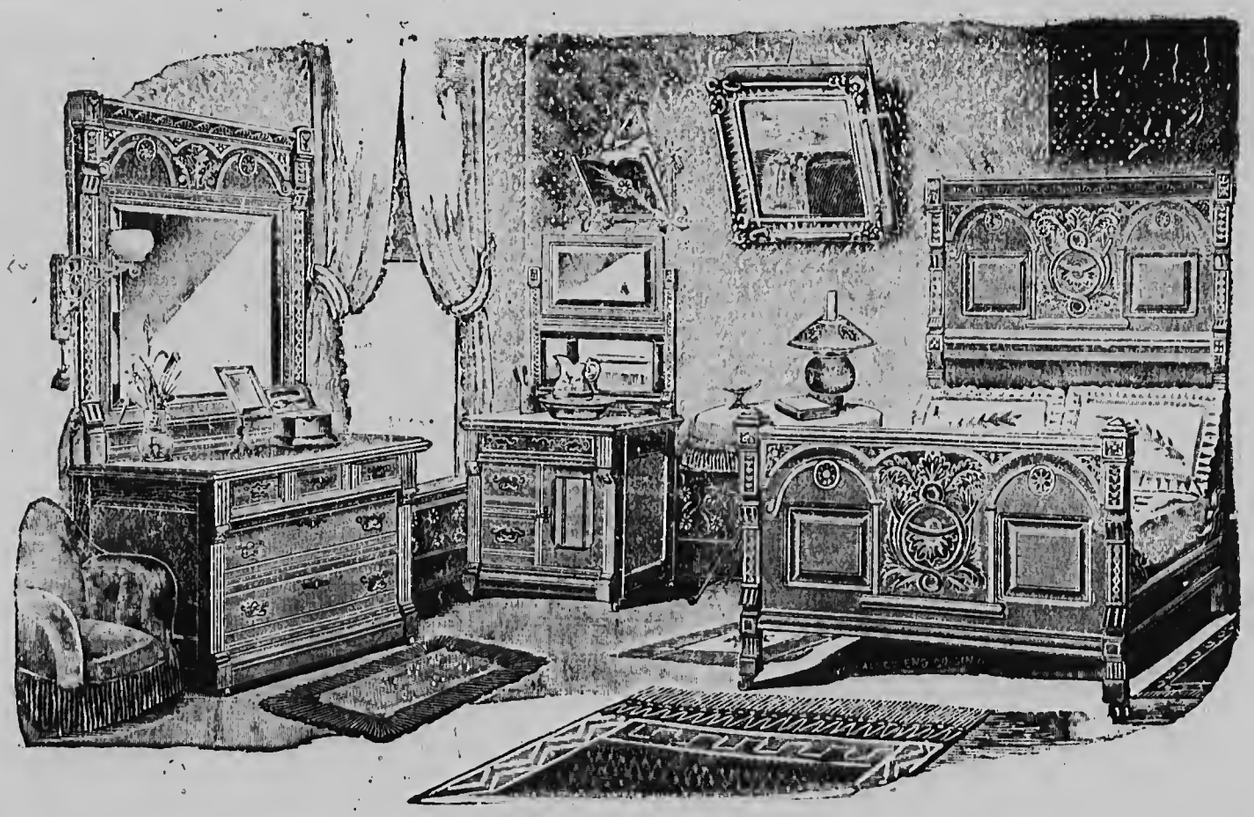
BEAUTIFUL PARLOR GOODS.

I have one entire floor devoted to the display of these goods alone, and have over sixty different varieties to select from. Complete Suits anywhere from $35 to $650, and odd pieces—such as Sofas, Divans, Easy Chairs, Patent Rockers, Window and Reception Chairs—at as low prices in proportion as the Complete Suits. I have these goods in Cherry, Mahogany and Walnut, and can give you your choice of any of the following coverings: Crushed, Embossed, Plain and Silk Plushes, Hair Cloth, Mohair, Raw and Spun Silks, Satins, English Tapestries, French Valours, Petit Point, Brocatelle or Damasks. I make a specialty of these goods, have many of the patterns made specially for my own trade, and can offer a greater variety at lower prices than any other house in the South.

NEW STOCK

In all departments, and every grade of goods, from the cheapest to the most expensive, in endless variety. I have all the latest and most fashionable designs, and, as I have only purchased from factories whose goods I have been selling for the past six years, can and do guarantee every piece of Furniture that leaves my establishment.



LOW PRICES

are the order of the day, and I propose to sell strictly reliable goods at a lower price than has ever before been quoted in the South. My store has long been known as "The Cheapest Furniture House in New Orleans," and this season I intend to add to the reputation it has gained in this respect. I only ask a chance to save you money.

HANDSOME BEDROOM SUITS.

A very extensive assortment of these goods in every style; and whether you wish to pay $10 for a Complete Suit of twelve pieces, or from that price anywhere up to $1,000, I can sell you what you require. I have these goods in Black Walnut, Natural and Dark Cherry, and Natural and Dark Mahogany, or in imitation of any of these woods, and can furnish the very latest, neatest and most artistic designs.

I have also a large and carefully selected stock of Hall, Library, Dining-room and Kitchen Furniture; Reed, Rattan and Wicker Chairs, Rockers, Lounges and Cribs; Brackets, What-nots, Easels, Music Stands and Fancy Top Tables; Carpets, Carpet Strips, Matting, Shades, Curtains, Curtain Poles, and everything necessary to furnish a house completely throughout.

LARGE SALES.

I have a large city trade, and am shipping goods extensively to every Southern State. My country trade has increased very rapidly during the past year, and the facilities which my new store affords me for carrying a larger and better stock will enable me to still further extend it, and to give complete satisfaction to my customers.

GREENVILLE DISTRICT.

There will be a district meeting in the interests of the Woman's Missionary Society at Rosedale, October 8. Mrs. Hargrove will preside. Every charge in the district is invited to send a representative. Every auxiliary in the district is urgently requested to send a delegate.

Preachers of the district are invited, and I especially ask them to encourage a full attendance of delegates and visitors.

All who expect to attend will please notify Rev. W. W. Woollard, Rosedale. MRS. ROBT. SOMERVILLE, District Secretary.

A GREAT WAY TO MAKE MONEY.

MR. EDITOR:

The "help or the talents" plan of raising money for mission work was new to me, but our Mission Band each agreed to Invest $3.00. Some always made wonderful investments, but I felt sure I could not even double my "talent." During the week, while reading your paper, I concluded to buy a Plater. I sent $3 00 to W. H. Griffith & Co., Zanesville, Ohio, got a Plater, and went to work plating spoons, knives, forks and jewelry, and in a month I had cleared $116.40, and done all the work after school; in three months I cleared $406. One of the girls got a Plater, which her brother has been using to plate band instruments and large articles. He is doing splendid. In this way you can not only be generous to the mission, but do much to assist at home. This is certainly a rare chance to make money with ease and rapidity.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The cigar makers of New York—most of them young women—who have been out on a strike for three months, are beginning to feel poverty in its worse form. Many are actually suffering for want of bread. Still they will not return to work for the present wages. Committees have been appointed to solicit aid from unions in various cities, but thus far the appeal has been made in vain.

Chicago is making a crusade against the smoke nuisance. A city ordinance require the use of appliances in all furnaces to prevent the emission of smoke and soot; but, as little attention has been paid to it, the city attorney has been prosecuting conspicuous offenders.

The Anti-Lottery bill was signed by President Harrison on September 19. He also signed the River and Harbor bill on the same day.

The Pottsville Express, on the Reading railroad, while rounding a curve, seventeen miles west of Reading, Pa., on September 19, was thrown, with its human freight, down an embankment into the Schuylkill river. Twenty persons were killed and fifty wounded.

A massive statue in bronze of Horace Grecly was unvailed, on September 20, by Miss Gabriel Grecly, the daughter of the great editor, before an assemblage of several thousand people. The statue stands under the arch of the Tribune building, and was erected by his associates in that office.

A meeting of the Mississippi River Commission has been called by Gen. Comstock, to meet in New York City, October 1.

In compliance with the Anti-Lottery law, excluding from the mails all newspapers containing advertisements of lotteries, the papers of this city issue two editions—a "mail edition," from which all such matter is omitted, and a "local edition," sold in this city and on trains and vessels, but not intended for mailing, which contain the usual display of the Louisiana State Lottery.

An excursion train in Chicago was run into by a switch engine, on September 21. About five persons were killed and many seriously wounded.

Farmers are losing large numbers of hogs by cholera in the vicinity of Spring Valley, Ohio, and the prevalence of the disease is reported west of there to the Big Miami river. If the open weather continues, the epidemic will become widespread, for there is no known cure for hog cholera.

There is some talk among the Republican members of Congress who have been active in procuring the anti-Lottery legislation of endeavoring to secure such amendments of the Interstate Commerce law as will prohibit express companies from carrying lottery mail or funds across State lines.

From the House Indian Affairs committee a bill has been reported to pay $6,211,714 to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations of Indians for title in fee simple to 6,201 633 acres of land in the Indian Territory, being land which the Indians in 1866 leased to the United States for the especial purpose of locating other friendly Indians and freedmen thereon.

The site finally decided upon for the World's Fair, in Chicago, includes Washington and Jackson Parks, the Midway Plaisance connecting them, and the lake front; in all about one thousand acres.

FOREIGN.

A Turkish man-of-war foundered off the coast of Japan, and the crew—500 men—were drowned.

France has entered into a contract to supply the Russian government with an enormous number of rifles. According to the terms of the contract, 500,000 of the weapons will be delivered within eighteen months.

It is said that Austria, France and Italy propose concert of action against the McKinley Tariff bill, also a retaliation is to be effected by placing a general European ban upon American products.

The men who were arrested for taking part in the riotous demonstrations in Sydney, N. S. W., on September 19, have had heavy sentences imposed upon them. Extensive barricades have been erected on the quays to protect the non-union workmen.

Eighty tulle manufacturers at Calais, France, have locked out 5,000 of their employees for demanding higher wages.

A statue of the late Victor Emmanuel was unveiled by his son, King Humbert, at Florence, on September 20.

Violent storms prevailed in Paris and vicinity on September 20. Water spouts were reported in some places, including Marseilles, where a woman and a child were drowned. A thunderbolt destroyed the organ in a Protestant Church at Marseilles. Hail did immense damage to windows. Cyclones swept the departments of Gard and Lozerne, destroying bridges and damaging railways.

In an election riot in the Portuguese city of Goa, India, seventeen persons were killed and many wounded.

Prince Bismarck, in a recent interview regarding the prospect of his return to public life, said that a seat in the reichstag would entail regular attendance and the discomfort of hotel life, but in the Upper House of the Diet he might appear when he chose, and he did not intend to remain idle throughout the winter.

Several prominent Irish nationalists—Messrs O'Brien and Davitt among them—have been arrested and jailed by the government. The charges against them are conspiracy and inciting their countrymen in various localities not to pay their rents.

The men employed in the Berlin factories in which smokeless powder is made have been provided with rubber masks, to protect them from the fumes thrown off by the chemicals entering into the composition of the powder.

The merchants of Belfast are making every endeavor to place as much linen as possible in the United States before the McKinley Tariff bill goes into effect. A steamer which left Liverpool for New York, last week, had on board one of the largest cargoes of linen ever shipped.

NOW the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect in every good work, to do his will, working in you that which is well-pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ; to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen.—Hebrews xiii, 20, 21.

Microscopic Enemies.

The experiments of modern physicians and scientists have established the fact that many of the germs of disease enter the human organism by the inhalation of air laden with these bacteria or microbes. As their name imports, they are very small, but their work is deadly. Still many of these are harmless to a person in health. But if any organ is diseased, it is first attacked. The experiments of Pasteur, Koch and others have shed much light upon this important subject. Up to the present time these researches have benefited science more than humanity, and have proved very destructive to dogs and rabbits. Meanwhile, the "expectant public" are allowed to derive all the comfort possible from this addition to their store of knowledge. As we can do so little to destroy these minute enemies, the most natural and sensible course to take, it seems to us, is to strengthen and revitalize the system, so as to enable it to repel and resist their destructive influence, and it seems also very appropriate that the vitalizing element should enter the system through inhalation. Such a vitalizer is Compound Oxygen. But examine the evidence, and judge for yourself. If you wish to do so, send for our brochure of 200 pages, a Treatise on Compound Oxygen, and giving accounts of many remarkable cures in the most obstinate chronic cases. Sent free. Address DRS. STARKEY & PALEN, 1529 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa., or 120 Sutter St., San Francisco, Cal.

DR. KING'S

Royal Germetuer.

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 2, 1890.

I have been for several years constantly subject to malarial fevers. The best medical treatment has failed to remove from my system the malarial poison that produced them. I have had to use an average of forty grains of quinine per week for years. The fevers would invariably return in a few days. If it was discontinued. The quinine was doing great harm to my nervous system, but I had to keep it up as my only hope. Recently I commenced using Dr. King's Royal Germetuer. It has done me more good than all the medicine I have ever taken. I have not had a fever since commencing its use, nor found it necessary to take a dose of quinine. It has toned my nerves, built up my strength and given me a buoyancy and healthfulness of feeling that I have not known for years. My experience justifies me in saying that this wonderful remedy is all that is claimed for it, if not more.

GEO. G. GARNER.

GRADATIM.

BY JOSIAH GILBERT HOLLAND.

Heaven is not reached at a single bound;
But we build the ladder by which we rise
From the lowly earth to the vaulted skies,
And we mount to its summit round by round.

I count this thing to be grandly true:
That a noble deed is a step toward God,
Lifting the soul from the common clod
To a purer air and a broader view.

We rise by the things that are under feet;
By what we have mastered of good and gain,
By the pride deposed and the passion slain,
And the vanquished ills that we hourly meet.

We hope, we resolve, we aspire, we pray,
And we think that we mount the air on wings,
Beyond the recall of sensual things,
While our feet still cling to the heavy clay.

Wings for the angels, but feet for men;
We may borrow the wings to find the way—
We may hope, and resolve, and aspire, and pray,
But our feet must rise, or we fall again.

Only in dreams is a ladder thrown
From the weary earth to the sapphire walls,
But the dreams depart and the vision falls,
And the sleeper wakes on his pillow of stone.

Heaven is not reached at a single bound;
But we build the ladder by which we rise
From the lowly earth to the vaulted skies,
And we mount to its summit round by round.

Letter No. 20.

NAPLES—ITS BEAUTY—ITS SOCIAL EXTREMES—THE ELEVATION OF SNAP-BEANS—THE NAPLES DONKEY.

There is a saying to this effect, "See Naples, and then die." I have seen the city, and I have no intention of departing this life. The meaning of the proverb, or saying, is, that after you looked on Naples, you have beheld the loveliest combinations of land and water on earth, and that now you might afford to cease to live. You could die saying that nothing so beautiful is any more or anywhere else to be beheld.

This city of four hundred thousand inhabitants, sitting on an amphitheatre of hills, and coming down by steps of terraced gardens and streets to touch the blue, semi-circular bay at its feet, is a beautiful spectacle. Nor is this all. The city wears a diadem of stone on her forehead, called the Castle of St. Elmo. On its right cheek is a dimple called the Island of Ischia, and another dimple on its left cheek named the Island of Capri. At night she throws a cluster of brilliants on her neck. And the Mediterranean Sea forgets to storm in looking far off upon her beauty, while the mighty Vesuvius, as a pillar of cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night, calls the attention of the nations to her as they pass by in distant ships, saying, "Behold the beautiful city of Naples!"

I arrived at midnight; but, before retiring, stepped upon the balcony in front of my room to feast my eyes with a night view. The hotel in which I was stood on the highest street, and so, from my position, I overlooked the city below and the quiet bay. Glancing to the left, I saw what I desired. Vesuvius was there, lifting up his tall form, with a dark, feathery plume blown back from his head, while he fastened one red eye upon Naples. "I am here," he seemed to say. "The towns at my feet are asleep; but I am not asleep. My eye is upon you all." Is it not wonderful that the towns and cities can sleep, while that red, angry eye is looking down the mountain-side upon them!

The expression, "A palace and a prison on each hand," is the statement of a fact not peculiar to Venice, but seen everywhere.

In no place have I seen wider extremes than in Naples. The west end of the street that skirts the bay has the gardens and drives, where the wealthy congregate; and the east end of the same avenue will show you multitudes of barefooted men and women toiling laboriously, painfully for a scanty living. I looked into the streets where they live, and for darkness and narrowness I have never seen them surpassed. Men, women, children, donkeys, baskets, and I know not what, crowded away and back in these cracks of walls, which they compliment and dignify by the name of streets. They are scantily and meanly clothed. The men are burned brown, the women have turned yellow, and the children beg vociferously and pertinaciously.

Such a sight as I saw one morning at an early hour I can never forget. Troops upon troops of poor people flocking into Naples from neighboring villages and the country with their fruits and vegetables, or to go to work in factories or workshops. How poor they looked! What a hard, bitter struggle life seemed to them! My heart ached as I looked at them packing their loads, pushing their carts, and driving their overburdened donkeys along.

In the various cities in which I stop, I put the question, What are you doing to save these people and bring them to Christ? I investigated the matter in Liverpool, London and Paris. In the Waldensian Church in Venice I put the same question to the pastor. Last Sabbath, in this very city of Naples, I asked the Wesleyan missionary what was being done to reach these toiling multitudes. In some places I find a great deal is being done; in others, next to nothing. And I also find, from what my eyes see, that there is work for ten thousand more missionaries than we have in the field.

About twenty or thirty Italians were at religious service in the before-mentioned Wesleyan Chapel. How long will it require to take Naples at this rate?

Dropping into a Catholic Church of moderate size to see if any of the people were there, I found it filled with that hard-working class of the narrow streets, and all staring for dear life at the altar. Did you ever notice how Catholics stare at the chancel? It is all the more surprising when you remember there is only a bowing man there, and a little boy ringing a bell. They have seen the performance a thousand times, and yet, with hungry look, they still gaze. How I trust that out of that jargon and altar gesticulations they, through God's mercy, will get something for the soul.

One of the institutions of Naples is the donkey. He abounds here, but can not be said to flourish. Many of the poor people own one, and it would amaze you to see what they put on that poor, diminutive animal to bear, or hitch to him to draw. I have seen a family of five or six sitting up on a two-wheeled cart, drawn by a donkey that looked little larger than a Newfoundland dog. And at other times I have seen him so covered up by huge panniers, filled with fruits and vegetables and other merchandise, that you could see nothing but his ears and tail. A crowning indignity done this long-suffering animal is that his owner generally grasps him by the tail. I watched to see the reason, and soon discovered that the peasant used it as a kind of rudder, with which to steer the living craft. Almost any hour you can hear them lifting up their voices on the streets; and when a Naples donkey lifts up his voice in real earnest, then let Vesuvius look to its honors as a thunderer. If Mt. Vesuvius should burst forth into an eruption, and one of these Naples donkeys should bray at the same time—well, let us not think of such a catastrophe!

These Italian people who move on hotel planes are great for long dinings. To suit them, possibly, the courses are multiplied until the consumption of time in such a way becomes a positive sin. Moreover, their courses amount to very little. There are never more than two dishes to a course, and oftentimes not more than one. So a hotel dining is really, after all, nothing but a few dishes strung out for over an hour, the clatter of many clean plates, the whisk of napkins, the running of waiters, and a bunch of toothpicks.

The other day, while at the dinner table, a silver-covered dish was brought to me as containing one of the courses. On removing the cover, what do you suppose I saw? A double handful of snap-beans! Not so much as a piece of meat to rest their heads upon, or under which to coil up their long, lean limbs.

Now, suppose you had known in early life a poor, obscure, ordinary youth, and, in travelling, should suddenly find him in the company of nobility passing himself off for some great one. You know well how you would feel on addressing him, or even beholding him. Thus was it I looked on the snap-beans. I mentally ejaculated: "Why, Snap-beans, you know how you are regarded in America, and your social standing there. You know that very few of the high born care for you, and that your true place there is on a tin plate in the kitchen with the servants. And yet here I find you lying in a silver dish and passing yourself off as somebody. Why, Snap-beans, thou friend and acquaintance of my boyhood, how did you get here, and how did you manage to fool these European people?"

Snap-beans as a course at dinner! Whenever people begin to live for the stomach, they at once go into all kinds of absurdities. And when the people of any nation spend much precious money and much still more precious time in feasting, said people are getting to the place where God knocks them down with his providences and tears them to pieces with his judgments. History says this is so, and the Bible says it is so.

B. CARRADINE.

Mr. Grumble.

A CHARACTER SKETCH.

"What's in a name?" somebody has said, and an accusing spirit at our elbow replies: "Often a whole ton of eccentricity and conceit, to say nothing more," and then out of a dark-brown study we emerged into a concept that held our friend Grumble in firm embrace. Ah! he is a friend of the readers, too; it can be seen by that gorgonish attempt at a smile, and we shall, therefore, speak of him in the familiar way that the sewing society has, from time out of mind, been in the habit of discoursing upon the merits and demerits of its absent loved ones. For a long time we have intended to brochure this most constant and faithful friend that we ever had; but as often as we have taken up our pen, it has gone down under the weight of the subject, as though it were no mightier than the hacked blade of Falstaffian [boast, and we have desisted. Even now, coming upon the subject in this furtive manner, there is a preponderosity about it that startles us, and we almost fear that the time is still not sufficiently ripe for the discharge of this debt of gratitude; but nous verrons, as the French say, with a polite bow, when passing a quandary in the road.

The first notable thing that we have to say about our otherwise distinguished friend, Grumble, is, that he belongs to the church. One would rather think, in fact, that the church belonged to Grumble, so patronizingly and persistently does he hold it up to view as his counterfeit presentment, as notion dealers and small grocers signs, which have an allusion, more or less distant, to the wares that they cater. The church is and was his to hide behind in controversy, and much more was it his to smash the pates of his enemies in piping times of peace, or from ambush when on the march. A genius for particularizing the smaller follies of the Lord's people for dual purposes of revenge and reform, and for pouring cold water down the spinality of the brother who is constitutionally predisposed to roses and sunshine, entitles him, indeed, to be called the watch-dog of Zion, and we feel assured that nothing would be esteemed a greater compliment by him. In the whole range of Grumble's acquaintance and the writer's, there was not a saint so irreproachable that he could not muddy him with detraction, or reduce him to ranks with "false praise." He saw a dark side to everything as well to every person. There was never a sermon so "faultily faultless" that he could not find something in it to condemn; and never did there grow a flower of rhetoric upon the bush of human speech so lovely that Grumble could not prick his finger upon its thorn. In fact, Grumble's solemn jeu d'esprit, aimed at the good on the one hand, and the bad on the other, at the dilatory and the ultra-prompt, were veritable poisoned arrows, which have been known to produce disease; and what is disease but the avant courier of death? Yet Grumble never intended murder—no, never! whether we speak of churches or of individuals only; and if death has resulted in any case, it has been like Sitting Bull's massacres—too sporadic to trace. Only in one instance could it be supposed for a moment that this skillful wielder of pointed epigram ever meditated maliciousness, and that was when dealing with his dearly beloved rival, the angel of the church. Upon such occasions he has grown eloquent in denunciation, and piled upon the head of the offender such mountains of rebuke that no disinterested person could view the spectacle without ejaculating, manslaughter! Grumble might be an ordinary comforter to ordinary people, but he was a veritable Job's comforter to his spiritual adviser. This functionary he would rebuke, with a cynic's tone, for short sermons until he preached long sermons, and for long sermons until he preached short sermons; for slow preaching until he became as vehement as Roscius in a tragedy, and then for boisterousness in the pulpit until he saw the absolute necessity of becoming dignified and Ciceronian in his pace; for small congregations until he drove him to a sensational style and to sensational methods, and then for sensationalism until, in fervid reaction, he glowed with invective against itching ears and the like. "Why don't you stir us up?" said Grumble at the weekday meeting; and then on the following Sunday he collared the meek man of perspiration and war-paint as he descended from his Jovian eminence, and demanded a personal explanation for each explosive which his red right hand had administered to the noncombatants below. For too much economy he berated him, and for too little; for preaching about money, and for want of financial instinct; for taking a hand in measures ecclesiastical and political, and for not taking a hand. But if Grumble ever grew eloquent in his self-chosen calling, it was when he discoursed about the church of former days, when pews and aisles could scarce contain the heaven of silks and broadcloths; when the church treasury fairly groaned under a surfeit of specie; and when the inimitable Spur-on rode the pulpit Pegasus with curvet and canter up the flowery heights of Zion. Such comparisons, evoked partly from fancy and partly from memory, meant death to modern competition; and when that hobby came out with a new coat of paint, as it not infrequently did, there was nothing left for the poor victim of circumstances and slander but to hang his head in sadness. Then there was the church in Revivalville, where Grumble's relatives lived, where everything was much better than ordinary in spiritual matters, and where, to use the language of Grumble's bete noir, after a season of rhetorical siege, you would suppose that Pentecost had gone to roost. Grumble would have been on the opposition benches in Parliament, but then he was on the opposition benches out of Parliament, and the deadly enemy of every measure of reform, and of every vote of urgency, whether it came from radicals or conservatives.

But we did not expect to finish our versatile subject at one sitting; and, to make a long story as short as possible, we will say to all who ponder these memoirs of our dear friend, Grumble—who, we omitted to say, not only belongs to the church, but to all the churches—that if they should be forbidden by unfavorable auspices to obtain a sight of him in the world of rewards, they will assuredly hear him in the judgment, and these will be his words, "Lord, I knew thee, that thou art a hard man, reaping where thou hast not sown, and gathering where thou hast not strewed." And we can not dismiss the subject without adding a still sadder reflection, and that is, that long after this venerable foil to our pen, as well as to our ambition, has been laid to his fathers, and his croaking changed to wailing, it will still, for other controlling reasons, be an open question whether Israel suffered more from the eight murmurings, or Egypt from the ten plagues.

Centenary College.

MR. EDITOR: I have recently received the following letter from a friend who has been long and extensively acquainted with educational enterprises. It strikes me as being so full of wisdom, and withal of encouragement to the friends of Centenary, that I have gotten permission to have it published.

The men who "found health, good social influence and religious atmosphere at Jackson, La.," would, were they alive, rejoice to see these blessings still perpetuated at the seat of the college. It would be difficult to find a place where all three co-exist in a higher degree. May the time speedily come when the Lord shall bring the friends of Christian education to realize their high and peculiar calling, and when the church shall freely enlarge her gifts. We need larger means now, because we could use them to greater advantage. We need a spectroscope, a polariscope, a larger telescope—indeed, to have our scope enlarged generally. Many friends have helped us much; these and others will help us much more.

W. L. C. HENNICUTT.

My Dear Doctor: I am delighted to see that Centenary has opened so well. You have infused new life into it, and new hopes into its friends. You are vindicating the true interests of Mississippi Methodism when you build upon a foundation laid by its wisest men—Judge McGehee, Dr. Drake, Dr. Winans, John Lane, Thomas Clinton, John Burruss and William Watkins. The conditions of our church have not essentially changed in Mississippi since these noble persons passed away. They were good citizens of the State; but that did not prevent their extending Conference lines and Conference enterprises a few miles beyond. If by any location within Conference boundaries they could secure the patronage of the valley of the Mississippi and of the fertile lands adjacent to the State, they hesitated not, either through State pride or church narrowness. They sought for health, for good social influence, and for a religious atmosphere in which to train the youth committed to their care. These they found at Jackson, La., some twenty miles, more or less, from the geographical lines which limit Mississippi. They put down a great deal of money to start and carry forward the noble enterprise of a college which should command the support of several Conferences and several States.

Centenary has been and is the only Protestant college of high grade in the Delta of the Southwest.

I trust that you have a good conscience, in that you represent an interest which has been started in the purest endeavors of Christian men to advance the kingdom of Christ; and that you are being recognized as faithful to your trust and their worthy successor. By and by the Lord will raise up friends who will see how free from all political and State bias is the cause of denominational education, and the great necessity laid upon the church to close ranks, to husband her resources and enlarge her gifts, if she would meet the experiments now on foot, and pressed by Legislatures and municipalities, of ignoring the Bible and all Christian training in the schools established for the education of the people. This is the great problem—how to strengthen the morals of the masses upon whom, at last, the well-being and government of the whole country rest.

Centenary has passed through the risks of the war, and the poverty of the reconstruction period, and has now a new current of opposing theories to stem in its straightforward aim to do good and advance Southern Methodism. The Lord strengthen you and its friends!

Thirty Thousand in One Day. Why Not?

A long pull, a strong pull, and a pull all together, on Sunday, October 12, 1890, would put thirty thousand dollars into the endowment fund of Millsaps College. An average of fifty cents per member would make that sum. There are comparatively few so poor they could not give that much; and there are thousands among us who ought to give from one hundred to one thousand times that sum. If each one would do what he ought to do, and easily can do, thirty thousand in clean cash would be added to this endowment in one day, and nobody would be hurt by it, and a good cause would be helped forward. Those who are able to give five hundred, one hundred, and fifty dollars will be guilty of sin if they stop at fifty cents. Those who are able to give fifty cents will be guilty of sin if they give less, or fail to give because the sum is so small. Ability is the measure of obligation in money matters, and in everything else. Of those to whom God has given much money, he requires much—not much sentiment, but much money. Those who have nothing but sentiment may throw that in, and look for the reward. It will come.

Here we are two years trying to raise a sum of money that ought to have been raised in one hour on any given day. It would have been raised in that time for almost any secular or political purpose.

Why make "two bites at a cherry" when one will do? Now, all together, and let the thing be done with a shout. Then our "mouths will be filled with laughter and our tongues with singing."

GILDEROY.

Millsaps College Day—A Final Suggestion.

It gratifies me greatly to learn that Millsaps College Day, October 12, 1890, is to be generally observed throughout the State of Mississippi. Sermons on education will be preached, much instruction given and, I trust, intelligent enthusiasm aroused for the grand consummation of the most important enterprise now before Mississippi Methodism. I am very desirous that every Methodist in the State shall have some part in this great undertaking. I suggest, therefore, that the week before be observed as a week of self-denial in behalf of Christian education, and the fruits of the same be cast into the treasury on the Sabbath. How many hundreds of dollars might be converted into the culture of young preachers if the Methodists of Mississippi would contribute their tobacco bills for one week to the cause, or our families their needless luxuries! The blessings of God will be upon a college built by the self-denials of his people. Let this be our motto for October 12, 1890: A cash collection for the college in every congregation, and some amount from every member.

JACKSON, MISS.

A Warning.

We clip the following "card" from The Mirror, published at Jackson, La. We trust our readers will be on their guard against the book spoken of.

Whereas, Certain persons have been and are now engaged in selling throughout this and adjoining parishes a book entitled "Bible Readings for the Home Circle;" And, whereas, Said persons are selling said book under false impression and imperfect representation of the real character; And, whereas, Many persons have bought said book ignorant of its true character—would not purchase it had its real purport been known; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, pastors and ministers of Christian denominations, desire to warn our people against said books and their venders.

We recognize fully the fact that this is a free country, and that anyone is free to sell any book (provided it be not obscene), and we further recognize the fact that there is a law against obtaining money under false pretenses, and we fail to see why that law is not violated in the sale of a book, the real purpose of which is not revealed, and when that revelation by the venders would prevent the sale of it.

That such has been the case we are assured by parties who have purchased said book. We recognize that this book is a covert attack on the Christian Sabbath, and its purpose is to create and foster a sentiment hostile to all Sabbath legislation, by Congress or otherwise, for the enactment and enforcement of Sunday laws.

We ask, therefore, why our Christian people should aid and abet such a scheme and such schemers, even though presented under such a plausible head as "Bible Readings," etc. We, therefore, most earnestly warn all our people against purchasing said book, or any book, the true character of which is not known.

Meridian District.

Dear Brethren: Do not fail to observe Millsaps College Day, Sunday, October 12. Let cash collections be taken in every Sabbath-school and every congregation in the district on that day. The Brookhaven district, with not more than one-third as much wealth as the Meridian district, has contributed and subscribed over $10,000 to the endowment fund, and we have contributed and subscribed less than $3,000! We ought to do better. Let us make our cash offerings according as God hath prospered us. Let us be liberal and be faithful. God bless you all!

BRIDE OF THE AUTUMN SUN.

BY SARAH K. BOLTON.

O golden rod! sweet golden rod!
Bride of the autumn sun;
Has he kissed thy blossoms this mellow morn,
And tinged them one by one?

Did the crickets sing at thy christening,
When, in his warm embrace,
He gave thee love from his fount above,
And beauty, and cheer, and grace?

He brightens the asters, but soon they fade;
He reddens the sumach tree;
And the clematis loses its sunny bloom,
But he's true as truth to thee.

Scattered on mountain-top or plain,
Unseen by human eye,
He turns thy fringe to burnished gold
By love's sweet alchemy.

And then, when the chill November comes,
And the flowers their work have done,
Thou art still unchanged, dear golden rod,
Bride of the autumn sun.

To the Rev. T. L. Mellen.

Dear Brother in the Ministry: Your sermon on the Sabbath, published in this ADVOCATE, of September 4, and the number preceding it, has been read with more than ordinary interest. It is well-timed. Something of the sort was needed. We are, most of us, getting a little loose on that subject. The line separating convenience from necessity is very flexible, and easily bended the one way or the other. And poor human nature is ready to find necessity in many places where deeper and less partial inquiry would discover nothing but convenience or expediency.

"Necessity" is a word that can not be accurately described, except in its primary and most radical sense, which would mean that the thing could not be otherwise. Secondary necessity has a thousand degrees. A high degree of convenience, or even not very high, is easily elevated into necessity. We need toning up on this subject. Thank you, sir.

There are two different ways of treating this question of Sunday necessity, practically. The one is to lay down express rules in exact terms beforehand. The other is to lay down principles to be observed with religious sanctity, and leave their application to the facts as they arise. Indeed, while the Bible lays down the Sunday law in positive terms—thou shalt, thou shalt not—there is a discretionary proviso implied. I highly approve your religious heroism because you approve it when you remained at the Lord's work, and declined to leave it and go home on the doctor's summons that the child was very sick; but I can imagine a telegram the doctor might have sent under other circumstances, that, I think, would have put you on a Sunday train, or on anything else that would promise the quickest return. We do not always know what we would do until the time comes. No two cases are just alike. Our sense of necessity, as the particular case presents it, must decide ultimately.

In answering objections, in one or two instances, I would have pursued a shorter route. To the objection that Christ annulled the Sabbath, I would object to the admissibility of any testimony with the intention of proving the allegation. Testimony can be introduced only to prove possibilities. Show the impossibility of the thing, and all testimony is barred. An observance of this simple principle in jurisprudence would save us a vast amount of useless debate with our immersion friends.

The divine repeal, or annulment of a divine law, is an absolute impossibility per se. Such a thing would disrupt the moral, social and physical universe, and plunge it into revolutionary ruin. Laws may have difference of application; but a repeal is proof of ignorance either in the enactment or the repeal.

And I would also suggest impossibility to the objection that "we have abandoned the Jewish Sabbath." That is an absolute, natural and scientific impossibility. Testimony can not relate to the proposition.

In making this emphatic statement I am fully aware of the ground I occupy. The question of a change of the Sabbath day was not looked into because it could not be looked into prior to the last two hundred years or so, and since then the subject has not called for scientific examination popularly in all parts of the church; but long since the "change" theory has been abandoned in all scientific and semi-scientific circles in and out of the church.

This "change of the day" does in no wise depend on anything the apostles or anybody else did, said or intended in the early ages of our era. On the one hand they steered entirely clear of the error, for there is not one word in the New Testament in any way relating to such change; and on the other, whether they knew it or not, we know that they had no more power to make such a change for the whole church than you or I have now. They certainly did not stop the diurnal revolution of the earth.

The so-called evidence relied upon by some to show that the apostles changed the day, and, as is alleged, without due authority, is, that in a number of instances there seems to have been some sort of unusual sanctity, here and there, paid to their first day; but this does not even prove that they regarded it as their Sabbath. And, as above suggested, if they had everywhere formally declared the first day the Sabbath, it could, by possibility, have no more than a local, longitudinal application.

If I were writing to a person of small general intelligence, I might proceed to prove this, which would be the easiest thing imaginable to do, to the complete satisfaction of the most uninformed. You see it at a glance. But as this letter is both private and public, and as some of the readers of this paper have not had the advantage of information on such subjects, a few explanatory words might be well.

Nothing is more familiarly known to all extensive navigators, travelers and geographers than what is known as the International Date Line. This line lies in the ocean, and although it has not as yet, unless lately, been located by the different maritime nations, yet all ships sailing east or west know within a few hours of the time they cross it; and that when they cross it they must change their date, in order to keep tally with the country they will next reach. That is, if sailing west, they must add a day to the regular count, and if sailing east, subtract a day. So some men, in order to keep their true date, must occasionally make a week of eight days; and if going the contrary direction, shorten a week to six days. And so of countries dating east or west of Rome.

At first blush this may seem strange to some; but its necessity will appear on a little reflection. And if I had room to write a little about the general confusion of dates until almost the last hundred years, I would show that every city and country had its own independent date, and that they differed widely everywhere. Cities not far apart differed in their dates a full year. And as to anything like a hebdomadal count of time from the early centuries down, so as to preserve any one day reckoned by sevens, it is the wildness of extravagant superstition.

So when our Seventh-Day Baptist friends tell us that we changed the Sabbath day, it might first be well for them to ascertain what they are talking about. We have the only Sabbath day there is, ever was, or can be.

R. ANNEY.

YAZOO CITY, MISS.

Third Chapter in the Experience and Observation of a New Presiding Elder.

"Now, during the summer months, you must not expect much quarterage," said a discreet young preacher to me in the early part of the year. "Our circuit never does much till the end of the year; but then we bring everything up," said a steward with some unpardonable pride, when I called attention to the shameful pittance brought up to the second Quarterly Conference for the support of the preacher in charge and the presiding elder. "Why, we only promised our preacher $300 last year, and we didn't pay him that," said another steward with an accent and tone which left me in doubt whether he was proud of his circuit or not. He was left in no doubt as to my convictions on the subject. So many members, official and non-official, labor under the "opinion" that the preacher is only a sort of a respectable beggar to whom they are expected to give something in the way of charity, and who ought to be very grateful for every nickel doled out to him, and every unsaleable bedstead, or rickety table, or cracked sugar-bowl, or warped plate donated to the parsonage. "Give me a dime for the preacher," was the oft-repeated request of a steward as the Quarterly Conference drew on. And that preacher complimented the people on their liberality.

But these are extreme cases, and go along with that of the poor woman who found fault with her husband for giving a whole dollar to the preacher last year when the children were without shoes; and with that other woman who became very much offended at the presiding elder for telling the stewards to pass around their hats and "gather up the fragments" after he had called for subscriptions—"If he hadn't just used that word 'fragments,' he'd a got a heap more!" There are many faithful stewards in this district, loyal to the church, loyal to their preachers, examples in liberality and in holy living. There are many godly men and women, who, out of their wealth or out of their poverty, freely contribute to every good cause; some not stopping at a tenth, but paying a fifth into the treasury of the Lord. The preachers are manly men and do not belong to Sydney Smith's third sex. They command respect by true manliness, and earn their salaries by faithful labors.

With few exceptions, however, our women are not interested in "woman's work for woman;" and some of the preachers are sadly failing at this point; and (let me whisper it in your ear) some wives of preachers lend no helping hand or cheering voice to this work either! Sister Edgar, at Waynesboro, and Sister Tinnin, on Union circuit, deserve special mention for their special efforts in this cause. The name of Miss Hattie Rew, on the Meridian circuit, must not be omitted in this connection. Household cares and other causes interfere in other cases and prevent work being done by others whose hearts are really in the work. Ten societies have been organized in the district this year, four of which were by Sister Tinnin, on the Union circuit.

One thing has pained me greatly—the indifference on the part, not only of members, but also of the preachers, in some instances, towards the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. On more than one occasion, and at more than one point, no elements were provided, and on others no "fair linen cloth," or even a clean cotton cloth were for use in the decent administration of the sacrament. Soda crackers, soda biscuit, light bread, or any other sort of bread, is thought to do, and the Lord's table is made contemptible (Mal. i, 7). Wine, in color suggesting almost anything else but blood, is set out in an old black bottle, and that in churches whose members are abundantly able to provide a neat, if not expensive, communion service. Some elders do not administer the sacrament at all, only assist the presiding elder at Quarterly Conferences.

Very few preachers had read the General Rules before the third Quarterly Conference. One young preacher thought it was of more importance to preach than to read the rules. He is commended to the last sentence in Romans xii, 10. Church Conferences are unknown on many circuits, except at the last of the year when the church register is to be revised—and the old sheet of paper torn up and a new one provided for the next year. And yet my predecessors on the district have done faithful work. It is by "line upon line, line upon line, precept upon precept, precept upon precept," that the work goes forward.

Much church building, repairing and furnishing has been done this year. More is being done. Much more remains to be done. Some parsonages have greatly improved. Some other parsonages need to be greatly improved. And other some, as at Waynesboro and Marion, will have to be torn down and new ones builded; and this will be done. The presiding elder's family is still in their "own hired house;" but the 6,000 Methodists in this district are about to take away the reproach that has so long rested on the district. A district parsonage will have been substantially provided for by Conference, the trustees being loyal Methodists, who love their church and are examples in liberality unto others.

Some official members, as well as others, neglect family prayers and fail to take the ADVOCATE. One local preacher did not know when the Quarterly Conference was to be held for the pastoral charge in which his name was registered. He did not read the ADVOCATE. Besides $3,500 cash for East Mississippi Female College (nearly every dollar contributed in Meridian) about $1,600 in cash and notes have been subscribed to Millsaps College, and several thousand dollars to private educational enterprises. This indicates progress, but not the full measure of duty, for this is the richest district in the Mississippi Conference. Notwithstanding short crops, the collections will be in full from all save three or four pastoral charges. There would be no deficit were willingness in proportion to ability. Some of the richest Methodists live in the circuits which are aided by mission funds. Revival reports come to me from all parts of the district. Accessions and conversions run up into the hundreds.

Fairview Male and Female College has opened finely. Rose Hill High School starts off well. The twentieth session of East Mississippi Female College bids fair to be better than any past session. The future for this part of Mississippi is bright. The present is full of glorious potencies and prophecies. Let us be true to ourselves, to our church and to our God. The reward is sure.

"Bible Readings."

MR. EDITOR: Please permit me to occupy a little space in the columns of the dear old ADVOCATE for the purpose of exposing the above book and the workings of their agents in our State. It is a book, with others, published by the Seventh-Day Baptists, or Adventists, full of mischievous and dangerous doctrines. Notwithstanding their extended work in our State, it seems that Bros. McDonald and Parker are the only ones who have done anything to counteract their efforts.

Comparatively unnoticed, they have imposed a great deal of their pernicious literature in our State upon an unsuspecting people. The above book is skillfully gotten up, containing many excellent features, and presenting to an unsuspecting mind a good book; but, upon closer investigation, it is found to be full of deadly moral poison. These agents enter a house, show their book and, by pointing out certain excellent things, create an interest, and the result is a subscription. After the book has been delivered, the subscriber finds that he has been deceived and has a book on his table which he does not want his children to read, and would rather consign to the flames. The question with us is, Shall we allow these emissaries of pernicious literature to prosecute their work in our midst without notice? I know not when they commenced their work in our State, but I found them eighteen months ago working like so many beavers in Caddo parish. Their headquarters were in Shreveport. I was told that they made an effort to organize there. The only opposition they met with was a little from me during the last two weeks of my labors in that parish. Now I find that they have thoroughly canvassed our capital city and surrounding parish into East Feliciana, and as far up as Woodville, Miss. It is the duty of every minister to look after these people, and counteract the circulation of their pernicious literature.

One of them, a few days since, said, in substance, to Bro. Willie Van Valkenburgh, that they did not expect to do much with the present generation, but if they succeeded in placing their literature upon the tables of parents, their children in after days would read it and become converts to their faith or doctrines. To gain favor they claim to be missionaries. Let us investigate their mission work. It wages an unmitigated and unholy warfare upon the Christian Sabbath. While we are teaching our children to keep that day holy, and desire for the good of our poor and overworked men and women that the nation pass a law compelling employers to allow their workmen the free enjoyment of that day, which the laws of God and nature have given them as a day of rest, they are busily circulating a literature opposing the passage of such a law. Instead of a religious observance of that day unmolested, they would have locomotives laden with freight and human lives, snorting and rushing like mad things of life through country, hamlet, towns and crowded cities; steamers plying every navigable stream; the deafening sound of hammers in work-shops and foundries; the merchant, with open doors, vending his articles of commerce; the saloon-keeper dealing out liquid damnation, by the dime's worth, to his poor and ragged customers, with starving and neglected families at home, and every den of vice unscreened, leading on their votaries to eternal ruin throughout the wide domains of our nation. If this is missionary work, I have been mistaken in its signification. If this is leading souls to Christ and pushing the claims of the gospel, I am no missionary and never will be.

While we are teaching our children to believe the blessed Lord where he says of the wicked, "These shall go their way into everlasting punishment," and that "the smoke of their torments ascendeth up forever," this book teaches that there is no eternal punishment, and that man can live out his days in sin and vice, lie down after his ill-spent life, die and enjoy an undisturbed sleep until the morning of the resurrection; then be brought to life again to be consumed like chaff and be forever annihilated. While we ever and anon impress upon our children the fact that they have been by us in their infancy consecrated to God by baptism, this book teaches them that their baptism is illegal and unscriptural. There are many other objectionable features in the book; but I have simply pointed out these in order that all the readers of the ADVOCATE will know these men and the nature of their work when they present themselves for patronage. I believe it the duty of every lover of pure religion to turn their backs to these agents and throw their influence against their unholy mission.

The Public Schools.

MR. EDITOR: While your columns are supposed to be closed against State and secular discussions, there are some matters of State and secular interest so intimately connected with the advancement of the evangelization of the world that they must, of necessity, be worthy of your space.

The needs and results of universal education are but little less than the work of the church, because, with its fruits, comes an easier work in its soil, and a more abundant harvest to its harvesters; hence, whatever advances the cause of Christ must, of needs, be admissable to your columns. The object of this article is to intercede with the people of the churches—who are keenly alive to the advancement of morals and religion—to take an active interest in their localities in behalf of universal education, for the brighter the world in its educational advancement, the greater the power to realize the lambent glory of God. If our church people will exercise their influence on the public sentiment to see that the sheriffs collect the poll taxes, and that the police juries of the parishes, and the town authorities of towns with 500 inhabitants, make a special levy of the 1½ mill tax allowed by law, then we will have made a wonderful advance in that cause which is the base of the world's advancement, to wit: education. The churches only have a few sectarian school interests, and must recognize the fact that it is not possible to do the work of educating through that channel; hence they must turn to private or public schools. Private schools are costly, and fall some time on those who are unable to bear the expense, while public schools are economic, and are paid for by all classes, which includes non-residents and alien owners, whose property is protected by a better citizenship, growing out of universal education. Private education costs $40 per annum, while the best public school system averages $10 to $12 per annum. Let our church people unite to make Louisiana the lodging-place of the highest educational sentiment in America, and we will have no more bad morals to threaten our State from one end to the other.

Independence Day in Mexico.

Independence Day passed off as quietly as roaring cannon and the steady tramp, tramp of an army would permit. I went down to the statues that President Diaz was to unveil at nine o'clock, and was leaning against one as he approached and unveiled it. He stood several minutes three or four feet from me, and I had a good, searching look in that firm, determined face. There is something in it that reminds me of the face of Gen. Grant. There is no doubt that our President is a good man, and guides the ship of state with a firm hand, steering clear of breakers, sailing ever in peaceful waters. The generals on either side of him were gorgeously attired and decorated profusely with gold lace. The President wore a simple citizen's suit of black, without a badge or ornament of any kind save the colors of Mexico bound tightly across his breast under his vest.

The city was most beautifully decorated; the triumphal arch under which our chief passed had the pictures of the President and Juarez, and by the side of Mexico's banner floated the United States flag. The decorations all over the city are beyond description. The fifteenth was President Diaz's birthday; the sixteenth, Independence Day; so that we have had three days of feasting. Mrs. Diaz had a ball in the Alemada to-day for the children. I trust to-morrow will be quiet and the children get to work. Last night they had a national feast in our church, in which the children of the two schools took a very active part. One of the teachers in our girls' school could not be present, as she was watching at the bedside of her mother, who is very ill. While some are rejoicing, others are sorrowing; that is the history of poor human beings the world over. Remember poor sin-cursed Mexico in your prayers and offerings to the Lord.

From the Work.

WINNFIELD, LA.

Please allow me space to tell the brethren what a good time we had at Winnfield after my last letter was written. Our services were as follows: Prayer at 6 o'clock A. M., 10:30 A. M., 4 P. M., and 6:30 P. M.; preaching at 11 A. M. and 7:30 P. M. The result of the meeting can not be told on paper; eternity alone will reveal it in its fullness. Partially, its results were seven believers wholly sanctified, eight laid away tobacco, nine accessions, a good many conversions; several trusting Christ by faith for sanctification, but without the witness; many family altars erected, and the whole community aroused and stirred. I sold of our publications about seventy-five dollars' worth during the two meetings at Rehoboth and Winnfield, and thus helped to spread scriptural holiness among the people.

Friday I rolled home, and Saturday came here to hold another meeting for a week; then I go to Antioch, and so on until I finish. Pray for me, that God may bless my labors here.

G. A. MANDEVILLE.

ROCHESTER, LA.

COLUMBIA CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

We have finished our round of protracted meetings on this charge. We have had some good meetings. The membership of the different churches has been considerably revived, but not altogether as much as they should be. While most of the official members of the church have family prayers and pray in public, yet, I am sorry to say, that some of them are wanting in this respect. Quite a number of the heads of families have agreed to erect family altars. Our meetings resulted in about forty accessions to the church and, I think, about as many conversions. The ADVOCATE is tolerably well circulated on this work; still some of our official members do not take a church paper of any kind. We have a good parsonage, and have it very comfortably furnished. The collections ordered by the Conference will be paid in full, I think.

M. H. MOORE.

BUNKIE, LA.

The writer had the privilege of worshiping with the "people called Methodists" in their beautiful little Gothic church at Bunkie, recently. The building of such a church here has placed Methodism upon a plane which it richly deserves, and which will have its effect upon succeeding generations. Rev. J. I. Hoffpauir, the present pastor, has just closed an interesting series of meetings, in which he was assisted by Bros. Whatley and Johnson, resulting in four accessions to the church and a very perceptible increase of religious interest throughout the entire community. Bro. Hoffpauir is doing a noble work at this place. His sermons are, in the main, plain, practical gospel truths; but at times he is eloquent in his exposition of the Scriptures. Large audiences and fine congregational singing were noticeable features of the meeting.

Books and Periodicals.

All books received will be acknowledged in this column. A fuller notice will depend upon the interests of our readers.

BOOKS.

THE WORLD LIGHTED. A STUDY OF THE APOCALYPSE. By Charles Edward Smith, author of "The Baptism in Fire." Seventy-five cents. New York: Funk & Wagnalls.

The author proposes this as the key to the Apocalypse, "the progress of truth in enlightening and saving mankind." We very much doubt that he has established his proposition.

ONE MAN'S STRUGGLE. By Rev. Geo. W. Gallagher. $1. New York: Funk & Wagnalls.

This is a story of a brave pastor who went to his martyrdom in battle against his own church on the temperance question.

SUPPLEMENTAL BIBLE STUDIES. By Rev. H. T. Bell. Thorne Publishing Company, Chicago. Price, twenty-five cents.

These studies are in two courses. The first course considers general facts about the Bible and Bible history. The second course considers the life and times of Christ, and life in the early church. It is a valuable compend for teachers, preachers, and Bible classes.

PERIODICALS.

—BIBLIA, for September, has several good articles, among which are, Explorations in Palestine, and Israelites in Egypt. S. L. Harrell, 198 Broadway, New York. Price, $1.

—CASSELL'S FAMILY MAGAZINE, for October, has three serials and two complete stories, besides miscellaneous papers of interest. Cassell Publishing Company, New York. Price, $1 50.

—DEMOREST'S FAMILY MAGAZINE, for October, is at hand, with a well-filled table of contents. The variety set before the readers will suit the variety of tastes. W. Jennings Demorest, New York. Price, $2.

—SOUTHERN CULTIVATOR, for September, is printed on tinted paper, and will prove an interesting number to every tiller of the soil, or raiser of stock, or breeder of fowls. Atlanta, Ga. Price, $1.

—OUR DAY, for September, has Religious Movements in Italy, by Prof. Stuckenberg; Our Toiling Children, by Mrs. Wischnewetzky, besides editorial notes, etc. Our Day Publishing Company, Boston. Price, $2 50.

—MUSICAL HERALD, September. This number is full of matters pertaining to music and musical people, with two fine anthems for four voices. New England Conservatory, Boston. Price, $1.

—WOMAN'S MISSIONARY ADVOCATE, September. This is the "organ" of our Woman's Board of Missions, and it is an organ that makes music worth listening to; and it is the cheapest organ to be had in the land. Woman's Board of Missions, Nashville, Tenn. Price, fifty cents.

—WIDE AWAKE, for October, has spirited articles from Harriet Prescott Spofford, Margaret Sidney, Herbert D. Ward, Adeline A. Knight, Mary E. Wilkins, and others. This monthly maintains its high position with the public. It is beautifully illustrated. D. Lothrop Company, Boston. Price, $2 40.

—A casual glance at the MAGAZINE OF ART, for October, shows that it is a good number. It opens with a photogravure of the Stone Age. Then follow Sculpture of the Year, Modern Schools of Painting and Sculpture, The Illustrating of Books, Babies in Art and Nature, Illustrated Journalism in England. Cassell Publishing Company, New York. Price, $3 50.

—"Youth and Age" is the subject of the frontispiece in THE QUIVER, for October, and it illustrates a poem by that title written by J. R. Eastwood. Men Who Have Stuck to Their Posts is the opening article, and it has for its illustration a clergyman preaching to a congregation of one. Luminous Bodies is the not altogether descriptive title of a sermon preached by the Rev. J. R. Macduff. Joyce Halliday's Mistake is a story that young girls will enjoy, and Little Sallie Lunn will interest the children of the household. In the series of Bright Examples, contributed by Prof. Blaikie, Mrs. Augustus Hare is this month's subject. There are articles designed especially for Sunday reading, and others in lighter vein; but there is never anything in the pages of The Quiver that might not be read with perfect propriety on any day in the week. Cassell Publishing Company, New York. Fifteen cents a number; $1 50 a year in advance.

LESSON II.—October 12.

THE LORD'S SUPPER.

Luke xxii, 7-20.

GOLDEN TEXT.—As often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he come.—I. Cor. xi, 26.

TIME.—Thursday, April 6, A. D. 30.

PLACE.—An upper room in Jerusalem.

7. Then came the day of unleavened bread—All leaven was most carefully and scrupulously put away on the afternoon of Thursday, Nisan 13. When the passover must be killed—Rather, be sacrificed.

8. Prepare—According to the more detailed account of Matthew and Mark, the disciples themselves first began to speak to our Lord of the passover meal, apparently on Thursday morning, at Bethany.

10. A man...bearing a pitcher of water—According to Jewish usage, on the evening of the 13th (of the month Nisan), before the stars appeared in the heaven, every father of a family was to go to the well to draw pure water, with which the unleavened bread was kneaded. It was a real rite which they performed, pronouncing the words, "This is the water of the unleavened bread."

11. Ye shall say unto the goodman of the house—The "goodman of the house" was a man of some wealth, and could not be identical with the water-carrier. The Master—Literally, the teacher; that is, the rabbi whom the man acknowledged. Guest-chamber—Kataluma, rendered "inn."

12. Upper room—During the progress of the great festivals at Jerusalem—perhaps especially during the passover, most important of the three—the religious householders of the city "kept open house," setting apart such rooms as they could spare to be occupied by family or neighborhood groups, coming to the city from remote parts of the land to attend this feast. It was, therefore, entirely in the usual order to find an upper room furnished for their reception. Furnished—With divans, cushions, etc.

13. And they made ready the passover—It may be well to bring together the facts which these few words imply. The two disciples, after seeing that the room was "furnished"—the tables arranged probably in the form of a Roman triclinium, and the benches covered with cushions—would have to purchase the lamb, the unleavened bread, and the bitter herbs, together with the wine and conserve of sweet fruits which later practice had added to the older ritual. The paschal victim would have to be slain in the courts of the temple by one of the officiating priests. The lamb so slain would then be roasted, the bitter herbs prepared, and the table set out, and then, as sunset drew near, all would be ready for the Master and his disciples, who formed, on this occasion, the household which were to partake of the paschal supper.

14. When the hour was come, he sat down, and the twelve apostles with him—"Sat down," reclined at table. Although originally (Exod. xii, 11) a celebration of the passover standing was prescribed, it afterward became usual to recline at table during it as at any other meal, apparently a symbol of the freedom which Israel had obtained by the exodus from Egypt, since only slaves were accustomed to stand during eating.

15. With desire I have desired—The Hebrew mode of saying, I have a most intense desire. The deep emotion of the Savior at coming to the hour of his last converse with his chosen ones fills his language with exquisite pathos. And these last hours were to be devoted to instituting the symbols of his own death. To eat this passover—Jesus clearly foresaw and had announced his own death in connection with that passover solemnity; but it would seem that he had not himself understood how he could himself eat that passover with his disciples, and yet, as the true Paschal Lamb, he slain at that very time. The solution of the difficulty was reached by his anticipating the time of eating the passover (doubtless by divine guidance), so that, as in Egypt the first paschal lamb was slain and eaten before the occurrence of the event that it commemorated, so our Lord both ate the passover and also instituted the eucharist in memory of his own death before the event.

16. I will not any more eat thereof—The true reading probably is, I will not eat it. The "not any more," however, is a correct gloss. Until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God—That is, until the passover has been offered by my death, and so the new kingdom established.

17. He took the cup, and gave thanks—Literally, and after receiving the cup and giving thanks. The main customs of the Jewish passover are as follows: (1) Each drinks a cup of wine—"the cup of consecration"—over which the master of the house pronounces a blessing. (2) Hands are washed, and a table carried in, on which are placed bitter herbs, cakes of unleavened bread, the Charoseth (a dish made of dates, raisins, and vinegar) the paschal lamb, and the flesh of the Chagigah or feast-offering. (3) The father dips a morsel of unleavened bread and bitter herbs, about the size of an olive, in the Charoseth, eats it with a benediction, and distributes a similar "sop" to all present. (4) A second cup of wine is poured out; and the youngest present asks the meaning of the service, to which the father replies. (5) The first part of the Hallel (Pss. cvii-cxiv) is sung. (6) Grace is said and a benediction again pronounced, after which the father distributes bitter herbs and unleavened bread dipped in the Charoseth. (7) The paschal lamb is eaten, and a third cup of wine handed around. (8) After another thanksgiving, a fourth cup—"the cup of joy"—is drunk (9) The rest of the Hallel (Psa. cxv-cxviii) is sung. The cup mentioned in this verse has been supposed to be the third cup of wine in the Jewish ceremonial; and the actual chalice of the eucharist (the "cup of blessing"—I. Cor. x, 16), is identified with the fourth cup. We also see in the last supper the benediction, and possibly the Hallel (Matt. xxvi, 30.)

18. Of the fruit of the vine—In verse 16 our Lord had said that he would not any more eat of the paschal bread, and now he says, with the same qualification, that he would not drink of the paschal wine. He celebrated this passover, which was his last. After that came the Christian passover to be kept in the "kingdom of God," the church on earth.

19. He took bread and gave thanks—The usual "grace" or blessing had been spoken at the beginning of the feast. Now, taking one of the cakes of unleaved bread, the Lord again utters a solemn formula of blessing, and gives it to them with the words, "This is my body which is given for you" (literally, which is in the act of being given): "this do in remembrance of me" (better, as a memorial of me). This is my body—Comp. "I am the door," John x, 7. "That rock was Christ," I. Cor. x, 4. "The bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Christ?" I. Cor. x, 16. In remembrance of me—The emphasis is on the latter words. The Christian passover was not to be in remembrance of the deliverance from Egypt, but of that far greater deliverance wrought by Christ. But "remembrance," also, is emphatic. The Lord's supper is a commemoration, not a sacrifice.

20. Cup...new testament—Better, New Covenant. In my blood—That is, ratified by my blood shed for you. The best comment is Heb. ix, 15, 18-22; I. Cor. xi, 25. The other Synoptists have "my blood of the New Testament." Which is shed for you—The cup which our Lord gave his disciples was that which was to be to them the pledge of a union in holiness. We can not pass, however, from these words without dwelling for a moment on their evidential aspect. For eighteen centuries—without, as far as we can trace, any interruption, even for a single week—the Christian Church, in all its manifold divisions, under every conceivable variety of form and ritual, has had its meetings to break bread and drink wine, not as a social feast (from a very early date, if not from the beginning, the limited quantity of bread and wine must have excluded that idea), but as a commemorative act. It has referred its observance to the command thus recorded, and no other explanation has ever been suggested. But this being granted, we have in our Lord's words, at the very time when he had spoken of the guilt of the traitor and his own approaching death, the proof of a divine prescience. He knew that his true work was beginning and not ending; that he was giving a commandment that would last to the end of time; that he had obtained a greater honor than Moses, and was the Mediator of a better covenant. Heb. iii, 3; viii, 6.

A Plea for the "Old Sermon."

BY REV. ALBERT J. LYMAN.

[The following article we clip from The Treasury, and commend to our preachers. We heard one of our finest preachers once say that he had been forty years making one sermon.—ED.]

One of the curiously common and curiously foolish customs of American ministers is to despise and discard the "old sermon." It is not regarded as what it is, a "first sketch," a "rough draft," a "study" of the subject—an effort which may be supplemented, improved upon, and finished later, and so preached again with freedom and power. It is rather looked upon as an old coat, which, once worn, is somehow worn out, and must not, by any means, be put on the second time until half a dozen years have gone by, and then shamefacedly, with a sort of mental apology in the devout hope that nobody may recognize it, and that the veteran deacon who always "puts down the text" may happen to stay away.

All this is unphilosophical, inartistic and absurd.

Most ministers produce, we will say, on the average, one fresh sermon a week. Fifty sermons a year is a good average for an able man. A fool, as Robert Hall intimated, will produce more. Now of that fifty, half will not be worth working over later; but of the other half, not a few will each represent one or other of several good things in a sermon, either an accurate exegesis or a natural and logical plan, or a felicitous illustration, or a noble piece of rhetoric in the peroration; or, possibly, the excellence will be more scattered, like flowers in weeds, or shells in sand, and the sermon will exhibit, here and there, between pages of padding, occasional sentences full of charm and power, the very best the man can think or say upon the particular point treated.

Now, to throw all this good and bad material aside without discrimination is to disobey the apostolic injunction to "hold fast that which is good." To suppose that this fine third of the "old sermon" has served its full office in one public utterance is childish. A painter might just as well burn his sketches. A college professor might just as well destroy his lectures. Together with this felicitous third in the sermon the other two-thirds may be poor patches of platitude and blocks of commonplace, all of which must be thrown aside. But save the good third, and make of it a beginning for a later and improved edition of the same sermon.

An old sermon is thus like a half-opened mining shaft. We utilize the former digging when we begin to dig again, and this principle applies to the modern as well as to the older and more formal theories of sermonizing.

The writer once tried an experiment. On a certain first of January he resolved to employ no scrap of formerly prepared material in pulpit or lecture-room for a year. He carried out his resolve, but it was the thinnest, leanest year in his entire ministry.

A week is not half long enough time in which to produce any sort of masterpiece—not long enough to produce a sermon which, as related to its author, is a masterpiece for him; but it is long enough to produce a part of a masterpiece. Suppose that only five out of the twenty pages are of the relatively masterpiece order; then, after two or three years, take up the sermon again, throw away the fifteen poor pages, save the five and, using them for what they are worth, produce five more good pages. Thus in three or four such "trennisis" you will have a sermon that, as we say, "is a sermon," thorough in exegesis, broad in plan, vital in grasp, sinewy in treatment, telling in illustration, felicitous in diction, pervaded by the true Christian tone—the best thing you can do in connection with the exposition of some great Christian truth which is to be, or ought to be, presented to your people again and again. That is the method of a noble and legitimate art in sermonizing. That is the way for a man in the pulpit to make the most of himself, and make the most of the truth. And all this is true, no matter how "spontaneous" your oratory may be.

In this brief paper, which is only, of course, a hint at a common source of ministerial waste, there is space for but a word further, and that shall be as to the danger that the "old sermon" so renewed will be "recognized" by the congregation. The dread of this is common, but when one begins to think about the matter it seems childish to the ultimate degree. It is a "hugaboo" to frighten boys in the pulpit, not men. For, in the first place, saints have short memories for sermons, more's the pity; and in the second place, if, by the grace of God, they do remember, is the sermon any the worse for that? Most people remember the Lord's Prayer. A few even remember the Creed. In religious education and culture familiarity with good things and good form is power. Don't repeat nonsense even if you can help it, but sense is not the less sense because it is heard twice; mere novelty of form is the desideratum—let a minister wear a new device of waistcoat every Sunday. Is a fine piece of music heard after two years less fine, less welcome, less useful for being "recognized?" It is ridiculous—this dread of having good work in the pulpit "recognized." Only let the method here advocated be not used as a cover for ministerial idleness. Let it be simply what it may be, the scientific discipline and training of the best pulpit power; and let the minister himself be evidently a true, strong, growing man—a man, not a boy—and it will follow, as philosophically it should, that the method by which the minister shall produce his best work will be the best method by which he shall hold his people, and do good to them besides. If a congregation can not stand trennial reproduction of a good "old sermon," which is also strenuously bettered and still bettered with each repetition until it royally incarnates the minister's fullest Christian manhood in dealing with some grand gospel theme—why, the only thing to do is to leave that congregation for one where idiots are not in the majority.

The great thing is for the pulpit to make the most and the best of itself in God's name. If that is done, never fear the people, and never fear for the people.

The Clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders.

The Episcopal Diocese, of New York, has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and the Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

IF ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God.—Colossians iii 1.

What is Scrofula

It is that impurity in the blood, which, accumulating in the glands of the neck, produces unsightly lumps or swellings; which causes painful running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which develops ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or many other manifestations usually ascribed to "humors." It is a more formidable enemy than consumption or cancer alone, for scrofula combines the worst possible features of both. Being the most ancient, it is the most general of all diseases or affections, for very few persons are entirely free from it.

How can it be cured? By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the cures it has accomplished, often when other medicines have failed, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. For all affections of the blood Hood's Sarsaparilla is unequalled, and some of the cures it has effected are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula in any of its various forms, be sure to give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial.

The most generally useful medicine is Ayer's Pills. As a remedy for the various diseases of the stomach, liver, and bowels, these Pills have no equal. Their sugar-coating causes them not only to be easy and pleasant to take, but preserves their medicinal integrity in all climates and for any reasonable length of time. The best family medicine, Ayer's Pills are, also, unsurpassed for the use of travelers, soldiers, sailors, campers, and pioneers. In some of the most critical cases, when all other remedies have failed, prove effective.

"In the summer of 1864 I was sent to the Annapolis hospital, suffering with chronic diarrhea. While there, I became so reduced in strength that I could not speak and was compelled to write everything I wanted to say. I was then having some 25 or 30 stools per day. The doctors ordered a medicine that I was satisfied would be of no benefit to me. I did not take it, but persuaded my nurse to get me some of Dr. Ayer's Pills. About two o'clock in the afternoon I took six of these pills, and by midnight began to feel better. In the morning the doctors came again, and after deciding that my symptoms were more favorable, gave me a different medicine, which I did not use, but took four more of the pills instead. The next day the doctors came to see me, and thought I was doing nicely, (and so did I). I then took one pill a day for a week. At the end of that time, I considered myself cured and that Ayer's Pills had saved my life. I was then weak, but had no return of the disease, and gained in strength as fast as could be expected."—F. C. Lace, Late Lieut. 56th Regt. Mass. Vol. Infantry.

"Ayer's Pills are

The Best

I have ever used for headaches, and they act like a charm in relieving any disagreeable sensation in the stomach after eating."—Mrs. M. J. Ferguson, Pullens, Va.

"I was a sufferer for years from dyspepsia and liver troubles, and found no permanent relief until I commenced taking Ayer's Pills. They have effected a complete cure."—George W. Mooney, Walla Walla, W. T.

Spiritual Inactivity.

On this subject the Scriptures and the preachers are continually ringing the alarm-bells. The Christian life is portrayed as a life of never-ceasing toil for the promotion of the Lord's cause in doing good to the bodies and souls of men. The obligation that binds the Christian to his God, fastens him with a chain equally as strong to his fellowmen. What we owe to God is to be paid by working for our fellows! When God comes to me in condescending grace and rescues me from the thraldom of sin and makes me his freeman, I see that he has operated upon me through the instrumentality of some other individual, and that is clear teaching that I ought to put myself in his hands, that he may use me as an instrument to do the same work for some one else. This is the law of progress, and the only law of progress that obtains in God's kingdom. This law operates in two directions—inward and ontward. In its inward work it affords fresh supplies of nourishment by which the spiritual nature is strengthened, and upon which it grows. In its outward work, it seeks to bring the kingdom of God to every man's door. Both these results flow from earnest and persistent individual effort. To be religious and to do religious work depend almost wholly on personal effort. This is so true that we may say, God never called anyone into his kingdom without having some special work for that one to do—a work which that one can do better than anybody else. As well might a community expect enterprise and progress in its affairs without the personal effort of its citizens, as for a church to look for advancement to be the result of the ease and sloth of its members.

The same holds true in regard to individual development in Christian experience. As we said, last week, growth in religion, development of spiritual power, enlargement in spiritual influence never comes by chance. There are no accidents in the kingdom of grace. In regard to church work nothing can be done by the church in its collective capacity beyond originating and recommending methods of work. The work is always to be done by the individuals composing the church. The advance, then, of the church in her conquests of the world for Christ is in the ratio of the zeal and energy put forth in the individual efforts of all her members. There is, then, a responsibility laid upon every member of the church in this matter of church progress through the world. This particular responsibility is frequently overlooked by the individual member, and wherever it is overlooked there is failure in church work, and the member who overlooks it must be accountable for that failure.

These are different agencies used by the church to do her work. Some of these have been used from time immemorial, and all of them have the sanction of godly men and women, and have been blessed by the Divine Spirit to the permanent good of human souls. These agencies open doors of usefulness in various directions; so various that every variety of talent and every form of energy may find appropriate spheres in which to expend themselves for human good. God has not only bestowed upon each his peculiar "gift," but he has opened to each the sphere in which he can best use that "gift." Here again individual responsibility confronts the Christian! How Christians can contemplate these things and not realize the awfulness of their responsibility, is one of the curious and sad things of church life. How a man can pretend to be a Christian, and yet remain in a state of spiritual inactivity, is one of the things that completely fails to tally with New Testament teaching. Spiritual inactivity is the worst form of sin, because it effectually hinders the growth of religion in the individual, and puts barriers across the path of church progress in the world which nothing can surmount or remove. Of all such Christians God says: "I will spue thee out of my mouth."

The apostle brings up a point which we do not sufficiently ponder. He says that God creates the Christian for the specific purpose of Christian work. The idea most prevalent is that God makes Christians in order that they may be saved in heaven. That is not Paul's teaching. His teaching is that men are saved in order that they may save others. Getting to heaven is the last thing the Christian has to do. Paul is very specific. There can be no mistake in interpreting his language unless the mistake is "made on purpose." In the second chapter of Ephesians, speaking of those who have been quickened out of the death of sin into the new life, he says: "We are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus for good works, which God hath before prepared that we should walk in them." This language is too plain to be mistaken. Here it is expressly said that the Christian character is the workmanship of God, made for good works. If the Christian, then, does not do the good works for which he was expressly made a Christian, then by his inactivity he has rendered the work of God a failure. If he does not do what God made him for, then God has no use for him. Just as a mechanic lays aside as useless a machine which will not answer the purpose for which it was constructed, so God lays aside the Christian who will not work to accomplish the purpose for which he was made a Christian. Inactive Christians can not be used for any purpose. So it comes out again that those who know their duty and will not do it, are the worst sort of sinners. Most terrible will be the words, "Inasmuch as ye did it not!"

Church Entertainments.

For some time a silence has brooded over this subject which seems to indicate stagnation. May we hope that such is the case? In some localities, however, there is a bubbling and sparkling as though the life of this destroyer of the spirituality of the church is being revived.

Observation teaches that the above is no misnomer; for when church entertainments take the front pews, spirituality takes a back seat of the church; and if not entirely driven out, it is only because the fire continues to burn on the altar of a few hearts true to the vows they have taken at God's altar to "renounce the world, the flesh and the devil."

The theory of free-will offering and systematic giving may be deemed ideal, but we believe it to be the real way God intends for his children, those who profess to love him, to advance his cause and kingdom. When will the ideal become the real? Whenever we are converted to the point of furnishing the house of God—houses, if you choose—parsonages included, just as we do our own. Who ever heard of a woman (men do not get up church entertainments) getting up an entertainment to furnish her parlor? It is too much the custom of us Methodists to use all we make for our own personal comfort and leave the church to depend on hap-hazard means for support. When the order was issued for the building of the tabernacle, Moses did not say, Let us give concerts and dances, so that the people may be amused, and at the same time we may gather together the means for building a tabernacle for the Lord; but the order was, "Take ye from among you an offering for the Lord; whosoever is of a willing heart, let him bring it, an offering of the Lord." What was the result? "And they spake unto Moses, saying: The people bring much more than enough for the service of the work, which the Lord commanded to make. And Moses gave commandment, and they caused it to be proclaimed throughout the camp, saying, Let neither man nor woman make any more work for the offering of the sanctuary. So the people were restrained from bringing." Oh, for the day to come when our people shall be educated to that point of giving! Then away with church concerts, ice-cream suppers, strawberry festivals, etc.

Church entertainments are demoralizing in their influence, morally and physically. For example: The leaders of the church affairs determine to get up a play for the benefit of the church. Now, everybody knows that the play is what we see when we go to the theatre, and theatres are things of the world, and whatever is of the world is worldly; hence the spiritual demoralization. Further, in order to make the requisite preparation for this play to be presented to the critical public, about three weeks must be devoted to rehearsals, the participants must give mind and body to the performance; half of six or seven nights and, perhaps, the whole of many days must be devoted to the study and proper execution of the different parts; hence the evil effects, both moral and physical. Sometimes children are given parts in those plays. Their tastes thus cultivated in the wrong direction. Their impressible nature is forever stamped with the idea that the church and the stage are compatible. Another argument against church entertainments, and, by no means, an unweighty one, is the fact that during the progress of preparation somebody's feelings are sure to be ruffled. Everybody can not have the most prominent part in the play and occupy the most conspicuous place on the stage. Somebody must take the mean parts and somebody must be put in the background, and, of course, it is impossible for the managers to discriminate so as to give each actor just the part and place preferred.

The preacher says we must not engage in anything in which we can not ask the blessing of the Lord upon our efforts. Let me suggest an appropriate form of prayer for the meeting of a church society engaged in getting up a church play: "O Lord, we thank thee for the promise that when we ask it shall be given unto us. We are pensioners upon thy bounty, but we are so poor we must get up something that will amuse the people and cause them to give us their money to furnish thy house. Bless our efforts in getting up this entertainment." Does not that seem like a reflection upon the bounty of the Lord?

The standard of the church is supposed to be, ought to be and is higher than that of the world. Our Woman's Missionary Advocate truly says, "We can not do missionary work after the world's methods;" and this will just as well apply to all kinds of church work. We can not afford to lower the standard of the church to that of the world. Better close the doors of the church against all kinds of entertainments rather than let worldliness creep in and lure our young people from allegiance to their church vows. Old fogyism is far preferable to worldliness in the church.

Oh, that the day may not be far distant when this stream of evil influence shall not only stagnate, but shall forever cease to flow through the church of God, and when our people shall learn that "it is more blessed to give than to receive!"

Censor Morum.

Brookhaven, Miss.

To the Friends of the Bible in New Orleans.

The attention of the friends of the Bible in New Orleans is hereby called to the work that has been done therein during the last three years by the American Bible Society, and all the congregations that have not already contributed to the support of the work are hereby most respectfully and earnestly requested to do so at an early date. As the work is both benevolent and missionary and purely unsectarian, it should receive the hearty support of all who believe in the circulation of God's Word among the people.

The following is a brief statement of the work done in our city during the time above mentioned:

Colporteurs employed	3
Families visited	22,783
Families found without Bibles	9,850
Families found without Bibles, supplied	6,110
Individuals found without Bibles, sup.	1,027
Cost of doing the work, over	$2,100 00
Amount contributed by N. O. churches	773 25

This amount was contributed as follows:

Felicity Street M. E. Church, South	$ 369 75
Rayne Memorial M. E. Church, South	90 00
Carondelet Street M. E. Church, South	45 00
Dryades Street M. E. Church, South	13 30
Moreau Street M. E. Church, South	2 00
First Presbyterian Church	213 55
Napoleon Avenue Presbyterian Church	33 65

From this statement it is seen that a very large work of Bible distribution has already been done among the people of New Orleans, and yet such work is still very greatly needed among them; but it will have, nevertheless, to be discontinued unless the churches and people of the city contribute more liberally to its support. What, then, will those among us who love the Bible and humanity do? Will they allow the good work of supplying the needy around us with the Word of Life (to say nothing of the benighted abroad) to be discontinued? or will they contribute a part of that which God has placed in their hands to its support? God grant that they may do the latter. Let every individual and congregation that favors the circulation of the Holy Scriptures among the poor and the benighted, send in a contribution as soon as possible. Money for the good work is greatly needed. Contributions can be sent either to J. W. McLaurin, 163 Camp street, New Orleans; or to William Foulke, Bible House, Astor Place, New York. Respectfully,

B. M. Palmer,
Pres. S. W. Bible Society.
J. W. McLaurin,

Nominating Stewards.

An article, in last week's Alabama Advocate, on "Preachers and Their Support," contains a paragraph about nominating stewards, which we commend to the consideration of our preachers, in view of the fact that they will be called upon at the fourth Quarterly Conference to make the nominations:

For much of their trouble in the matter of support the preachers are themselves to blame. The Discipline gives the right to "nominate" "the stewards." If they have narrow, stingy, mean stewards in a church, where there are different men, they are to blame. We stick to men as stewards, because they have long been stewards. If Bro. A. is a thoroughly efficient steward, that is a good but not conclusive reason for keeping him in the stewardship. It may be that Bro. B. would do fully as well. In such a case it is wise to exercise B.'s gifts. But when it is certain, from long trial of him, that A. is a poor steward, and it is probable, from his known character, that B. would make a good steward, it is stupid to renominate A. It is more; it is a wrong done the church. If the preacher is changed, it is a wrong done his successor, his wife and children.

"Feelings," indeed! A. has no natural or acquired right to be a steward, unless the right inheres in his fitness and fidelity. To renominate a Board known to be unfit is, for the most part, due to moral cowardice.

Where as good men can be found in a church as those who have long served, even when they have served well in the steward's office, it is, for other reasons than those indicated above, wise to change about now and then; for this, if no other reason: A Board long continued is apt to develop a feeling of proprietorship in the church. They feel as if the church belonged to them. When this feeling becomes pronounced the end of their real usefulness has come.

Character in Education.

They greatly err who suppose a boy's education is measured by the number and quality of the books he masters while in school. Indeed, his book lore is the least important part of what he acquires from the time he enters the primary department of a common school till he graduates from a college or university; for during these eventful years he is laying the foundation and building the superstructure of character; and his character is all that he will have with which to confront eternity.

In view of this fact, parents can hardly be too particular in selecting the men and women who must play an important part in moulding the character and subsequent destiny of their children. Few parents realize how greatly children are influenced by the conduct and example of their teachers. Yet this is a truth so patent that the State recognizes it, and provides that no teacher of immoral habits shall be employed in the public schools:

No one approaches nearer to the very heart and life of a child than his teacher. In many cases, even parents hold a second place in the great work of character building. There are many fathers whose business cares take them from home early and keep them away late at night. The only time they have with their children is the Sabbath, and the opportunity of the Sabbath is frequently neglected. There are many selfish mothers who relegate their children to nurses and kindergartens; afterward to schools where the teachers have work to perform which ought to have been done around the hearthstone.

Where parents are conscientious, and feel the responsibility of their children's training, a great deal still depends upon the teacher, for children unconsciously imitate the manners and adopt the morals of those to whom their mental training is committed.

The moral of which is: Let us be sure that the teachers of our children are not only virtuous, but far above suspicion; that they teach and practice a pure morality; that the loftiness of their lives impress the tender hearts with the dignity and nobility of human life. Can such teachers be found? Yes, they are working in the Christian schools and colleges of the land. They are reproducing themselves in many a sheltered nook, and in many a classic hall; and "the books" will have to be opened in heaven before the extent of their influence shall be fully known.

If you are in reach of such a school, patronize it; if not, reach one. We do not hesitate to declare that it is better to keep the children out of school than send them to ungodly teachers. The benefits received from such will be temporary at best; the injuries accruing will be irreparable. Let us elevate the standard of the teacher's character by refusing to patronize incompetent men and women, and thus secure for our children that which is infinitely better than wealth—a sound Christian education.—Alabama Advocate.

Notes.

Let every sermon be a "section of the judgment day."

Bishop Vincent says, "Sermons that are grown are worth more than sermons that are made."

Bishop Haygood says, "While we talk of big figures for our business and little figures for God's work, we are in danger of hell."

Bishop Haygood says, "Our times have developed ten times as much genius for getting money as conscience in the use of it."

One of our secular exchanges says, "There are three qualities which are found in every great preacher: spiritual-mindedness, moral earnestness, and the gift of putting things."

"To work without praying is practical atheism; to pray without working is idle presumption. To baptize all work with prayer, and to follow all prayer with work—that is an ideal life."—Dr. Pierson.

There is a society in Scotland sending out young men to Southern Morocco as missionaries, and they go forth, two by two, without scrip or purse. Thus faith is made manifest by works in the operations of those Scottish Christians.

"It is not books on the shelf, but hooks in the brain that tell. The dullest preachers I know of have splendid libraries. They own everything that has been written 'on miracles,' and yet when you hear them preach, if you did not get sound asleep, that would be a miracle."

The great need of missionaries and money to support them is seen in the fact that in China there is one missionary to 733,000 of the population; in Siam, one to 600,000; in Korea, one to 500,000; in India, one to 350,000; in Africa, one to 300,000. Surely the church has just begun missionary work!

"It is high time to teach the whole gospel—both 'the goodness and the severity of God'—not apart, but together; not the one at the expense of the other. The pulpit must thunder sin as well as breathe love; must announce judgment as well as whisper forgiveness. A terete theology drawn from an authoritative revelation, an inspired Bible, is the crying need of the hour."

Some of our pastors are afraid to announce a collection beforehand. The fear is that the congregation will not be as large as usual. It is different with the colored people. They really enjoy a collection. The pastor of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in this city recently announced that on a certain day he would raise a collection to pay off the church debt, and when the day came the church was full and many standing in the aisles, and a good collection followed.

The brother who wrote the following paragraph seems to have been at the same prayer meeting we have sometimes attended.

Now, take the average prayer meeting. How is it conducted? The leader announces a hymn, then calls on an empty man to pray; another hymn, another empty man, etc., to the third or fourth time; then reads the Scripture, calls on another empty man. There is another song, and then come stirring words from the leader, which warm everyone to life, but the hour is more than half gone, and with it opportunities to edify.

The most brilliant financiering ever done in this world has been done by itinerant preachers. They have done more with less money than any other class of men. They have reared their families better, educated their children better, than any other men their contemporaries. "Preachers poor financiers," is a phrase invented by an ignoramus, and kept up by his lineal descendants. Itinerant preachers, as to skill in making a little go a long way, are matched by one class only—their wives. These couples have worked financial miracles.—, in Alabama Advocate.

A contributor to one of our exchanges has this:

"The joy of the Lord is your strength," but the steam-power of the Holy Ghost is not put within us merely to be tooted off at the whistle in hallelujahs or to merely blow off with a yell at the safety-valve. It is given to be put onto the piston, to drive the engine, to do the mighty works, toils, labors, and to carry on the enterprises of Christ's kingdom. If we get more steam on, more soul-steam of blessing, than hard work can work off, why then shout and sing and let the safety-valve yell! But it is a silly and childish waste of power to hold up the lever on purpose to blow off for the noise!

In the new version of the New Testament, the word "soul" is always translated in this connection by the word, "life." This is a revolution in popular theology, and it will make a revolution in every Young Men's Christian Association in the country when it comes to be seen that a man's Christianity does not consist in merely saving his own soul, but in sanctifying and purifying the lives of his fellowmen. We are told in the New Testament that Christianity is leaven; "leaven" comes from the same root-word as "lever," meaning that which raises up, which elevates; a Christian young man is a man who raises up or elevates the life of those around him. It is salt: salt is that which saves from corruption. What saves the life of a place like Stirling from being utterly rotten, but the Christian elements in it?—Prof. Drummond.

Personal and Otherwise.

The following appointments of preachers in St. Louis will interest our readers: First Church, Felix R. Hill; Centenary, B. Carradine; St. John's, J. Matthews; Cook Avenue, B. M. Messick; Lafayette Park, S. H. Werlein.

It will be seen from the above that Dr. Carradine has been transferred to the St. Louis Conference. New Orleans has been contributing preachers to St. Louis for about fifteen years, and still continues it. When St. Louis wants any more, we will have them ready.

Shreveport has an electric belt railroad, and everybody is pleased. It is five and a quarter miles long.

The placidity of an editor's life is sometimes broken in upon by a ripple of gladness; the lowering cloud rifted by a ray of pure joy. It happened in this office last week, when the editor was called upon to unite two couples of young people in the holy bonds. He made four hearts two, and launched two staunch barks on the sea of married life. May our young friends always find pleasant winds to waft them over a peaceful sea! Their names are W. M. Germany to Miss Blanche Jones, and E. G. Richard to Miss Blanche Cason.

Bro. H. M. Banks, of Spring Creek circuit, Louisiana Conference, requests us to say that there will be a hoarding tent at Spring Creek Camp Meeting. Horses will be cared for at reasonable rates. The meeting begins October 10.

Dr. Evans, our presiding elder, will dedicate our new church at Colfax, La., October 12.

W. F. Moreland, of Claiborne parish, produced 1,200 gallons of molasses from ribbon cane grown on three acres of land. He sold 1,000 gallons at 40 cents per gallon. Pretty good yield for old Claiborne!

A brother complimented us, the other day, on our poetic selections for the ADVOCATE. We call special attention to the little poem, "Gradatim," by Dr. Holland, on the first page.

Miss Frances E. Willard and her secretary, Miss Gordon, left home September 15 for two weeks' work in the amendment campaign in Nebraska.

Bro. Wilson Moore, of Sugartown, La., writes to us that, all reports to the contrary, his health is very good.

The Southwestern Methodist has been sold to Palmore and Lawrence and consolidated with the St. Louis Christian Advocate. "Two Richmonds in the field" were too much even for Missouri.

Our friend, Q. A. Oats, who went to Los Angeles Conference, several years ago, has been appointed presiding elder of San Luis Obispo district. Our other friend, James Healy, has been appointed to San Luis Obispo circuit.

It was Archbishop Trench who pointed out one of the most subtle of clerical dangers—the danger of doing less than the best because there is no one to compel to strenuous effort.

Mr. Rockefeller has given $1,000,000 to the University of Chicago, $800,000 of which is to be used for "non-professional graduate instruction and fellowships," $100,000 to be used "for theological instruction in the Divinity School of said university," and $100,000 "for the construction of buildings for said Divinity School." Now, where is the Methodist millionaire who is willing to begin to do his duty?

The Interior: "The devil is the most generous of inventors. He never patents anything—makes everybody welcome to anything that is his." That is as sharp as anything we have seen in a long time.

"Prosperity is the blessing of the Old Testament; adversity is the blessing of the New, which carrieth the greater benediction and the clearer revelation of God's favor."—Bacon.

We have had during the past week several visits from Dr. C. K. Marshall, which we have enjoyed very much. The Doctor preached to large congregations, morning and night, in Carondelet Street Church, and his sermons elicited encomiums from many.

Whitworth College opened with fine prospects. President Fitzhugh has made several improvements, and has a full and able faculty, and expects the work done to challenge the verdict of a patronizing public as being the best done in any school in the Southwest.

To the Presiding Elders of the Louisiana Conference—

Giving.

The sparing giver has reason to doubt the reality of his conversion.

A close test of the heart is a rich readiness to give.

People are not educated into liberality; this is a "grace bestowed."

Where the world has been called in to help, and church members thus relieved from the necessity of making sacrifices or increasing their gifts, there is no chance to develop this grace.

Whatever tends to check the growth of liberality is an evil of tremendous proportions, since it strikes at the center of operations, and is followed by a general paralysis of spiritual activities.

The whole system of indirectly obtaining money for religious purposes is misleading and injurious and creates the habit of giving from wrong motives, blinds men to the revealed standard and stops the exercise of cardinal Christian virtues.

What idea will a man have of giving "according to his ability," or of self-denial, in order to this, or any act of service, if no requisition is made or the opportunity fails, because the unconverted are engaged to relieve him of his duty?

There can be no good in a thing that plays havoc with religious vows and contravenes the deepest principle of Christianity.

Let churches be as anxious to promote their spiritual life and lead the lost into the shepherds fold, as they are to get the world's money, and they will have the souls with more money instead of less money without the souls.

God's people can afford to be generous, but they can not afford to become identified with the worldly, even to obtain money for a good cause.

To become more occupied with money-making schemes than with the salvation of souls is to forfeit that spiritual power which alone can make a church anything but a beggar.

A resort to all manner of devices to raise money will take the place of that free and abundant flow of gifts which the removal of selfishness and avarice from the heart by the Holy Spirit unfailingly secures.

When the church tempts God by doubting the sufficiency of his revealed methods, and begins to rely upon unscriptural expedients to support his cause, she discards the example of her Founder and illustrates the history of Israel, receiving for her recompense the same spiritual blight: "And he gave them their request; but sent leanness into their soul." (Psa. cvi, 15.)

The above extracts are from a little book, called "Fun and Finance," by Rev. Newton Wray, Lenox, Miss. Price 35 cents. It is written against the practice of raising money for church purposes in any other way than by straight-out giving. We have given the extracts to show the reader the spirit of the book, and thus induce to its purchase and perusal. This subject is of greater importance than many suppose, because scriptural giving is founded on self-denial, and that is the primal principle of our holy religion. Hence the man who don't give according to the Scriptures does not possess the religion taught in those Scriptures! See the point? Get this book, read it and put it in the way of others.

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. J. C. Mimms reports from Blackland circuit: "I have held all my protracted meetings for the season, and God has wonderfully blessed our labors. We have had sixty-one conversions, and forty-six accessions to the church. The entire circuit is in good spirits and hard at work."

—Rev. C. H. Owen writes from Bolivar, Miss.: "In my article in the ADVOCATE, of September 25, the printer made me say, in the third paragraph, 'a large per cent. of cities,' instead of 'a large per cent. of critics;' and near the close of the article is the serious mistake—'There are many back-wood preachers,' for 'There are many back-ward preachers.' Please make this correction."

—Rev. H. W. Knickerbocker writes: "Am down in Livingston. Have been helping Bro. Denson in a protracted meeting. Never in my life have I seen the power of the Holy Spirit more manifest than in this meeting. There have been over 40 accessions and many reclamations. Glory to God for the honor he has conferred upon us in making us the instruments of salvation! Have drunk deeper of religion."

—Rev. G. W. Gordon, writing from Coffeeville, Miss., says: "We closed an eight days' meeting at this place, Sunday last. The Lord was with us from the beginning, and the church was wonderfully quickened. Rev. T. F. Pendergrass (one of my local preachers) closed a meeting last Sunday in the bounds of Coffeeville circuit, resulting in 16 accessions to the church. Several others will join. To God be all the glory!"

—Rev. W. W. Williams writes us from Louisville circuit, North Mississippi Conference: "Held four protracted meetings; congregations large; thirty-two joined. Spiritual state of the church greatly improved. One meeting yet to hold, at Louisville. Last night about one hundred people at the prayer meeting; one member received. Singing, good; prayers, earnest, and warm, better time coming."

—Rev. A. C. Flowers writes from Shuhuta, Miss.: "Camp meeting closed at Andrew Chapel, September 17; 15 new conversions and 40 or 50 members blessed in the meeting. Many family altars erected; old grudges settled; two infants baptized; nine received into the church. The following brethren were with us and did good work, viz: S. Gunn, R. A. Bieland, J. W. Tinnin and A. Trotter—all good and faithful men. We are still at work on Clark circuit. But little doing for the ADVOCATE. Pray for us."

—Rev. L. W. Wood writes from Bay St. Louis, Miss.: "Our fourth Quarterly Conference was held on the sixteenth. Bro. Cooper remaining with us till the eighteenth, closing on the seventeenth, by a telling sermon and the sacrament of the Lord's supper, a twelve days' revival. Thanks to Bros. Geo. H. Thompson and O. Switzer for effective aid. We observed the eve of our Conference as a day of fast and prayer, having a glorious love-feast in the afternoon, and sermon at night. Results: 12 accessions and a number of conversions. Our work is progressing. Pray for us."

—Rev. B. H. Rawls, P. C., writing from Montrose, Miss., says: "We closed a meeting in our new church last Thursday night. The church has been built this year. We had the help of Rev. C. C. Griffin and Rev. R. Burton. The church was greatly revived, and a great many said they had been blessed. There were twenty-seven accessions to the church. We had only thirteen members before the meeting; now we have forty. God is blessing our labors. I think there are many who will join the church before this Conference year is out. I have two other meetings to hold yet, and trust the Lord will bless us in them also."

—Rev. William G. Evans writes from Mindon, La.: "Our meeting closed here last night with no visible results. The pastor was assisted very ably by Rev. Charles McDonald, of Red River. The preaching was good and in the Spirit, and we feel that good may yet come from it. We have held seven protracted meetings on the work this fall. One very good one at Pine Grove, and one at Dubberly. Bro. Medlock commences a meeting at Evergreen to-morrow. He will be assisted by Bro. Wren, a local preacher. I start one on Sunday at Lane's Chapel, and will be assisted by Rev. T. L. Lallance, of Bellevue. Next week am hooked for a week above here at Sanders' station. These meetings will close the season with us. Pray for us, that our last meetings may be our best. The work moves smoothly."

—Rev. J. M. Cowan writes from Walnut Grove, Miss.: "Last Thursday night, a week ago, we closed our meeting at this place, and I must say that in many respects it was one of the grandest I was ever in. Bros. J. S. Parker, of Newton, and J. M. Morse, of Carthage, were with us preaching with power and in demonstration of the Spirit. Results: 41 accessions to the church, 17 infants baptized and many conversions. We closed our last meeting yesterday. We also had good meetings at Beech Springs and Piney Grove. We are very much indebted to the pastor of Union circuit—Bro. J. G. Cammack—for efficient help. Our third Quarterly Conference was held at Buck Springs, last Saturday, a week ago. A good many of the official members were present, and all seemed to realize to some extent the responsibility resting upon them as officers in the church of God. Our presiding elder was with us and preached pointedly, showing evidently that he was full of love and zeal for God's cause. He took a collection for Millsaps College, and secured in notes $10."

Not long ago an intelligent gentleman said concerning the contents printed in a leading religious journal: "I go through the paper examining the titles, glancing at the train of thought in each, reading some articles carefully and passing others by. When I find an article over two columns in length I usually omit it." This may not be a wise plan, but it illustrates a prevalent custom among readers. The spirit of the age demands condensation and brevity. We may fight against this tendency, and show the unreasonableness of the demand for short sermons, short newspaper articles, and short treatises on great subjects, but we can not control the conditions which produce it. The best way is to recognize the fact and take advantage of the opportunity.—New York Advocate.

We sat beside a gentleman recently in a horse-car who surprised us not a little as he turned to an old friend at his side whom he had just met, and asked, "How have you prospered in your Christian life?" This opened a conversation which was carried on during a ride of a half-hour, in which these two men talked only of their religious life and experience. There was no thought of display, nor the slightest indication that they spoke to be heard of men. "They had their conversation in heaven," and one other soul, at least, was comforted. As we left them, we thought: That is natural. People will talk anywhere about that which is really dearest to them; and yet how rarely does any person ever hear such language in the ordinary experiences of life!—Zion's Herald.

A LESSON IN CONTENTMENT.

Three little flies in the room, on a pane;
Three little flies just outside, in the rain.

Said the three little flies, as they hummed on the pane,
To the three little flies who were out in the rain:
"Don't you wish you were here on this side of the pane?
Instead of out there in the cold and the rain?
And then we must tell you there's dinner a-cooking,
Though, really and truly, we haven't been looking."

Said the three little flies outside in the rain
To the three little flies inside on the pane:
"We think it's much nicer out here in the rain
Than shut up where you are, inside on the pane;
And then there's more fun than the boys have a ball,
In dodging the raindrops as fast as they fall"

And now I am sure that my lesson is plain:
Whenever you feel there is cause to complain
Remember the three little flies on the pane
And the three little flies just outside in the rain.

"But Then."

It was a queer name for a little girl, and it was not her real name—that was Lizzie—but everybody called her "But Then."

"My real name is prettier; but then, I like the other very well," she said, nodding her brown curls merrily; and that sentence shows how she came by her name.

If Willie complained that it was a miserable, rainy day, and they couldn't play out-of-doors, Lizzie assented brightly: "Yes; but then it is a nice day to make our scrap books."

When Rob fretted because they had so far to walk to school, his little sister reminded him: "But then, it's all the way through the woods, you know, and that's ever so much nicer than walking on the hard pavements of a town."

When even patient Aunt Barbara pined a little because the rooms in the new house were so few and small compared with their old home, a rosy face was quietly lifted to hers with the suggestion: "But then, little rooms are best to cuddle all up together in; don't you think so, auntie?"

"Better call her 'Little But Then,' and have done with it," declared Rob, half-vexed, half-laughing. "No matter how bad anything is, she is always ready with her 'but then,' and some kind of consolation on the end of it."

"Just look at all the snow going to waste without our having a chance to enjoy it!" said Will one day; "and the ice, too—all because we couldn't bring our sleds with us when we moved."

"But then you might make one yourself, you knew. It wouldn't be quite so pretty, but it would be just as good," said little "But Then."

"Exactly what I mean to do, as soon as I can get money enough to buy two or three boards; but I haven't even that yet, and the winter is nearly half-gone."

"If we only had a sled to-day, sister could ride, and we could go on the river," said Reb. "It's just as near that way, and we could go faster."

"It's a pity," admitted the little girl. "But then I've thought of something—that old chair in the shed! If we turn it down, its back would be almost like runners."

"Hurrah! that's the very thing!" interrupted the boys. The old chair was dragged out, carried down to the river, and away went the merry party.

"What is that? It looks like a great bundle of clothes," said Will, pointing to a dark spot a little way out on the ice.

It was a bundle that moved and moaned as they drew near, and proved to be a little girl.

"I slipped and fell on the ice," she explained, "and I've broken my leg."

The poor girl was borne safely home, and the children lingered long enough to bring the surgeon and hear his verdict, that "young bones do not mind being broken; she will soon be out again as well as ever."

"Wasn't it good that it was only the old chair that we had to-day?" asked little "But Then," as she told the story at home. "O auntie, I had the nicest time!"

"I believe you had," answered Aunt Barbara, smiling; "for a brave, sunny spirit, that never frets over what it has not, but always makes the best of what it has, is sure to have a good time. It doesn't need to wait for it to come; it has a faculty for making it."—Selected.

"Oh, bosh! A patent medicine." Wait until you try Johnson's Anodyne Liniment, my friend.

How Tony Sold Rosebuds.

He was only a dog, but a very smart dog indeed. He belonged to the class known as shepherd dogs, which are noted for their sagacity and fidelity. His master was a little Italian boy called Beppo, who earned his living by selling flowers on the street.

Tony was very fond of Beppo, who had been his master ever since he was a puppy, and Beppo had never failed to share his crust with his good dog.

Now Tony had grown to be a large, strong dog and took as much care of Beppo as Beppo took of him. Often while standing on the corner with his basket on his arm waiting for a customer, Beppo would feel inclined to cry for very loneliness; but Tony seemed to know when the "blues" came and would lick his master's hand, as much as to say, "You've got me for a friend. Cheer up! I'm better than nobody. I'll stand by you."

But one day it happened that when the other boys who shared the dark cellar home with Beppo went out early in the morning as usual, Beppo was so ill that he could hardly lift his head from the straw on which he slept. He felt that he would be unable to sell flowers that day. What to do he did not know.

Tony did his best to comfort him, but the tears would gather in his eyes, and it was with the greatest difficulty that he at last forced himself to get up and go to the florist, who lived near by, for the usual supply of buds. Having filled his basket the boy went home again and tied it round Tony's neck. Then he looked at the dog, and said:

"Now, Tony, you are the only fellow I've got to depend on. Go and sell my flowers for me, and bring the money home safe and don't let anyone steal anything." Then he kissed the dog and pointed to the door.

Tony trotted out in the street to Beppo's usual corner, where he took his stand. Beppo's customers soon saw how matters stood and chose their flowers and put the money in a tin cup within the basket. Now and then when a rude boy would come along and try to snatch a flower from the basket Tony would growl fiercely and drive him away.

So that day went safely by and at nightfall Tony went home to his master, who was waiting anxiously to see him and gave him a hearty welcome.

Beppo untied the basket and looked in the cup, and I should not wonder if he found more money in it than he ever did before.

That is how Tony sold the rosebuds; and he did it so well that Beppo never tires of telling about it.—New York Mail.

"Why should you thank a servant?" asked a father who was fond of the Socratic method of teaching, and loved to question his little son, until the lad reached wise conclusions by his own wit. "They are paid for what they do. Do you owe them anything but money?"

"I owe them money," said the lad, somewhat perplexed in expressing what he really felt, "and I thank them because—because I owe it to myself to be polite."

He had learned the meaning of the old, grand motto, noblesse oblige.

Ellie had been sick, and mama was trying to think of something to tempt his appetite, and at last said aloud, "Oh, yes! I am sure he will like a soft-boiled egg." Ottie, who was busily playing with her dolls, looked up with an astonished, inquiring air, presently came softly over to mama's side, and inquired, "But, mama, where will you get it?"

"Get what, daughter?" asked mama.

"Why, a soft boy's leg for little brother to eat," answered the little one.

A famous college president, a clergyman, was addressing the students in the chapel at the beginning of the college year. "It is," he said in conclusion, "a matter of congratulation to all the friends of the college that this year opens with the largest freshmen class in its history." And then without any pause, he turned to the Scripture lesson for the day, the third Psalm, and began reading in a voice of thunder: "Lord, how they are increased that trouble me."

All humors of the scalp, tetter, sores, and dandruff cured, and falling hair checked; hence baldness prevented by using Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer.

Household.

Training Husbands.

Don't let this heading induce you to think that I have discovered any plan by which wives can train their husbands. It is the boys, the husbands of the future, that I am thinking of. We hear a great deal about industrial training for boys and girls; about business and professional training for both, and something about girls being taught domestic economy and all the arts and sciences which make a good housekeeper, but I have heard very little about boys being trained to be good husbands and to do their part in making happy homes.

It is a proverbial saying among all women that husbands have no adequate idea of the work which a housekeeper must do, and consequently are careless of the extra work they make for her. Would this be so in the next generation if every mother would begin with her little boys and teach them to be orderly with all their belongings, and to wait on themselves? Not only this, but teach them to help mother in every possible way; to keep the wood-box filled with wood and the water-pail with water; to save mother's tired feet by going upstairs and down-cellar for her. Let him put up the clothes-line, turn the wringer and empty the tubs for her on wash-day, as soon as he is old enough. He will be proud enough to think that he is growing strong enough to do these things better than mother. Be very sure that you show your appreciation of every helpful act, and let him see that you look to him for assistance.

Boys are not naturally selfish, and every mother who has a willing, efficient helper in her boy is herself to blame, and not only must suffer the consequences of her mistake herself, but the future wife will have them to bear also. For your own sakes, and for the future wives of your boys, spare no pains to impress upon them the magnitude of woman's work. After they have been accustomed to helping in all the ways they can about the house (and there are few things they will not be the better for having learned to do) they will not think housekeeping is "just puttering around." Teach them that the woman who keeps her house in order, and looks after the comfort of her family in every way, earns as much as the man who furnishes the money part of the partnership, and they will be ready to do as I heard a boy say not long since: "I shall give my wife half of all our income to do with as she likes," instead of asking what she had done with that last quarter he gave her, and talking as if he earned all the money and she and her children spent it, as one poor wife told me was the way her husband did. Begin to train the husbands—yes, and wives, too—in their childhood, and no one will ask, "Is marriage a failure?" in the next generation.—Farm and Fireside.

THEY NEVER STRIKE.—There is one class of laborers who never strike and seldom complain. They get up at five o'clock in the morning, and never go back to bed until ten or eleven o'clock at night. They work without ceasing the whole of that time, and receive no other emolument than food and clothing. They understand something of every branch of economy and labor, from finance to cooking. Though harrassed by a hundred responsibilities, though driven and worried, though reproached and looked down upon, they never revolt; and they can not organize for their own protection. Not even sickness releases them from their posts. No sacrifice is deemed too great for them to make and no incompetence in any branch of their work is excused. No essays or books or poems are written in tribute of their steadfastness. They die in the harness, and are supplanted as quickly as may be. These are the housekeeping wives of the laboring men.

Dr. Davis' Compound Syrup of Wild Cherry and Tar has made a name and record in the past fifty years that is enviable. Thousands of people having tried it for coughs, colds, catarrh, asthma, bronchitis and consumption know its value, and would not be without it. Why? Because it cures where other remedies fail. We recommend it for children subject to croup and whooping-cough. It will give relief and cause speedy cure. The medical profession recognize it, and physicians frequently prescribe it for lung troubles. These facts have pushed Davis' Wild Cherry and Tar to the front rank. It is the best remedy for coughs, colds, all throat and lung affections, and no family should be without it. One dollar bottles hold two and a half times as much as a 50c. bottle.

The more we fear crosses, the more reason have we to think that we need them. We ought to judge of the violence of our disease by the violence of the remedies which our Spiritual Physician prescribes for us.—Fenelon.

Engineering Triumphs.

There is a notable tendency in industrial enterprises in recent times not only to concentrate capital into large concerns, but to have structures, machinery, etc., of the largest possible kind, and to drive it with extreme rapidity. This is pre-eminently the day of "big things," using the word "big" in its ordinary sense to mean large, massive, heavy and bulky. Ocean steamships are growing larger and more powerful, although no modern ship has yet reached the size of the Great Eastern, which was deficient in power. Locomotives, cars, railway tracks, bridges are all being made heavier. Blast furnaces have increased in size, and their out-put has increased enormously, so that a product of 300 tons a day is no more uncommon than one of 300 tons a week was twenty years ago. A Bessemer steel works has recently made the record of 30,000 tons of steel in one month. Open-hearth furnaces are now erected with a capacity of 30 tons, or three times the capacity of those of ten years ago. In rolling-mills the same progress has been shown. A plate was rolled recently in Pittsburgh 30 inches wide by 85 feet long, ⅞ inch thick, weighing 7,480 pounds. In steam and electric engineering the same tendency is seen. At the Homestead Steel Works, Pittsburgh, there is about to be placed one of the largest Corliss engines in the world, with a horizontal cylinder 54 by 72 inches. The fly-wheel will weigh 200,000 pounds. The whole weight of the engine will be over 500,000 pounds, and it is expected to develop 3,500 horse-power. The Corliss engine, the "largest in the world," was built at the Soho Iron Works, Belton, England. It is of 5,000 horse-power, of the vertical type, and stands 48 feet high. It is designed to drive the Ferranti dynamos, 45 feet in diameter, mentioned below. The West End electric railway station in Boston is to have 13 engines of 1,000 horse-power each. They are to be triple compound with cylinders 21, 36 and 52 inches in diameter. The power is transmitted by two belts for each engine, each belt five feet wide. Steam will be furnished by 24 water-tube boilers, each rated at 500 horse-power. The new cable railway station of the West Side Cable Railway, in Chicago, has two Greene engines, each 36 inches by 72 inches; each engine weighs 238,000 pounds and has a capacity of 1,200 horse-power. We recently described the large Belpaire boilers and Levitt hoisting engines at the Calumet & Hecla mine, and now we have a description of the new water-tube boiler designed by T. F. Morrin, of Jersey City, which is located at the Westinghouse electric light station, on Twenty-fourth street, New York City. It contains 600 three-inch water-tubes of a peculiar bent shape, expanded at each end into an internal cylinder 48 inches in diameter. The aggregate length of the tubes is 7,200 feet, or about a mile and a half, and the boiler has 6,000 feet of heating surface, and is said to be capable of developing 1,000 horse-power. In foreign countries the same tendency towards bigness is shown, and in electrical engineering they have even surpassed us. The Ferranti dynamos used in the Deptford lighting stations near London, which were illustrated in the Engineering and Mining Journal, 1889, weigh 500 tons each, stand 45 feet high, run at 60 revolutions per minute, and can each supply about 200,000 incandescent lights. Two dynamos of 10,000 lamp capacity are being made for Berlin, each of which will require about 1,000 horse-power. There are no data now existing which will enable anyone to predict what will be the size of boilers, engines, dynamos, steamships, bridges, cars, locomotives, office buildings and other structures ten years hence. Everything in the engineering line seems to be changing at a more rapid rate than any previous period. Certainly the limit to increase the size does not yet appear. When the single engine reached its limit in ship-building, the compound engine came in. When shafts and screws seemed to have grown as large as they could be made, twin screws and shafts were used, and at the same time facilities for making still larger shafts and screws were perfected. So it is in every branch of engineering; as soon as a limit is fixed some one finds a way of overleaping it and the limit is placed further ahead.—Engineering and Mining Journal.

THOMAS—JULIE EULALIE THOMAS (nee Cropper) entered into this life February 3, 1863, and into the life eternal August 5, 1890.

Some need long years of struggle against self and sin to achieve victory and be counted worthy to wear the crown; but her sweet spirit ripened fast, and early ascended to its heavenly home.

Our dear Julie was lovely even as a little child. Gifted with beauty of person and vivacity of disposition, she added to these the far greater attraction of a loving heart. Her sensitive nature responded to every look or tone of affection as readily as the wind harp breathes forth its music to the gentlest zephyr's touch. Very early the Spirit of God must have wrought in that heart; for I, who knew her from her birth, can not name the time when her young life began to blossom and bear his gracious fruits of purity, guilelessness and a rare unselfishness—rare not only in itself, but in its fullness of expression. These heavenly fruits ripened into completeness of beauty as the years sped on and shed forth their mellowed sweetness on every life she touched. The guileless simplicity of the child adorned the woman, and at all times it might be said of her, "Blessed is the pure in heart, for she shall see God."

When about fifteen years of age she joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Woodville—the place of her birth—under the pastorate of the Rev. T. B. Holloman; and her outward life was as consistent as her inner life was pure. Though naturally very lively and fond of youthful pleasures, no entreaties of friends could induce her to join in the dance or do anything to bring reproach on her church and her Savior.

How gladly would I picture the fair young daughter and sister making home happy with her loving ministries! How fain would I pause over the tender memory of the dear young niece, so often brightening our parsonage home with her sweet presence; always so sure to come when sickness visited our household, to nurse and to cheer! But I may not linger over these pictures "hung on memory's wall."

In May, 1885, she gave her hand, "with her heart in it," to Mr. James Thomas, of Long Beach, Miss. Tenderly he cherished the priceless gift of her love. Twice during these five years of wedded bliss came the sacred joy of maternity. With womanly dignity she wore the glory of her wifehood, the sweetness of her motherhood. Now she has entered into "the joy of her Lord." Thrice crowned!

Tiny hands hold to earth him who would fain follow her in her heavenward flight. Oh! when such a voice which filled all the chambers of the soul with song is hushed forever, what a silence it makes! Who may measure the heights and depths of such a loss! Not even he who feels it. None save the God-man himself—"the man of sorrows and acquainted with grief"—the God of "all consolation." To him we strain our tear-dimmed eyes, knowing that he can and will cause the light to spring out of the darkness of this sorrow! "Now we see through a glass darkly, but then face to face."

CLARA B DRAKE.

VAUGHN—Died at his home, in Bossier parish, La., August 18, 1890, of a long and painful sickness, which he bore with much resignation and patience, Mr. CHARLES H. VAUGHN. He was born December 31, 1831, in the State of North Carolina. He was bereft of his parents when a small boy. He lived a time in Alabama, but ultimately made Louisiana his adopted State—landing in Bossier parish in 1853.

At the breaking out of the Civil War, a State's rights man, he entered the Confederate Army, made one amongst her best soldiers, continuing until the close of the war, 1865. Returning to his old neighborhood in the vicinity of Bellevue, he engaged in agriculture, in which pursuit, by his skill, industry and frugality, he was very successful, leaving his family a competency.

He was happily married, January 4, 1866, to Miss Martha Jane Sharer, of Bellevue, whom he leaves with nine children—the fruit of their marriage—to mourn their great loss. He united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at the old Red River Church, under the ministry of Rev. H. O. White. In company with his wife, a short time before his death, he visited Hot Springs, Ark., expecting some relief. It was communion day in the church while they were there, and he and his wife communed together at the same sacramental board for the last time.

He was the widow's and the orphan's friend, a most excellent citizen, sound in judgment, safe in counsel, prompt in action, and his death much lamented by all. He was a devoted husband, a considerate and kind father, and, in the contemplation of his approaching end, his only regret was the leaving of his family at a juncture when he felt they most needed him. May the Lord bless, protect and sustain them in their bereavement! LEWIS A. REED.

SELMAN—THOMAS E. SELMAN was born in Lawrence county, Miss., October 25, 1865, and died near Shaw, Bolivar county, Miss., August 10, 1890. He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at New Salem, about July 20, 1889, under Bro. O. L. Savage's administration, and lived a consistent, earnest, Christian life until God, in his wise and good providence, called him to his everlasting reward.

"Bro. Ed," as we all called him, led a quiet, Christian life from the time of his conversion to the day of his death, and was held in such high esteem by the church of which he was a member that he was appointed by the Sunday-school superintendent of New Salem Sunday-school for their secretary, and made an earnest and efficient officer. He had not been a member of the community in which he lived but a year when all the people had begun to love him, and he grew in favor and esteem with them all the time. During my meeting, which embraced the first Sunday in August, he went home, was taken with a chill, and only lived three days, when he died with hematuria. When expressing himself in regard to his hope of the future, he said, "Oh! I don't want to live here; but I am going to heaven."

May God bless his aged father and mother in their declining years, and help them to bear it patiently, and may his two brothers and all the loved ones meet him in heaven!

FORD—Died of typhoid fever, at the home of her parents in western Copiah, August 19, 1890, MOLLIE, only daughter of C. W. and Lizzie Ford. She was born June 7, 1881; was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Another link in the golden chain has been severed, another home made desolate.

How true that "death loves a shining mark!" Mollie was beautiful and bright beyond one of her years. The parents had cherished many fond hopes for her future success in life; but "death, that withers the flowers and crowns of kings," crushed every bright hope. God calls those whom he loveth; "and why should he not claim his own jewels to shine in his house, though our own be made dreary?"

Bereaved parents, Mollie has escaped the trials and sorrows of this life. Prepare to meet her in the bright beyond, and when the "mists have cleared away," perhaps you will know why the Father saw best to take her. L. L. B.
